State of Society.—The total membership was reported as 1,506.

a slight increase on last year, with 25 ministers. Remarks were made by Levi D. Barr and others, encouraging more loyalty and diligence in attending to the work of the church. Too low an estimate was placed on church membership. There was need of more clear doctrinal teaching. The popular mind being much confused as to our doctrines, it was decided, on the suggestion of the Ministry and Oversight Meeting, that a brief statement be placed in Oregon's leading newspaper, "The Oregonian," setting forth the difference between ourselves and other branches of Friends, as the Hicksites, also the Shakers, and some others, with whom we are often confused. An epistle was written to absent members, and monthly meetings urged to be diligent in looking after the welfare of such.

Temperance.—5032 pages of literature were reported distributed, and some work in the line of temperance meetings and sermons, petitioning legislatures, etc. Amanda Way and Levi Barr spoke helpful and stirring words. The latter reminded us that individuals often defeated the object they sought by the methods pursued. Prohibition is a principle, not a theory. The Prohibition Party asks people to swallow too much else in addition. If all temperance reformers would organize rightly they could do what they desire on this line. A strong desire was expressed for united action. There had been too many hard things said and thought about those who did not agree with us in methods. Some acknowledgments on this line were made. The meeting closed with very good feeling.

Foreign Missions.—Silas and Anna Moon, missionaries at Kake Island, Alaska, are at present at home in Kansas for a few weeks, after an absence in the field of five years. They expect to return in a few weeks. Lizzie Morris is also at home in California, but, owing to ill health, it is not likely she will be able to return at present. The Yearly Meeting Board are desirous of securing another man and his wife to assist in the work. This will be especially advantageous during the summer months when the Indians are moving about to their different fishing grounds, etc., when one couple can accompany them, and so continue the work throughout the year. During the past year 175 religious meetings were held at the mission; 20 Indians are genuine Christians and have joined Friends. They have trials and difficulties we know nothing of. They are anxious for a church, and have subscribed $123 toward one. There are about 100 pupils in the school, ranging in age from 4 to 25 years. An inventory of our property at the mission was read, showing much lack of the ordinary comforts in life and hardly the bare necessities. About $550 has been expended in the work during the past year, but $800 was a low estimate of what would be needed for the coming year. Levi D. Barr addressed the meeting, speaking of our Scriptural authority for the work, and duty in carrying the Gospel beyond those who have heard and not heeded. Giving one-tenth might fulfill the law, but we must do more than merely what the law requires and must give heartily. Herbert T. Cash read a paper on "The Reflex Action of Missions on the Church," pointing out how it had saved our church in England, how it had been instrumental in breaking down prejudice and sectarianism, and the value of expenditure for the good of others. When foreign missions flourish in a church, home missions do also. A subscription of $33 was taken up at the close. A memorial was formulated to the Superintendent of the Government Indian School, at Salem, regarding the practice of dancing and similar objectionable recreations in vogue there, and a deputation was appointed to present the same. It was felt to be a matter of importance, especially in connection with encouraging children to go there from our mission.

Christian Endeavor.—There were reported 12 Senior and 1 Junior Society, with 293 active, 36 associate, and 78 affiliated members; $55 was raised for missionary work, and $42 for other purposes. The report regretted the lack of organized effort. Many took part in a discussion on systematic giving, which was generally endorsed. Julia S. White read a paper, "The Quiet Hour," explaining the purpose of its pledge, the importance and privileges of the hour in the development of the inner man, what true prayer and waiting are. Would that we had more of it in our meetings! H. T. Cash spoke of Christian Endeavor as a force in Oregon Yearly Meeting, touching on their responsibilities and opportunities. It is to the Christian young man we must look for the cleansing of civic and political life, etc. How many of us knew why we are Quakers? Why Endeavorers? Our doctrine is positive, not negative. Christian Endeavor is Quakerism revived and perpetuated.

Peace and Arbitration.—Some thousand pages of literature were reported distributed, several sermons preached, and some attention given at conferences. Mabel Douglas thought we did not need to define our doctrine on this subject. The time of war was just the time to teach peace. It is a world's subject now. Someone had to be in advance in all reforms. Friends had taken this place in peace. Christian influence on warfare is shown in the better treatment of prisoners and of the helpless. We might not see much definite result from international peace conferences, but their educational value was great, and practical results might be looked for in some directions. It will take more than the Czar to bring about peace—it will take conscientious following of Christ. We shall never have universal peace until there is peace between individuals. Mordecai White rejoiced at the advance of peace principles, that the world is growing better, that we are learning to have more charity for each other in differences. Laura Minthorn spoke of the work we could do in inculcating peace principles in our children at home. Louisa Round reminded us that we had no right to do evil that good might come. Thos. Newlin thought the conference at The Hague one of the greatest events of the century. He referred also to the missions of Friends to Russia—we could not tell where their influence ended.

Good Literature.—As compared with last year, there was advance in some directions, but more earnestness is desirable. There had been 4,000 pages of literature distributed. The circulation of "The American Friend" is not what it should be. Thos. Newlin thought we placed too much confidence in heredity—not enough in environment. Material should be considered, not expense, in subscribing for papers. Beautiful pictures are cheap, and should be utilized; their effect on children is great. Power of environment was illustrated in the lives of Agassiz and Linnaeus. It is better to patronize publishing houses who owned their parentage than union houses. It is impossible to get what we want without getting some things we do not want. Children must be taught to choose rightly. M. E. Townsend thought there was never more religious matter in secular papers than now; we must not depend on this for our part. Jesse Edwards, Dr. Mills, and others, followed.

Education.—Reports of Pacific College were both gratifying and encouraging. The present faculty have been retained. Some improvements have been made in the Boarding Hall and grounds, some relics added to the museum, and the chemical department increased by additional material. Thomas Newlin's mission to England had been very satisfactory, producing more than enough to insure the carrying on of the work another year, and the indebtedness had been materially reduced. The President's report spoke of much satisfaction and good cheer in the present outlook. The corporate life of the college was never better. Students had made good progress. The moral and religious standing was encouraging. The work of C. E. Lewis as acting President in his absence had been satisfactory. The Literary Society's work was better than usual, the athletic the best that had been, the oratory praiseworthy, and the school was never better. The aim was not merely educational, but moral and Christian. There had been 23 graduated from the academic course and 9 from the college the past year. The yearly running expenses had been about $3,700, which, as in other colleges, is not fully met by tuition, the deficiency having to be made up by donations. Edwin Morrison said, "We have always been an educational church. Men have succeeded well without higher education, but civilization is constantly coming onto higher planes, and these conditions must be met. Christian institutions are not for seclusion, but to help people meet conditions and problems on Christian ground." W. K. Allen: Education is not the world, but a tool to work with." Levi D. Barr: "If the school is not all it should be, it is the fault of the church. It is the duty of all to give it prayerful, hearty support." Geo. Tolson: "The most important thing in life is life; the next, that which increases life. I know by experience that a young man in good health can graduate at Pacific College if he will, because of the help that is given to those in limited circumstances." His only regret was that he had not spent more time in physical culture. Mordecai White spoke of the need of an educated ministry, especially in our large cities, which should be our strongest places. Many others spoke of the increased interest in Pacific College.

Sabbath Schools.—There are 12 held all the year and 2 part of the year; total enrollment, 978; classes, 75; average attendance, 605; books in libraries, 85; money raised for school purposes, $299.40; for missionary work, $101.03; for county and state work, $2. Chas. Townsend spoke of the responsibility and privileges of a Sabbath School teacher. He must not belittle the office. He needs to be a teacher through the week and live up to his profession. A. M. Bray read a paper on Biblical study, touching on the inspiration of the Bible, etc. Others spoke of the importance of punctual attendance, loyalty to our own school, etc. The above figures do not include the school at Boise, Idaho, which will henceforth be a part of Oregon Yearly Meeting.

Pastoral and Church Extension.—Owing to financial embarrassment and other causes, it was well into the Christmas holidays before any revival work was accomplished. Herbert and Sadie Cash, B. F. Hinshaw, Anson Cox and B. S. Coppock had all been engaged at various places with some success. C. E. Lewis had to give up the work at Newberg on account of failing health, and Levi D. Barr had recently taken up the work there. Chas. Baldwin spoke of the loss through insufficient means to carry on the work. Not less than $500 was needed the coming year to maintain an evangelist in the field and meet expenses. There were urgent calls for help from Willamina, Eastern Oregon; Boise, Idaho, and other places. Wm. P. Samms told of the open door and call for workers in Wallowa Valley and LeGrande, in Eastern Oregon. Amanda M. Way gave an interesting account of how she found, in Boise, Idaho, a large population in one part the town who were one and one-half miles from the churches, which were all towards the centre, except a small mission church of the M. E. Church, which was only used in the afternoon, and refused to any but their own ministers. The people were anxious for regular morning service and applied in vain to the M. E. Conference, who seemed bent on compelling them to attend the central churches, which was impracticable. They came to her and desired her to preach to them and organize a church, of which she did under the auspices of Kansas Yearly Meeting, of which she was a member. They now have a monthly meeting of 23 good Christians, convinced of Friends' principles. Their Sabbath School numbered 100; they have a church built and will be out of debt by August, when they would be able to support a minister, and were very anxious for one. She was too old for the work, expecting at any time to be called hence. It is their desire to be united to Oregon Yearly Meeting, and the transfer was only awaiting its sanction. This was readily accorded, and the monthly meeting attached to Salem Quarter. C. J. Edwards spoke of the fuller support needed for pastors to enable them to look after the work better, instead of being so much occupied in making a living. Levi D. Barr said it had occurred to him that it cost him $400 to $500 per year to be a Friend minister. When he was in Kansas he had three different calls to take up the work for an M. E. Church there at $1,000 per year, but he had declined because he was convinced of Friends' principles and had therefore joined them. Disciples were to be fishers of men. Where are they? So many converts had been lost because they had not been properly cared for afterwards. A subscription of upwards of $375 was taken up for the use of the Board. The need has been felt for a fund to assist ministers in limited circumstances to obtain Friends' books. In the absence of such fund a collection will be taken up in the individual meetings once a year, and the Pastoral and Church Extension Board were encouraged to give what they could. The need of a fund was also felt to assist in building meeting-houses and for the support of aged ministers.

The morning and evening meetings for worship were times of great blessing and help to many. On Sabbath Friends occupied the M. E. pulpit, morning and evening, and the Baptist in the evening. At 10 a.m., the Friends' House was filled. Levi D. Barr spoke from the text, "Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny himself," etc. It meant so much more in those days than now, but was just as essential now. We must be loyal to God and acknowledge Him as our Creator. The old law had never been revoked, but a new law given—the law of love. We are no longer under "Thou shalt not," but under "will." We serve Him because we want to. When there is no responsibility, as in childhood and dotage, the grace of God covers all. We are accountable to God. Morality, culture, education, might elevate man, but it was only through the cross he could be perfect. We need conviction, old-fashioned religion. The Holy Spirit leads to this, then to repentance. No man is saved who has not quit his sins. We must be sanctified to be saved, no matter how it comes. Experiences differ, but salvation all comes the same way. We must also be loyal to the Bible and the church. Our work was useful in proportion to our loyalty to the church. We must recognize Christ as head, the church as the body; members must be in subjection. It is the church's duty to direct as well as to advise. Great injury is done by weak, complaining members. Too much time had to be spent bandaging members. We are to present our bodies a living sacrifice.

At 2 p.m., Amanda Way spoke from the text, "Speak to the Children of Israel, that they go forward." It is always safe to obey God. She pointed out how the natural laws were true in the spiritual world, as regards action, or inaction, growth and decay, good or impure air, water, food. If we would grow, we must study the Bible, must learn His will and obey it. We may possibly be excused from public prayer, but we cannot be from private prayer.

In the evening Thomas Newlin spoke on the "Essence and Opportunities of Quakerism." Truth has been slow in its revelations to mankind. George Fox, on Pendle Hill, saw a great people to be gathered to the Lord. So it was here. We were not born without a message. It is not so much what had early Friends to say, but what have we to tell to-day? If nothing different to others, we have no right to exist. There are other sheep not of this fold. Consecration is the test of life. The danger is not in new theology, new doctrine, but that we forget that God is near to lead. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, not about Him. It is historically wrong that Christ instituted the ordinances. He did not organize the church. The standard is the same for every Christian, whether minister or not. All are not going to believe exactly alike, but all in union. God uses people who are willing to be used, who are fit to be used. George Fox realized the importance of education and established two schools. The world is growing better; other vices have come, but with them a hopeful tone. Neighborhoods need people who will live the doctrines, more than they need preachers. Lives must be pure in everything. The speaker dwelt on God's witness of Himself in every man—Christian perfection, immediate guidance of the Holy Ghost, baptism of the Holy Spirit, priesthood of all believers, etc., briefly and clearly explaining these doctrines and pointing out that, although grievous errors had arisen out of some of them, they were still precious doctrines.

The sessions of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight were felt to be especially times of instruction and strengthening. E. R.

There is a beauty at the goal of life,
A beauty growing since the world began,
Through every age and race, through lapse and strife,
Till the great human soul complete her span.
Beneath the waves of storm that lash and burn,
The currents of blind passion that appall,
To listen and keep watch till we discern
The tide of sovereign truth that guides it all;
So to address our spirits to the height
And so attune them to the valiant whole,
That the great light be clearer for our light,
And the great soul the stronger for our soul:
To have done this is to have lived, though fame
Remember us with no familiar name.

News from the Field.

We are sorry to learn that our Friend, Esther G. Frame, is compelled to stop work for the present and go to Richmond, Indiana, for medical treatment. She hopes, however, to recover her health and strength again. Her work for many years has been almost continuous, and it has brought a great strain upon the body—in fact, she has never had a six months' rest in thirty years. During these years of evangelistic work she has seen no less than fifteen thousand persons make profession of faith in Christ as a result of the meetings held. We hope she may be able to continue her labors for many years.

WILMINGTON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

Wilmington College has just closed another prosperous and successful year. The exercises of commencement week began on First-day evening, Sixth month 18th, with the preaching of the baccalaureate sermon to the class of '99. This was a union service of all the churches in the town of Wilmington, and was addressed by Prof. N. H. Bennett, pastor of the Baptist Church, and also teacher of astronomy in the college. His discourse abounded throughout with practical and uplifting sentiments.

The annual public reunion of the alumni was held in the auditorium on the evening of the 22d. The exercises consisted of the president's address by Albert H. Terrell, of the class of '98, and an address by the orator of the occasion, Cecil E. Vance, of the class of '98. At the close of this session the members of the alumni who were present retired to the college parlor, where light refreshments were served, and happy social converse was renewed.

The regular commencement exercises occurred on the morning of the 23d. The large auditorium was comfortably filled. The class consisted of six members, of whom but three spoke. These were Albert J. Wall on the subject of "Preparation"; Clara S. Peelle on "Democracy" and Ina H. Cockerill on "Of What Value?"

The class and audience were then addressed by Prof. W. H. Seibert, associate professor of history in the Ohio State University at Columbus. His subject was "Some of the Problems of the Twentieth Century," and he won the close attention of his audience by touching upon strikes, trusts, equal suffrage, higher criticism, etc.

These exercises were varied by music, both vocal and instrumental, among which was a beautiful solo by Eva Whinery, of Hutchinson, Kansas, a student of the Cincinnati College of Music. Her parents were former residents of this community.

President James B. Unthank presented the degrees to the class as follows: to Ina Hadley Cockerill and Albert J. Wall the degree of bachelor in the arts; to Ethel Elizabeth Braun, Clara Starn Peelle, Jonathan Irving Peelle and Estella West the degree of bachelor in the sciences.

Announcement was made of the awarding of the Haverford Scholarship for the coming year to J. Irving Peelle, of the present class.

The evening was occupied by the annual lawn fete, given by the Dorian Literary Society of the College. This was in the great auditorium, and, as usual, was an occasion of much social enjoyment, and besides yielded forty dollars for the department of music.

The Farquhar Furnace Company, of this place, are now rapidly carrying forward the work of placing beneath the college building the requisite number of their latest, best improved furnaces, for heating all parts of the building with hot air, so that the coming year promises greatly increased physical comfort to the patrons of the institution.

We believe that the college is maintaining its reputation for good, honest, solid work in its different departments, and its helpful influence in this part of the territory occupied by the institutions of Friends, is more apparent as the years come and go.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

At Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held at Elba, in Sixth month, the company and ministry of Warren Gardner and Elias G.

Minard, from Scipio Quarterly, were acceptable. At the meeting of ministers and elders an instructive paper from Mary S. Knowles on the "Priesthood of Believers," was read by Thomas R. Baker. The Christian Endeavor Union, on Third-day evening, conducted by Anna S. Leggett, was addressed by David Little and others. There were encouraging reports from the societies. On Fourth-day morning the evangelistic Committee met and considered the work done, and planned for future meetings. At the missionary conference in the evening, presided over by F. Alfred Dillingham, E. G. Minard and David Little spoke to edification. At the closing meeting on Fifth-day, E. G. Minard spoke of the duties of church members, and our spiritual privileges, dwelling largely upon our responsibilities from a financial standpoint. There were many testimonies and words of praise to God and prayers offered. It is believed that a blessing attended the Quarterly Meeting, and many hearts were refreshed.

H. H. LEGGETT.

Eli G and Mary Parker of Lynnvile, Iowa, acceptably attended Monthly Meeting at Chappaqua, New York, on the 13th inst. They went the next day to Yorktown Monthly Meeting, with the expectation of remaining for a week's series of meetings at Yorktown.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Henry Herbert Goddard has recently received the degree of doctor of philosophy from Clark University, and he has been called to a position in the West Chester Normal School, West Chester, Pa. He has been for three years in Worcester, Mass., and he will be much missed by the Friends in that meeting.

George A. Barton recently attended Boston Meeting, which was for three years his home meeting, and in which he still holds his membership.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Willow Springs Monthly Meeting, Missouri.—Dillon H. Dillon came to this place to labor in the cause of Christ Sixth month 25th, 1899. He has held twelve meetings, and with great spiritual power; some were persuaded to forsake sin, believers were built up, and the church greatly strengthened. Our Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, A. L. Haworth, assisted Brother Dillon in all his meetings at this place, and also at Sterling.

Dillon H. Dillon's lectures on his travels through the Orient, given in his graphic style, are intensely interesting. His knowledge and experiences in his travels through the Bible lands is indeed a great help to him in preaching the gospel, and a consequent blessing to his hearers.

He was in attendance at Longhollow Monthly Meeting on the 1st, and of this monthly meeting on the 8th inst. He returns to his home at North Branch, Kansas, on the 10th, with prayers of many hearts for his preservation and success, and desires that he may visit us often.

C. O. GAUSE.

The Biblical Institute of Kansas Yearly Meeting will meet at North Branch, Kansas, Eighth month 1st. All parties who wish to attend should correspond with John W. Beeman, North Branch, Kansas, as to the best route to take, and at what station to leave the railroad. North Branch is not on a railroad.

NATHAN BROWN.

Merwin, Mo.—Many readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND have some personal acquaintance with our dear Brother, Eli Henderson, and know something of his work and the meeting he was largely instrumental in founding at Edgewood (P. O. Merwin), Bates County, Missouri.

Since the death of our dear brother, and the removal of quite a number of our members to other parts of the country, the future of our little meeting seems largely problematical. We have a small meeting—the first one established—consisting of about forty members, at Edgewood, a country church three miles north east of Merwin, Mo. There is another meeting at a schoolhouse nearly twenty miles east of this, near Adrian, Missouri, consisting of twenty members, two of them non-residents. Sabbath Schools are regularly carried on in both these communities. Near Vinton, about seven miles southeast, we have twelve members. In Linn County, Kansas, about twelve miles southwest, is a community with about fifteen members. If the right kind of pastoral work could be furnished these meetings, I believe, the well-begun work could be established. Visiting Friends rarely come among us, and the same is largely true of the Superintendents of general church work. Merwin is on the "Port Arthur Route," fifty-eight miles south of Kansas City. Adrian is on the Missouri-Pacific, about the same distance south of Kansas City.

If some young person would like to attend a good normal school, and at the same time assist in pastoral work as a means of defraying expenses he (or she), will please correspond at once with the undersigned. We would be very glad if persons passing through the country would give us a call.

THEODORE REYNOLDS.

EASTERN QUARTERLY MEETING.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The meetings are being well attended, regardless of summer heat. The Bible School is closed, but a large and enthusiastic Bible class continues to meet at 10 a.m.

Quite a number of members are away spending the hot season. Fourth-day evening, Dr. W. H. Taylor's class for Bible study is continued at the meeting-house with unabated interest.

The Christian Endeavor Society has had a most prosperous year, and continues its Sabbath evening meetings. Author socials have been successfully held, the writings of Field, Riley and Kipling having been considered. There is superior musical talent in the Society.

One most pleasing feature is the effort members are making to "think on their feet" and give original expression rather than simply reading selections.

The two literary societies are prosperous and doing excellent work. The "Mary Anthony Society" gave a reception to the "Shipley Society" at the house of Dr. W. H. Taylor. Later the "Shipleys" received at the house and extensive grounds of Evan Johnson. On the evening of July 10th J. L. Spicer held a "Curio Acting" and reception at the Children's Home, where he is now Acting Superintendent.

Dr. Wm. H. Taylor gave an illustrated lecture on "The Catacombs of Rome," and Mr. Spicer showed a large table of curios. There was music by the Mandolin Club, readings, recitations and refreshments.

Several members who were well advanced in years have been called to their reward.

Some new members have been received from conviction.

One bright young man said, "I have visited many churches, but in none have I felt so much at home as with Friends. It rests me to come to your services."

A gifted Presbyterian clergyman from Denver, Col., attends frequently. He is "candidating" in the city, but loves to attend Friends' Meeting, where he attended Sabbath School when a boy.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Plainfield, Indiana.—John Henry Douglas visited the meeting at this place on Sabbath, Seventh month 9th, and preached both morning and evening. He appointed meetings for Second- and Third-day evenings following. His message of love, heavily freighted with the power of the Spirit, came as a divine benediction to the church.

The pleasant memories of a wonderful revival meeting which Brother Douglas held at this place more than twenty years ago were revived in the minds of a number of persons who still reside here.

Although bearing the marks of age, he still retains that intense fervor and zeal, characteristic of his ministry from the beginning.

R. V.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

New Sharon, Iowa.—A ten days' tabernacle meeting was held at a place called Hickory Ridge, four miles south of Batavia, Iowa. This work is under the Pleasant Plain Quarterly Meeting. Although there is only one family of Friends there, they have a Sabbath School with a good attendance, and preaching every Sabbath morning and evening.

The meeting was in charge of Edwin Loft, of New Sharon, Iowa; Brother T. H. O'Rourke, of Pleasant Plain, led the singing. The Lord blessed the work by drawing souls to Him; about twenty were blessed in these services, some converted and renewed, and some sanctified, for which we give God all the glory. Brother Loft has had to get a new top for his big tent, which has cost him over one hundred dollars. Friends have helped somewhat, and the Church Extension Fund also, but there is still $30 owing before the tent is paid for. Anyone reading this report and feeling led of the Lord to send a little money to pay off the debt on the tent will greatly oblige and help Brother Loft in his work for the Lord and the church. Any sum, however small, will be thankfully received. Please send to his address, New Sharon, Iowa, or to Charles S. White, the pastor of Friends' Church, New Sharon, Iowa, who will acknowledge and send a letter of thanks to any one sending an offering for this work.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

San Jose, California.—Having recently settled here, I thought some items might be of interest. San Jose Monthly Meeting has a very comfortable house on Stockton Avenue, with a membership of about fifty. But for some time past the interest and attendance have not been what they should be. To build up or even maintain a work in a city of 25,000 inhabitants calls for earnest work and pastoral care. Already there is an increase in the attendance, and we trust the blessing of the Lord will rest on the work.

The Friends of Berkeley are prospering, as they have from the first, but the especial interest is that in a short time from now they expect to occupy their own house, a full account of which will doubtless be given soon.

The report of California Yearly Meeting will, doubtless, give the principal matters of interest. We trust and pray that other Friends may be called of the Lord to some of the open doors in this great field of Northern California.

Pray for us.

LEVI GREGORY.

FAIRMOUNT ACADEMY.

Fairmount Academy closed its fifteenth year on Sixth month 15th, 1899. Commencement Week was deemed pleasant and successful throughout.

E. O. Ellis, of Richmond, Ind., preached an earnest and instructive baccalaureate on Sabbath evening, the 11th ult.

On Monday evening the students of music gave a recital in the large auditorium of the Friends' church before a select and appreciative audience.

Class-night occurred on Tuesday evening of Commencement week. While diverting and entertaining to the friends of the class, the program was refined. It contained a number of original songs, among them a class history, which was a pleasing relief from the stereotyped form of that production.

The Alumni Banquet, held on the evening following Class-night, was of the usual form. It was a time of good-fellowship, much enjoyed by many graduates of the Academy.

On Thursday morning the Juniors decorated beautifully the handsome audience room of the church, where, in the evening, a company of about eight hundred people assembled to attend Commencement exercises. The music was furnished by the Leonita Sextette of Fairmount ladies, and by Miss Jessie Monteso Jay, a former member of the class, who is now winning a reputation as a violinist in the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Professor Elbert Russel, of Earlham, delivered an incisive and thoughtful address, after which diplomas were presented by the Principal to twenty-one members of the class—the largest within the Academy's history.

Thus closed a prosperous year for the Academy. In addition to the large gifts of money and other important events previously mentioned in the "Friend," is the plan for uniting the three great quarterly meetings of five thousand Friends—Marion, Wabash and Fairmount—in the support of this Friends' school of Northern Indiana.

Committees from these quarterly meetings met in Marion on the 10th of Seventh month to arrange plans for organization under the new management. These will be presented at the next sessions of the various meetings for adoption. If the action of the joint committee is approved by the meetings, it will probably prove one of the most important educational movements ever made among Friends of Northern Indiana.

It is with regret that the Academy relinquishes the services of Professor Ryland Ratliff, who has been at the head of the Science Department from the inauguration of the school.

O. G. Fischer, A. B., S. B., a graduate of Wheaton College, Ill., has been elected to take charge of the Science Department. Mr. Fischer is a teacher of extended experience. He has spent the past year in post-graduate study in Chicago University, and has been elected to take charge of the Science Department. He comes highly recommended. In addition to his class work, it is hoped that he will arouse increased interest in athletics.

Married.

TURNER—PENNINGTON.—At the bride's home, in Jamestown, Ohio, Sixth month 14th, William Turner of Fort Wayne, Indiana, to Mary Pennington of Jamestown, Ohio.

WHITE—CARTLAND.—Fifth-day, Seventh month 6th, Elizabeth Murray Meader Cartland to Henry Alva White, at High Point, North Carolina.

Died.

BAKER.—M. Ella Baker, at her home in Richmond, Ind., peacefully fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of the 21st of Sixth month, 1899, aged 45 years, 7 months and 23 days. She was the daughter of Jonathan E. and Emily G. Saint, her birthplace being Greensboro, Ind. She was married to Timothy F. Baker, Eighth month 23d, 1874. Three children were given them, one being taken to the heavenly home in infancy. There remain a son and daughter and a loving husband to mourn the loss of a kind and devoted wife and mother.

Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them.

CAREY.—On Fifth month 22d, 1899, Ida Carey, the only surviving daughter of John T. and Ruth T. Carey, aged 18 years, 3 months and 14 days. She was a member of Fairmount Quarterly Meeting of Friends, a student of Fairmount Academy, an earnest Christian worker in our meetings, Sabbath School and the Christian Endeavor. Her sick room was a pleasant place to be. She had given her life—as she felt called from a child—to the preaching of the gospel. But the Father took the will for the deed, and took her to Himself.

EVANS.—Abigail S. Evans, wife of Andrew F. Evans, deceased, and daughter of Samuel and Ruth Wilson, died Fifth month 11th, aged 80 years. She was born in Randolph County, North Carolina. She was beloved by all who knew her for her beauty of character. A loving and faithful mother, never tiring in providing for her children and those around here. She was a life-long member with Friends, and at the time of her death was a member of Lawrence Meeting, Kansas.

HAWKES.—At her home in Lynn, Mass., Sixth month 16th, 1899, Tacy P. Hawkes, a beloved member and elder of Salem Monthly Meeting of Friends, aged 81 years, 5 months and 14 days. With a loving, cheerful spirit she endeavored through a long and varied life to faithfully follow in the footsteps of the Master, to whom she gave her heart in childhood. Of her it may be truly said, "She hath done what she could."

HILL.—Mary T., third daughter of Elisha C. and Caroline Taylor, was born in Pelham, Ontario, Can., Fourth month 2, 1848. She was united in marriage with Thomas Hill, also of Pelham, on the 10th day of Tenth month, 1869, with whom she lived near the home of her childhood till Sixth month 15th, 1899, when she was removed by death. She was a life-long member of the Society of Friends, for several years filling the office of an elder, and taking an active interest in all departments of our church work. Her house was a welcome home for all who were engaged in advancing the cause of Christ. She leaves her husband and three grown-up sons to mourn her loss.

JOHNSON.—Catharine C. Johnson, widow of David F. Johnson, died at her home in Indianapolis, Ind., First month 31st, 1899, aged 77 years. She was the daughter of Nathaniel and Zeruah

Carpenter, and was born in North Castle, Westchester County, New York. She had a birthright membership in the Society of Friends and was a member of Indianapolis Monthly Meeting at the time of her death. She was known as one who, amid her many family cares, was ever ready to minister to the comfort and needs of the sick and sorrowing. Although afflicted for many years, through all her physical weakness she exemplified great patience and Christian resignation, leaving the assurance that she is with the redeemed of Christ's Kingdom.

LAWRENCE.—In Richmond, Ind., Sixth month 23d, 1899, Hannah Lawrence a member and minister of White Water Monthly meeting. She died triumphantly in the faith in which she had lived for many years.

MENDENHALL.—Of consumption, at her home, near Georgetown, Ill., on the morning of Seventh month 1st, 1899, Damaris L. Mendenhall, wife of John C. Mendenhall, aged 65 years, 4 months and 14 days. A loving wife, a devoted Christian and a member of Elwood Monthly Meeting of Friends, to which she was strongly attached. Her soul filled with light and glory from the open gates of Heaven, and she passed away in the triumphs of living faith, washed in the blood of the Lamb.

PEARSON.—At Pasadena, Cal., Fifth month 27th, 1899, Anna Jane Pearson, wife of Charles E. Pearson, and daughter of John B. and Keturah Rush, aged 37 years, 15 days. She was a faithful follower of Christ in home life.

PEARSON.—On Fifth month 29th, 1899, Nancy C. Pearson, wife of Seth W. Pearson, aged 73 years, 7 months and 24 days. She was for over twenty years an elder in Kansas Yearly Meeting. She was a woman of excellent judgment, and very useful to the church. She was the mother of Charles E. Pearson mentioned above, and also left three other children: Alva H., William E., and Ella Granger. Both of the above were buried at Whittier, Cal., on the same day.

REECE.—Nettie Adams Reece, wife of Miles Reece, Sixth month 29th, 1899, at Covina, California. She was born Seventh month 5th, 1852, in Williams County, Ohio. She spent most of her life in Hardin County, Iowa. During years of physical pain, all borne with Christian patience, her prayer was "Thy will be done." Her life still bears fruit on earth, and must now shed fragrance in heaven. A husband and six children are left to mourn their loss, but to enjoy the blessed heritage of a mother's Christian character influence.

RODGERS.—Mary H. Rodgers, so long and so well known among Friends as a gifted minister of the gospel, died at their home at Lake Charles, La., in Fourth month last. Their son, Logan, also a minister, had died some months before at the same place.

WILLIAMS.—Sumner G. Williams, at his home in Lewiston, Maine, Fifth month 15th, 1899, aged 53 years and 6 months. He was a minister of the gospel.

News and Events.

One of the most valuable contributions of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1900 will be the exhibit of Social Economy. This will present the characteristic features of the country, the people, their typical industrial and social institutions, and the various movements for improving the conditions that now exist. For the preparation of this exhibit the United States Commission has secured the co-operation of the Department of Labor in Washington, the Commercial Museum in Philadelphia, and the League for Social Service in New York, assigning to the latter the great task of exhibiting the movements for social betterment. To have secured such signal recognition is a certain sign of the value of the work of the League. The organization is barely a year old, but in that time, under its sponsors, Drs. Josiah Strong and W. H. Tolman, it has achieved no small measure of success in its particular mission of public enlightenment. The League for Social Service invites the co-operation of all interested friends. Its leaflet on "Social Engineering," 5 cents a copy, with full particulars of its present plan and wants, may be had by addressing the League at 287 Fourth Avenue, New York.

General Leonard Wood, the Military Governor of Santiago de Cuba, returned to that city on the 10th, and immediately began vigorous action to stamp out the yellow fever, which he found to have assumed a more alarming phase than he had anticipated. Absolute quarantine has been established in the city, and all officers of the government and employees are forbidden to enter, with the exception of those belonging to the department. All American hotels and saloons have been ordered closed, and all intoxicated Americans or loiterers in saloons are to be arrested. Military headquarters have been established at Songo, twenty miles north, a point about 1,000 feet above sea level. Nearly all the troops will be stationed there. No travelers are permitted to leave Santiago without undergoing five days' detention in camp. The drastic measures which General Wood has adopted can hardly fail to arrest the disease, and the present season is pretty certain to be the freest from the dreaded scourge in many years.

The disturbances which have occurred in several Spanish towns during the past two weeks are simply an indication of the general unrest and dissatisfaction prevailing throughout that tax-burdened country. For a half-century Spain's annual deficit has been about $15,000,000. Now, with a heavy colonial debt facing her, augmented by a long pension list and provision for rehabilitating her navy and army, heavy taxation is a necessary incident, and the onerous load thus laid upon the people is being resented. The Government has under consideration a demand for an appropriation of $32,000,000 for fortifications. The Minister of War has asked for an active army of 107,000 men, but has decided to accept 80,000. There seems little reason for such a large force, except it be to police the country and quell domestic uprisings. Commenting upon the situation, a daily paper wisely remarks: "The resignation and cheerfulness with which the tax-gatherer is greeted in the highways and byways of Spain, as he goes about levying tribute on everything of value, will be the test of Spanish patriotism in defeat." The outcome will be awaited with interest.

On the 17th the new treaty between the United States and Japan, which was made in November of 1894, went into effect. This, with other treaties between Japan and nearly all the countries of Europe and some of the South American republics, marks a new era in Japan's history, and further advances her in the role which she is rapidly assuming, of one of the world's great powers. This is the first instance in which the western nations have recognized the full sovereignty of an Oriental state. The main points of the treaties relate to the status of foreigners and regulations of foreign trade. Henceforth foreign residents will be judged by the same standards as the Japanese, and the previous laws of extra-territoriality will be annulled. The whole terrior of Japan is now open to foreigners and to trade.

A trolley strike began in Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 16th. It is uncertain just what proportions it will assume, but the strikers are in earnest and a general tie-up of surface railways may result, though at the beginning the strike did not by any means cover all the lines. The men demand a revision of the time tables, and that they be paid twenty cents an hour for over-time, on a working day of ten hours.

A FORETASTE.

God spoke to me, and on my tired heart
There fell a calm, so still, so strangely deep,
That all unrestful sounds were hushed to sleep;
And in the dear, dread silence, like a dart
Piercing me through, yet healing every smart,
His voice came sending to my soul a thrill;
But what he said I cannot tell until Life yields to Death and soul and body part.

But oh! great Father God, if it be this Only to hear Thy voice, and feel Thee nigh,
While yet on earth I find my dwelling-place,
What perfect, passionate ecstasy of bliss
Shall fill me when I rise to Thee on high,
And, purified, behold Thee face to face!

Katharine A. Brock, in "Sunday Magazine."

A TRAVELING ABSURDITY.

We found the remarkable statement in a recent copy of "The Evening Post" of this city:

"The French statistician, Dr. Livrier, says that half of all human beings die before 17, that only one person in 10,000 lives to be 100 years old, and that only person out of 1,000 lives to be 60."

As we personally know more than a thousand clergymen, and many others, more than sixty years old, we wrote to Mr. Emory McClintock, Actuary of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, for definite information. He kindly and concisely replied: "It is most absurd. The 'Life Table for England and Wales' (supplement to fifty-fifth annual report of the Registrar General, 1895) states that of 1,000,000 persons born, 737,617 live to the age of 17, and 427,497 to the age of 60. This table was based on the mortality of the ten years, 1881-90."

Instead of one in every 1,000 living to be sixty years old 427 in every 1,000 reach that age.

It is evident from the above that nearly two-thirds in England and Wales live to the age of seventeen.—"The Christian Advocate."

Rockall is, perhaps, the smallest island in the world. It is situated in the Atlantic over 300 miles west of Scotland, and is a mere rock of about 60 feet high and 225 feet round, arising from a reef of sand. The rock is basalt and granite, very magnetic. It is haunted by sea-birds, and the mackerel of the surrounding seas are very fine. Of course, it was never inhabited, and is seldom visited, owing to the difficulty of landing on it.

A SECOND DISH.

Proved Too Much For Actual Need and Showed the Value of Condensed Food.

"When the new food was first placed in my store I took a package home to try. The name 'Grape-Nuts' had attracted my attention and the statement that it was partly composed of grape-sugar excited my interest, as we all know that grape-sugar, made by certain methods of treating the cereals, is one of the most nourishing and digestible articles that can be eaten.

"I rather expected to like the food, but was not expecting that the children would take so kindly to it. Each one of the little folks, however, passed up the saucer for a second supply, and so did I.

"It is a delicious novelty and very grateful to the palate. I found, about midway in my second dish, that I had sufficient for a meal, and realized for the first time that I was eating a condensed food that supplies one's wants with a few spoonfuls, and does not require anything like the volume to furnish the amount of food required as when any of the ordinary forms of cereals are served. Grape-Nuts are an elegant food, and the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., are to be congratulated upon the discovery," said M. C. Goossen, the well-known fancy grocer of Grand Rapids.

TOLSTOI'S WIFE.

Tolstoi's wife is rich and she by no means shares his views. She has, in fact, not the slightest sympathy with them. The countless figures in the society of Moscow, and lives as ostentatiously as she pleases, quite regardless of what people may think. She has with her, too, nearly all the children—only two out of the eight, both daughters, having any sympathy with their father. Soon after his marriage Tolstoi made over to his wife the sole rights of certain books which were then, and still are, of considerable value. Since changing his views, however, Tolstoi has renounced some of his earlier works, with which he does not now fully agree; and he has, of course, refused to receive any payment for his literary work. Once his books are published, they are common property and anybody can print them. After his "conversion" he applied this rule to all his old books over which he had control. His wife, however, declined to relinquish the interest in the works which he had given her, and she still receives money from these books, though she knows it is strongly against her husband's wishes. That is the kind of treatment Tolstoi endures in his own home. It can hardly be called a home; in fact, Tolstoi is simply a guest in his wife's house. But he is devotedly attached to his wife, and he is always so perfectly contented that he forgets the little ironies of home life and the petty persecution to which he is subjected, and is quite happy. As wealth goes in Russia, the family are very well to do. They derive a large income from several estates in the possession of the Tolstoi family, and years ago Tolstoi made over all his property to his wife and children, each child receiving five hundred pounds a year, save one daughter, who refused it. She shares her father's views, which forbid the holding of unnecessary property and indulgence in luxury. Tolstoi himself has neither money nor property.—"The Christian Advocate."

Director Merriam, who has charge of the Government census for 1900, has hazarded the guess that statistics will show the total population of the United States to be about 72,500,000. With the recent increase by immigration and otherwise it is presumable that it will be even more than this. In ten years Chicago alone has doubled its population.

Every man who lives in a city and pays his share of the running expenses of that city will find interesting reading in Mayor Carter Harrison's paper on "The Misgovernment of the Modern City," which appeared in the July 15th issue of the "The Saturday Evening Post" of Philadelphia. The writer's wide experience in the practical politics of a great city and his insight into municipal affairs, gained during the years that he has been Mayor of Chicago, qualify him to give expert testimony concerning the corruption of city governments and to make some useful suggestions for the suppression of the bribe-giver, and the boddler.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

Co-operates with the CIVIL AUTHORITIES in enforcing the laws, and with the evangelic churches in extending the influences of the GOSPEL.

The Chinese Mission at No. 929 Race Street, near a heathen temple, is under the auspices of The Christian League, and seeks to promote the social, moral and spiritual welfare of these strangers in our midst, and invites the co-operation of Christian men and women in this hitherto neglected work.

The Christian League is greatly in need of financial aid, and contributions sent to the Treasurer, Mr. JOHN H. CONVERSE, 500 N. BROAD STREET (Baldwin Locomotive Works), will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.

SHORT PARAGRAPHS.

On the sixth of this month there was launched a craft which promises to mark a distinct advance in ocean exploration. This is the submarine boat, the "New Argonaut." Unlike other boats built for going below the surface, it is not cramped for room, but being exactly like a small steam yacht without a funnel, makes a commodious vessel, in which a crew can live, eat and sleep with entire comfort under water. Further, it is adapted for running on the surface as well as on the bottom of the sea. The boat will begin its career of usefulness by thoroughly exploring the wreck of the New Era, which was sunk off Asbury Park, N. J., some years since, with valuables on board. The designer of the New Argonaut is Simon Lake.

An invention that is destined to achieve wonders in many ways is that of liquid air. For several months the demonstrations of Charles Tripler with this product have astonished all beholders, and its intrinsic usefulness has not been doubted. The barrier to its application to purposes of motive power, cold storage, etc., has been its great cost of production. This factor, however, now appears in a large measure to have been overcome, and liquid air can be manufactured by the process of Oscar P. Ostergren, a Swedish engineer, for only five or six cents a gallon. A plant recently built in New York city has a capacity of 1,500 gallons a day. It is estimated that if liquid air should be used as the explosive in blasting for the Nicaragua Canal a saving of $20,000,000 might be gained.

N. H. Council, president of a college for negroes in Alabama, in a late magazine article, takes a rather pessimistic outlook for his race, so far at least as its mission in America is concerned. He thinks that the negro's final destiny is Africa. He says: "I do not think there will be any wholesale emigration; for the present the negro is doubtless here to stay—and it may be providential that he is. It requires a somewhat different negro to settle and graft a new civilization in a foreign land. But the next few generations will see a negro with views as far different from the views of the negro leaders of to-day as day is different from night. There will be no statutory laws oppressing the negro, no disposition by legal sanction to drive him from the country; and yet he will go. His own pride, the desire to redeem Africa from its darkness, and, last, the allurements of a thousand superior advantages for mental and material gain, to be attained through hardship and adversity, will be irresistible."

England's army in India, of 214,928 men, costs her about $560 per annum for each soldier.

The cost of despatching and maintaining an army of 70,000, such as is reported to be necessary for the pacification of the Philippine Islands, would be little less than $80,000,000 for one year.

Result: Above are samples of "Soft Soap" or "Soap Paste" made with PEARLINE, and with two of the leading powders which are claimed to be "Same as" or "Good as" PEARLINE.

The bottle to the right contains a solid mass of pure, white "Soap Paste" or "Soft Soap," made with PEARLINE—thick enough to stand alone.

The bottle in the middle is one of "Same as" and contents is one-quarter poor, thin, mushy soap—balance (three-quarters) discolored water.

The bottle to the left is a poorer "Same as," and contains simply discolored water, with a sediment (not soapy) at bottom. The middle and left-hand bottles are fair samples of the many powders offered in place of PEARLINE. Try the experiment yourself—directions on back of each package.

Some powders are worthless, some inefficient, others dangerous. Pearline is the standard. The Millions of Packages of PEARLINE used each year proves

Pearline Best by Test

Note. The difference in price between Pearline and the most worthless Soap Powders is nominal. A year's supply would not equal the value of one ordinary garment ruined.

If Christ possessed no other authority than that derived from his blameless and heroic life, his testimony might be set against that of all the morbid, the diseased, the blind and the evil-minded who have borne witness to the futility of virtue and effort. In knowledge of life, it is spiritual rectitude and insight which count: numbers have no significance. If we are to suffer as he did, in sublime silence; if we are to be scourged and rejected, let us keep our spiritual dignity amid the squalor of sin; if we are to die, let us die for and with our race. Such a bearing plucks the bitterness out of sorrow and makes death a revelation of immortality. And such a bearing translates life into a speech full of spiritual reality and promise.—Hamilton W. Mabie.

AFTERGLOW.

At sunset and after, as shy as a dream,
What time all the opulent splendor has faded
Into wan ashen dusk when the amber has shaded,
And twilight has fallen on hilltop and stream,
One sees stealing back a faint rosy reflection
That deepens and melts into loveliest blush,
As elusive and soft as a sweet recollection
That tugs at your heart with its tremulous hush.
Be silent and gaze at the great sky, for, lo!
God's angels are there painting day's afterglow.

SKATING ON WATER.

According to Prof. J. Joly, of Trinity College, Dublin, a skater really glides about on a narrow film of water, continually forming under the skate, and resuming the solid form when relieved of pressure. He shows that the pressure under the sharp edge of the skate, along the short portion of the steel curve which is at any moment in contact, is great enough to liquefy a thin line of ice, and this gives the skate its "bite." When the ice is very cold, the pressure is sometimes inadequate to reduce the melting-point sufficiently, and then, as all skaters know, it is difficult to make the skates bite. For very cold ice, Professor Joly recommends "hol-low-ground" skates, because the effective pressure increases with the thinness of the edge.

Captain Watkins, of the steamship Paris, has published a statement in which he manfully assumes the entire responsibility for the accident to his vessel. He has been suspended from service for two years. This probably means his retirement, as he is well advanced in years.

The Paris has been dislodged from the Manacles, where it was grounded on the 20th of Fifth month. It is to be docked at Southampton for repairs.

The gold production of the world in 1898 is estimated to have been $300,000,000, an increase of $100,000,000 over 1896. The total year's production of the United States, including Alaska, exceeded $64,000,000, an increase of $7,000,000 over the product of 1897.

Robert Bonner, the editor of the New York "Ledger," who died on the 6th inst., has been widely eulogized by the press of the country. He is said to have spent $1,000,000 in charity. He was a warm friend of Dr. John Hall, the late pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

SUMMER TOURS TO THE NORTH.

Two Tours to Canada via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the Summer of 1899 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has arranged to run two personally-conducted tours to Canada and Northern New York.

The first tour, leaving July 22d, includes Niagara Falls, Toronto, Thousand Islands, Rapids of the St. Lawrence, Quebec, Lake St. John, The Saguenay, Montreal, Au Sable Chasm, Lakes Champlain and George, Saratoga, and Highlands of the Hudson, occupying seventeen days. Round-trip rate, $125.

The second tour, leaving August 12th, covers the same territory with the exception of Lake St. John and the Saguenay, and occupies fourteen days. Round-trip rate, $100.

Each tour will be in charge of one of the company's tourist agents, assisted by an experienced lady as chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies.

The rate covers railway and boat fare for the entire round trip, parlor-car seats, meals en route, hotel entertainment, transfer charges and carriage hire.

For detailed itinerary, tickets, or any additional information, address Tourist Agent, Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 1196 Broadway, New York; 860 Fulton Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

WAGES

*Glory of warrior, glory of orator, glory of song, Paid by a voice flying by to be lost on an endless sea,
Glory of virtue, to fight, to struggle, to right
the wrong.
Nay, but she aimed not at glory—no lover of glory she :
Give her the glory of going on, and still to be.

The wages of sin is death; if the wages of virtue be dust
Would she have had heart to endure for the life of the worm and the fly?
She desires no isles of the blest, no quiet seats of the just,
To rest in a golden grove, or to bask in a summer sky :
Give her the glory of going on, and not to die.*

FREEDOM.

We are not free: Freedom doth not consist
In musing with our faces toward the Past,
While petty cares and crawling interests twist
Their spider-threads about us, which at last Grow strong as iron chains to cramp and bind
In formal narrowness heart, soul, and mind.
Freedom is recreated year by year,
In hearts wide open on the Godward side,
In souls calm-cadenced as the whirling sphere,
In minds that sway the future like a tide.
No broadest creeds can hold her, and no codes;
She chooses men for her august abodes,
Building them fair and fronting to the dawn;
Yet when we seek her, we but find a few Light footprints, leading mornward through the dew:
Before the day had risen, she was gone.
And we must follow: swiftly runs she on,
And, if our steps should slacken in despair,
Half turns her face, half smiles through golden hair,
Forever yielding, never wholly won.

—By James Russell Lowell.

NO PLACE FOR "BOOMS."

THE American people have learned by bitter experience what a "boom" is. We have had mighty cities staked out before any inhabitants arrived, and maps published to show the attractive corner lots which were to double in value every year! These "cities on paper" have fascinated many a man who had a little money saved, and who was led to believe that here at last was a short cut to wealth, but when the "boom" passed he found himself possessed of a worthless lot of building sites to pay taxes on. Now there are real values, and "boom" values. Of the former sort is the property which has a genuine intrinsic value, and which, from the very nature of things, will always be valuable, no matter how many unexpected changes may come; of the latter kind is a property which has a value only because somebody talks it up for the moment, and gives it a fictitious worth. One gets its value from an unchangeable reality, the other gets its value from a momentary idea, which is as unstable as a soap-bubble. The least pin-prick of fact may make it vanish in thin air.

Everybody knows, who stops to think about it, that "booms" are not confined to house lots and new towns. The "boom" idea gets into everything, even education and religion, and we not seldom meet persons who seem to live on these "boom" bubbles. There are false and fictitious religious values, as well as false and fictitious property values. Men blow up great bubbles of theory and then chase them about as though they were eternal truths of God, and when one of these bubbles bursts they conclude that there is nothing in religion any way. The trouble was, they were living on a "boom" religion, and not on a real one.

It is very evident from the Gospels that the disciples, or at least some of them, concluded at one time that the kingdom of heaven was to be a new temporal kingdom in which they would get "good places." John and James went so far as to request the two top places—the right hand and the left—and Judas apparently turned traitor when he found that Jesus did not really mean to set up such a kingdom at all. In fact it took all Jesus' followers a long time to understand the value of SPIRITUAL REALITIES as compared with mere human ideas and desires. Men were as ready then as now to go after "booms"—"lo here's and lo there's"—to overlook the eternal and intrinsic value of the new life, the pure heart, the loving spirit, the hunger for righteousness, the holy nature, and to find some short cut to a kingdom of heaven such as they wanted.

The never-ending struggle is to keep the real values in the foreground, to make men see that nothing short of a transformed life will do; that holiness means a holy life, that conversion means a change of nature and a change of desires; that religion can no more be juggled with than the laws of gravitation can, and that God Himself is the only "possession" which does not shift values with the wind of public opinion. But it is slow, hard work to get men down on to this solid rock of reality. We all want our bubbles, we like the excitement of the "boom," we fondly hope to get something for nothing, and the result is that our best churches have many members who are attracted by "boom," hopes and expectations, and who seek false values. They often make the church seem unreal, and they make religion seem hollow and unsubstantial, but it must be remembered that such persons do not make the church.

Christ's real followers to-day are those who have tested their values, and who have found an eternal reality which gives life its whole worth. They can say with a saint of pre-Christian ages: "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my Salvation."

SOCIETY AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

"THE Committee of Fifty," which is scientifically studying different phases of the liquor traffic, has recently issued a valuable report on the social and economic side of the liquor business, which ought to be examined by those who are interested in this important subject.

The report shows that twenty-five per cent. of those who apply for charitable relief in our cities have been reduced to pauperism through the direct use of liquor, and thirty-seven per cent. of the inmates of our almshouses have become paupers from the same cause. The report distinctly states that "in no case was intemperance given as the cause of poverty, unless it was so important that without it the poverty would probably not have existed, and unless it was obviously the principal and determining cause." It was also found that six per cent. of all male paupers in almshouses, and thirteen per cent. of the women, owed their condition to the intemperance of others.

This means, then, that the poverty of about half our American paupers can be directly traced to the use of liquor.

The report further shows that among the convicts investigated in prisons and reformatories intemperance was the cause of crime in half the cases. It may be pretty safely concluded that half the crimes, and very nearly half the cases of pauperism, have their origin in the saloon. It is a surprise to find that the negro race does not show a degree of drunkenness at all in proportion to the white race, and it seems from the investigation that intemperance is not an important cause of poverty and shiftlessness among the negroes.

The Irish, Scotch, English and Canadian part of our population suffers the most, in proportion, from intemperance, and the very largest per cent. of paupers caused by drink is found among our Irish population.

The economic part of the report shows that labor unions are prominent enemies of the saloon. Whereas, the early labor organizations were often brought into disrepute by being associated with drunkenness and with the saloon, in which they not seldom met for headquarters, now most of the labor unions discriminate against men who drink or have any connection with the saloon. In some unions a man who drinks is excluded from the benefits to which he would be entitled in case of sickness, accident or non-employment; other unions fine men who are found intoxicated.

A still more potent enemy of the saloon is to be found in the fact that so much of the world's work is now done by machinery, the running of which requires a clear head, a steady life, and sober habits. An intemperate man has no show in the competition of business and skill, and he is sure to be "weeded out" by the working of economic laws. Furthermore, 5,400 firms out of 7,000 report that they investigate the drinking habits of their employees. It must not be supposed that the regeneration or even the reform of the world can come by economic means alone, but we should realize that the necessities of labor and the laws of business economy are on our side in our religious crusade for a pure land and a pure home.

ANOTHER GREAT GIFT FOR EDUCATION.

JOHN G. LANE, of Poughkeepsie, New York, a man of singularly pure life and spirit, passed away to the other life the last week in Fifth month. The following clause of his will is an item of unusual interest to all our readers, and to Friends everywhere:

"12th—I give and bequeath to New York Yearly Meeting of Friends, Orthodox branch, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars. This principal sum to be invested and the interest or income from it only to be used for educational purposes under the care and supervision of said Religious Society of Friends. I have long desired that New York Yearly Meeting might have an institution of learning more in keeping with the age in which we live, and am aware that a lack of funds has in some measure thus far proved a barrier. But there should be a renewed earnestness of the membership in this important work; and with the hope that the Lord will bring this to pass, and that He will also raise up some especially qualified for such a field of labor, I have made this gift, trusting that others may be incited to do likewise, and that under the Lord's guidance blessings may result to future generations."

This is a great legacy, and opens the possibility to New York Yearly Meeting of making an educational institution, as our Friend says, "in keeping with the age in which we live." Only one other such generous gift has ever been made by a Friend to endow a school—that of Obediah Brown, for Friends' School at Providence, R. I.—and we trust this may prove as great a blessing as that has proved.

There is an incalculable difference between a good school and a mediocre school, and everybody knows that two things—and only two things—are necessary in the making of a school of the first class—men and money. It is impossible to create or maintain a great school without a man, who possesses great qualities, at its head. But even then there must be resources at hand. It is evident that John G. Lane had nursed in his mind the idea of a great school for future generations. He trusted, as he says, that the Lord would raise up and qualify the men for this work, and he himself now nobly provides the means for realizing the idea, hoping furthermore that his gift might stimulate and incite others to give—a hope which is sure of fulfilment. No Yearly Meeting, except New England, has ever received such a bequest for educational purposes, and this last testimony of John Lane's pure and generous devotion to lofty ideals and far-reaching ends brings upon this Yearly Meeting a great responsibility, while it opens a wonderful opportunity.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

We want again to call attention to the proposed mission in Cuba which was the subject of a valuable communication from Benjamin F. Trueblood in our issue of last week. It is an exceedingly important matter, and demands the best wisdom and judgment to be had among us. If we had our central Mission Board established it could at once take up the subject and give it the consideration it deserves. As that is not yet consummated the matter must at present be considered by the Yearly Meeting Boards. There ought to be some way of entering this white harvest field.

Bless God for the wilderness; thank God for the long nights; be thankful that you have been in the school of poverty and have undergone the searching and testing of much discipline. Take the right view of your trials. You are nearer heaven for the graves you have dug if you have accepted bereavements in the right spirit; you are wiser for the losses you have bravely borne, you are nobler for all the sacrifices you have willingly completed. Sanctified affliction is an angel that never misses the gate of heaven.—Rev. Joseph Parker.

CHURCH NOTES.

The scheme for a twentieth century church fund is spreading. The Canada Presbyterian General Assembly will endeavor to raise $1,000,000 to commemorate the opening of a new century, $600,000 of which will be set apart as the common fund; $400,000 will be used for discharging debts on church property.

The seventh annual conference of the Young Women's Christian Association opened at Northfield, Mass., on the 14th inst.

A National Convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies of France has been called to meet some time during the present month, in Paris, to plan for their work and to discuss the form of welcome for the visitors at the International Exposition which will be held in that city next year.

A conference has recently been held at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York, by the Medical and Relief Society, for securing legislation prohibitory of the practice of so-called "Christian Science."

The Lutheran Church appears to be troubled by factional articles and partisan discussions in the church papers of that denomination. At the late Synod it was resolved "that this partisanship and these indulgences of personalities should cease, and that the owners and managing editors of the church papers are hereby earnestly asked to observe this request."

A call has been issued by the leader of the Pan-Germanic, or Nationalist group in the Austrian Parliament, for the secession in a body of at least 10,000 people from what is styled "the Anti-German Catholic Church."

A Parliamentary return which has been issued regarding the Church of England, shows that in five dioceses "confessional boxes" have been instituted. Such action is considered lawless by the anti-Ritualists, and is strongly protested against.

The Methodist Church of Canada has a permanent superannuate fund for its ministers, which amounts to $231,000.

Charles M. Sheldon's appeal at the Detroit Christian Endeavor Convention, for $1,000,000 to found a Christian daily newspaper—that is, one entirely free from the objectionable features now so prevalent in the press—has started widespread discussion. In England, too, the question has been taken up, and is ably championed by "The Puritan."

The Australian Presbyterians are advocating the federation of the colonial general assemblies, and a revision and simplification of creeds. There is much earnestness in the proposed movement, and it is likely that the step will be successfully taken.

Dwight L. Moody has refused an invitation of Lord Overtoun to return to Glasgow, Scotland, and hold evangelistical services there. His work in this country requires too much of his attention to open up foreign fields of service at this time. The schools for Bible training which he has established in the United States have 1,200 students, and his presence is continually needed.

Two Christian missions have been located in Buddhistic monasteries in eastern Thibet, under the care of Dr. Le Lacheur, of the China Inland Mission.

INCENSE AND PRAYER.

BY ALEXANDER MACLAREN.

Present discussions as to dates are apt to obscure the consideration of the meanings of the Jewish ritual. Whosoever the plan of the tabernacle or temple and their furniture was drawn it had a symbolical religious significance, the perception of which is in some respects more important than the questions as to period of origin which now overshadow it. The later down it is brought, the more surely must it have been significant.

In the inner court of the tabernacle three sacred articles were appointed to be set—in the centre an altar on which incense was burned, and on either side of it a table on which twelve cakes of bread were laid and a great lampstand with seven lights. Each of these pieces of sacred furniture symbolized a side of the religious life, and, taken together, they suggest a beautiful conception of it, which is as imperative and as vital to-day as of old. What does that altar of incense say to us modern Christians?

Incense is a symbol of prayer, as the Psalmist had learned when he said, "Let my prayer be directed before Thee as incense," using the technical word for laying a sacrifice on the altar. In Isaiah's vision of Israel's true King, the "house was filled with smoke" when the Seraphim sang their "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty." So, too, the Apocalyptic Seer saw the twenty-four elders with golden censers full of incense, which are the prayers of the saints. What is the point of comparison between symbol and reality?

How was the fragrance of the incense set free to rise in wreaths of smoke? By being kindled. Whence was it kindled? By coals from the altar of sacrifice. "Which things are an allegory" and mean that cold prayer is no prayer; that when a spirit is touched with the divine fire it will exhale upwards to God, and be sweet to Him. The cold stick of incense had neither fragrance nor power to rise, and could not but ascend in fragrant wreaths when winged by fire. Too many of our prayers are but dead sticks of unkindled incense. They are heavy and cling to earth, like evening mists that hug the damp ground where they were born.

The soul that is touched to flame is volatilized and its aspirations and desires go up to God. If we know nothing of that spontaneous ascent of a soul on fire toward God, we do not know what prayer is. It is a poor notion of praying which limits it to petitions. The truest prayers do not say "Give," but lose themselves in God, and in contemplating Him are too conscious of blessed fruition to be conscious of want. There is a prayer that, if not "careful and troubled" is at least concerned and supplicatory "about many things," and there is another which, like Mary, sits "satisfied with goodness and full of the favor of the Lord," and is communion and interchange of love.

There were specific directions for insuring the perpetuity of the incense burning. Twice a day the ministering priest carried a censured to be laid on the altar. Kindled in the morning from the altar of sacrifice, it glowed and glimmered all day—perhaps much of it white ashes, but with a little spark at its heart. In the evening it was renewed, and in like manner smouldered all night. If the incense of our prayer is to glow all day, it has to be renewed and rekindled daily.

The modern talk about being independent of times and seasons, being ready to worship always, and so not needing definite periods of worship, is worse than rubbish. No man will have reverence diffused through his life, unless he has a concentrated reservoir of worship in the background of his life. We plead for no mechanical observance of times of prayer, but still there must be the frequent recurrence of special seasons of devotion if devotion is to run like a special thread through our lives.

The altar of incense stood in the centre of the inner court, and was thus in line between the altar of sacrifice in the outer court and the Mercy Seat with the Shekinah blazing above it, in the holy place. That position is plainly significant, and sets forth the truth that we must stand at the altar of sacrifice before we can lay our incense upon the altar of incense, and that we must pass by way of that altar into the secret place of the Most High, where the glory gleams lambent. Our prayers must be preceded by our faith in the one sacrifice, through whom we can lay our grain on the altar of incense, and thence by such communion can pass into the light of the glory which is love.

Once a year atonement was made on and for the altar of incense. The more truly we use the privilege of continual fellowship and prayer, the more shall we feel that our prayers need forgiveness, need atonement and the interceding High Priest. The Seer of the Apocalypse saw an angel bringing much incense and offering it with the prayers of the saints. Our incense needs to be perfumed with Christ's sacrifice, that it may be indeed "an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God."

The air from the sea of affliction is extremely beneficial to invalid Christians. Continued prosperity, like a warm atmosphere, has a tendency to unbind the sinews and soften the bones; but the cold winds of trouble make us sturdy, hardy and well-braced in every part. Unbroken success often leads to an undervaluing of mercies and forgetfulness of the giver; but the withdrawal of the sunshine leads us to look for the sun.—Spurgeon.

JOHANNESBURG AND THE WORK.

Box 2494, Johannesburg, S. A. R.,

Sixth month 7th, 1899.

Dear Friends: Very few persons who are 10,000 miles distant, have any very accurate ideas of this great city of Johannesburg. When the name is mentioned to the average American, the picture that rises is that of a place that has not yet been reached by civilization. He thinks that it is a place that is very largely made up of the huts of the native Africans, and has a vague notion that most of the inhabitants are still going about in blankets. Perhaps he is hardly to blame for this condition. Since coming here I have learned that very much of the information that can be had in the distant lands about this, the youngest city in the world, is not very reliable. It is my intention to give in this letter some of my own impressions concerning the place.

Its equal is not to be found anywhere in this wide world. It is easily first in many lines. After the first dozen or fifteen cities of the United States, it is the equal of any of the rest in almost any line that may be mentioned, and it is far ahead on many lines that many of the cities of the United States know nothing of.

From a spiritual standpoint the night is intense here. The world counts this the City of Gold. The world is seeking the City of Gold so it is not strange that the world has flocked together here. This grouping of the world makes a city of contrasts. In this it is quite unlike the True City of Gold, where all is harmony so complete that there is no contrast. Contrasts are bewildering here, so numerous are they.

Some very bright examples of the work of the grace of God are here, but there are hundreds of the most evil men for every Christian. Many of the Christians are the deadest and most formal that the world affords, while some of them are of the choicest jewels that can be found in the kingdom of heaven. Nothing exceeds the wickedness of the wicked men. There are queer natives, dressed as scantily as the climate will admit. They throng the streets, and just beside on the pavement and in the show windows, are exhibited the latest styles of the fashionable world. The extreme of heathenism without civilization is here side by side with the extreme of Godlessness with civilization. The extreme of paganism is found wherever one goes. The gods of China are here, having crossed the seas, though they be no gods; so also, the East Indian is here with his gods that hear not, neither do they see. All about us we meet the Mohammedan with his sensual religion; the Jew is here with his Christless religion, and he is not better for his surroundings than in other lands. The native is here almost innumerable, and his fetich is with him. Beside these the American and the Englishman, the Dutchman and the German, the Frenchman, and representatives of every other race except the American Indian are here, and they bring with them the countless "isms" that are stirring the civilization of the world to its very foundation. The most of the so-called civilized people are as Godless as the native. This is a Godless city. Someone has called it the "Modern Babylon," and the name is certainly an appropriate one. It is the richest city in the world; it is also the wickedest city in the world. These were the two chief characteristics of the ancient Babylon.

Yet, with all its wickedness, this is a most beautiful city. Built on the terraced southern slopes of treeless hills, it is nevertheless a mass of green foliage even at this late season; for winter is already beginning. Everywhere in the city the Blue Gum tree casts its shade, and the shade is still welcome at mid-day, when it is usually quite warm. The planting of these trees is the work of man, for this, like most of South Africa, is a treeless land.

If you would have the best view of the city you must climb the top of the barren upper terrace. From here you can look over the entire city. It is a grand view. Far away on the two lowest terraces are the hundred or more smoking chimneys of the mines where they are taking out the yellow metal day and night. On the third terrace most of the business of the city is done, and nearly all the people live. On the top where you stand the wealthiest people live. Some of the finest homes I have ever seen are here. Massive piles of brick and stone in the most approved and modern architecture are overlooking the city from here. The mansion of Barney Barnato, "Diamond King," is here.

Turning from the scene of verdant beauty before you, you will look out over the great, barren, rocky, hilly stretch of land that lies back of the city. It is a scene of red and brown, but there is no green. It is a rough desert as far as the eye can judge. As you turn back to the city you will not fail to appreciate the green—rich green—of the Eucalyptus Grove, in which cluster the homes of the thousands, nor will the piles of business buildings that are just beyond escape your notice. They would be a credit to any city of America. The city stretches for about four miles along these terraces on which it is built. From the terrace on which you stand, out to the mines beyond, the city is perhaps three miles.

Here is civilization of the highest type, judged by man, side by side with paganism of the lowest type. This civilization is essentially Godless, hence it is heathen civilization. Daily and weekly newspapers, schools and libraries, banks and public buildings, charitable institutions and churches, are side by side with deadly saloons, poisonous theatres; dancing halls and gambling dens that blight the lives of thousands. All these evils are in our own land, but they are not carried on so openly as they are here. In addition to these things there are electric lights, and street cars to travel the miles of streets of the youngest city of the world.

As one contemplates these things and remembers that America is Christian, at least in name, the thought forces itself home to the mind that American Christians owe a great debt to this place. Here are all the vices of America, and they are brought here to a very large extent by Americans. Americans have the reputation of being the wickedest people here, in much the same way that in Russia the American is designated as "the man that swears." While this is true, other nationalities are of course, good seconds. On this scene and example of wickedness the natives are looking daily and hourly. They are seeing the wickedness of a people that they think come from the land where Christ is known. They need the example of true and devoted Christianity. The black man seems to have a natural disposition for taking hold of that which is bad in the lives of those that he meets, and rejecting the good—which, by the way, is very much like his white brother. On account of this propensity of the black man, it comes about that he has adopted and copied most of the vices that his white brother has introduced. Since America furnishes so large a part of the wickedness that the black man copies, it is quite plain that the Christian portion of our country owes it to this dark place to give some examples of Christian living. She has in part discharged this debt, but it is only a beginning. If she does not fully discharge it, she will be accountable when she stands at the judgment seat of Christ.

Among the 100,000 natives that surround this city, there are hardly more than a dozen missionaries, all told. They are as a cup of water spilled in a desert land, if you compare them with the need. A few of the natives hear the Word of Life at the mouth of this handful, while the thousands are daily learning from the wicked the way of death more perfectly. The question that is constantly forcing itself home to the heart of one who thinks as Jesus thought and as Jesus still thinks, is, "But what are they among so many" (Jno. 6: 9). Oh, that the church that is claiming to be the pride of Him who said, "Let the multitudes be fed," would realize her responsibility as the bridegroom's representative in the world. He said to her when He went away, "Go ye into all the world." The command to go forbids her staying. But, alas! most of the Church have not yet heard His Word. They have stayed. They have said, "There is as much as we are able to do here at home." But there is much time for taking her ease—still "At ease in Zion," but "Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion."

Meantime, heedless of the impending and divinely-pronounced woe, the church goes on at the same leisurely gait. "Evangelization of the world can wait till we get the sinners at home all saved. It must wait. We were only just able to keep up the expense of our choir, and pay the preacher his salary last year, and it is harder to get money this year than it was last year." It is thus the poor (spiritually, of course), church excuses herself from the great duty and high privilege that is set before her in the command "Go disciple all nations." Doubtless she is much concerned about the sinners that surround her—particularly the sinners that sin by commission. But there are sinners by omission, as well as by commission. "Go preach" is a positive command. "He that loveth me not keepeth not my commandments." He that saith, "I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." It is possible to sin by keeping too much of the Lord's money at home, and thus holding back some of his servants that he has called into other fields. While the church talks about the sinners that are at home, let her beware of the sin of omission.

True, the church does sometimes deplore the formality that has crept in, but it is with a sublime indifference to the cause, which is none other than the folding of her hands in ease (Prov. 24: 30-34). "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down. Then I saw, and considered it well; I looked upon it, and received instruction. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. So shall thy poverty come as one that travelth; and thy want as an armed man."

In connection with this read the account of the "Vineyard let to husbandmen." The church has folded her hands to sleep. Paul said, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Formality of service always involves spiritual death. None but a machine is formal in its work, and a machine never has life. Had it life it would not be a machine. A church with just enough life to bewail the death that is creeping over her—this is the condition of the church at large in America at present. I have never appreciated the force of Paul's "Awake, thou that sleepest," as I have since coming to this dark place, so I send back to America the cry, "Awake, thou that sleepest."

I love the church and it is for this cause that I warn her, and do it sharply, too. May the Lord raise up those in the church at home that shall fearlessly declare that "If she would be the Bride, she must heed the voice of the Bridegroom." The Bridegroom said, "I must work the works of Him that sent me," so, also, must the Bride work the works of Him that sent her. Oh, if He comes and finds her thus sleeping, with sorrow in His heart He will turn away and leave her to her own choice. Somebody must awaken her lest He come and thus find her.

The character which you are constructing is not your own. It is the building material out of which other generations will quarry stones for the temple of life. See to it, therefore, that it be granite and not shale.—A. J. Gordon, D.D.

In a world where there is so much to ruffle the spirit's plumes, how needful that entering into the secret of God's pavilion which will alone bring it back to composure and peace! In a world where there is so much to sadden and depress, how blessed the communion with Him in whom is the one true source and fountain of all true gladness and abiding joy! In a world where so much is ever seeking to unhallow our spirits, to render them common and profane, how high the privilege of consecrating them anew in prayer to holiness and to God.—Trench.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

FRUIT-BEARING.

BY JOHN PENNINGTON.

"Herein is My Father glorified that ye bear much fruit," are the expressive words of Jesus to His disciples,—words as applicable to disciples now as then. When He called the fishermen He said, "Follow Me and I will make you fishers of men." Abiding in the vine is the condition of fruit-bearing, and keeping the commandments conditions of abiding.

The immediate result of Pentecost was the salvation of three thousand souls, followed by even greater results. Pentecostal experience and Pentecostal power are the heritage of every believer, for "the promise is to you and to your children." If we do not see Pentecostal results we may be sure the experience and power are wanting.

It is a sad day for the minister when he ceases to win souls and condones his barrenness by talking of "burned districts," "perilous times," and "results are the Lord's."

The meetings that listen to annual reports which record net losses in membership, and complacently pass them without a regret are in a backslidden condition.

The worker or the church that is not bringing souls to Christ ought at once to set apart a day for fasting and prayer, and cry to God until He fall upon them in power and remove the reproach.

The church of Jesus Christ is not called to conserve doctrines or promulgate views, but is everywhere and always to co-operate with her Lord in saving the lost.

Oh, for a divine awakening that will rouse us from the death slumber which has overtaken us, quicken us by the power of the Holy Spirit, and cause us to "bear much fruit."

Providence, R. I.

The effect of the hydraulic motor, which is now used for the purpose of removing masses of earth, well nigh passes belief. A stream of water issuing from a pipe six inches in diameter, with a fall behind it of 375 feet, will carry away a solid rock weighing a ton or more to a distance of fifty or one hundred feet. The velocity of the stream is terrific, and the column of water projected is so solid that if a crowbar or other heavy object be thrust against it the impinging object will be hurled a considerable distance. By this stream of water a man would be instantly killed if he came into contact with it, even at a distance of two hundred feet. At two hundred feet from the nozzle a six-inch stream, with three hundred and seventy-five feet fall, projected momentarily against the trunk of a tree, will, in a second, denude it of the heaviest bark as cleanly as if it had been cut with an axe. Whenever such a stream is turned against a bank, it cuts and burrows it in every direction, hollowing out great caves and causing tons of earth to melt and fall and be washed away in the sluices.

A LETTER FROM INDIA.

Chandur, Berar, India, Sixth month 6th, 1899.

Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Dear Friend:—Believing that if our Friends in the home land knew a little more of the everyday difficulties of the work in foreign lands they would be able to pray more intelligently and sympathetically for it and for those engaged in it, I thought this little sketch of a few of the language difficulties might not be uninteresting. These difficulties are not, of course, peculiar to the language of India, but are almost the same in every heathen language.

Many people seem to have the idea that all difficulty with the language can be disposed of by sufficient study of its grammar, etc., but often it is when the study is over and they go out to face the people that the real difficulty for many missionaries begins.

Some of the first words any preacher of the Gospel must use will be the seemingly simple ones—"God," "Heaven," "Hell," "sin," "Saviour," etc. Now, let us see what conception the use of the ordinary words in the language will convey to the minds of our hearers. Taking the word for God in the Marathi language we have—

1st. The idea of a being who is alike the author of good and evil, the evil being as much a part of himself and of his will as the good.

2d. A being who will accept the lightest sacrifice or labor done in His name as an equivalent for the most detestable crimes.

3d. A being a part of whose spirit is in every created thing, and therefore can be worshiped in trees, stones, men, animals, and even reptiles.

4th. A being who accepts wholesale immorality as part of his worship.

The following incident will show how constantly we have to be on our guard lest, without anything intentional on our part, we give to or allow a wrong construction to be placed upon our words. Some years ago the writer was speaking to a large crowd in a public bazaar, and mentioning God's name inadvertently raised his eyes and looked up. Immediately one of the crowd standing near said: "Yes, sahib, we worship the same God you do." Suspecting something wrong, I said: "What God?" The answer came at once: "The sun; he is the author of light, heat, life, and every blessing." Evidently this man at least, if not many in that crowd, had been trying to apply everything I said about God to the sun, who was the only "god in heaven" which they knew about.

There are two words for heaven in the Marathi language. One simply means the upper air or sky, and the other and more common the sensual, lustful heaven of the god Indra.

How shall we convey to our hearers the thoughts of our own hearts concerning that home of happiness, purity and love, where nothing that defileth can ever enter.

For hell we have two words combined. The meaning of the first one, as given in the dictionary, is "a mass of filth," and that of the other "a pool or hole in the ground." What weak words are these to convey the idea of that place where "their worm dieth not and their fire is not quenched."

Only last year, on leaving a village where I had been preaching, as we passed through the burning ground where a corpse had just been set fire to, one of the men said: "He is suffering hell now." I had just told them in the village that it was a place of fire prepared for the wicked after death.

In a village near here, after preaching in the bazaar for over an hour, telling mostly the story of our Lord's birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension, one man said loudly when I had finished: "He has just been telling the story of Tukeram, one of our holy men, for he is the only man who went up to heaven while still in the body."

I was tired and weary, my throat was sore with continuous speaking, but it would never do to let that pass without explanation, so I had to begin again and show them that their legend of Tukeram and all my words applied not to him, but to Jesus Christ.

These are only a few out of many difficulties, but they will suffice to show that the truth will never be brought home to these people by word of man, but by revelation of the Holy Ghost.

Now, dear friends, we say to you that we rejoice to be your messengers to this people in the things of God, sent out here, we reverently believe, as the first missionaries were, first by the Holy Ghost, and then by the Christian Church; but we cannot do the work alone. It must be "ye also helping together on our behalf by your supplication" (2 Cor. 1: 11, R. V.). May we not believe that He that said "Go ye" said it to you also, and that He means you to have a part in this work, sharing the toil and the burden as well as the glory and reward.

As we lift our hearts to Him may He show each one the part of the work which He the Master wants us to carry for Him. There are no services too lowly or too high to be laid at His feet, and no talents too great or too insignificant to be used for Him.

May we all, according to our ability, occupy till He comes, in such a way as to obtain His glorious well done.

Yours in His loving service,
WILLIAM RAMSEY.

The Lord could not have intended that a tidal wave of joy or illumination should toss His disciples to His breast, to be followed more or less rapidly by an undertow which should carry them back again into conditions which they had coveted to leave. There must be some way of being kept in the love of God, if there is any way of finding the love of God for ourselves. But the art of keeping what we find is an art which is only learned in an upper chamber on the day of Pentecost. Nor is there anything short of a direct occupation of our souls by the promised Spirit of God that will enable us to be "always what we sometimes are, and never what we sometimes have been."—J. R. Harris.

ARROWS ON THE SUBJECT OF GIVING.*

Giving all to God in sacrifice is the foundation for giving to men in service.

Financial conditions affect spiritual conditions, reservation brings us to want, dedication brings us to God.

Withholding causes fear, surrender brings faith. Practice giving—personal giving, proportionate giving, present giving.

Give from the heart to God—not to the missionary, not to temperance—but give to God. Let giving become as sacred and holy as prayer. Do not give as a joke, but as a privilege and a luxury.

God's work should be self-supporting, and not go begging. Christianity should not be a pauper, but a millionaire: then the churches would receive large dividends in the salvation of souls, and not have large investments in tombstones and cemeteries.

Departure from the divine plan is a foundation for lying, as with Ananias and Sapphira. Giving all is the key to victory. To give means to live and to live means to give.

Giving is the heart of the Christian life. Without it, the blood ceases to flow. There is no color, no complexion, no activity, no energy. Death is the inevitable. Sooner or later there may be a ghastly spectacle above the sod; but it is obnoxious in the sight of God, and many wish for the bell to toll and bid good-bye to a stingy soul.

Practice giving as much as prayer.

The more giving becomes practical, the more people become spiritual.

More of our prayers would be answered if we would spend more time in praying—not all in praying and jehing God down to our terms; which are hard-times prices.

Our theories are not needed. The more men practice giving to God the more God gives to men. Our part is lacking or we would receive the fulness of the promise: the church would give the triumphant shout, and the voice would speak to raise the dead from degradation, sin and shame, all to honor Jesus' name. We need not expect a better condition spiritually until there be a change financially. The prevailing spiritual dearth is due to the fact that so many shirk personal giving.

That is not a healthy church in which two or three take all the financial responsibility. Personal giving will cause a new interest in the sermon and the minister, and a new desire to attend the missionary meeting; also a hunger for the "Missionary Advocate."

By person, by money or otherwise, visit some foreign field. A new interest and zeal will be given to every department of church work when disposition of this subject is made according to divine plan. Shall not this convention now assembled make itself felt on this question in all of the American Yearly Meetings?

There is a personal blessing in personal giving that is obtained in no other way. There are thousands who testify to increased life and power; when money becomes a sacred trust, and holy as the hour of prayer.

Give to God His portion, at least one-tenth. Follow the Holy Ghost in this as in other service.

Do not wait until you are out of debt. Give now. Give money. Promises never sent the gospel or started car-wheels.

Ask the question: How much have you given since you believed? And many would not answer, but sing: "I'm glad, glad salvation's free."

Give all to God and so prepare for an abundant entrance.

Give not what you think you can, but all God says you can.

There are promises that are never yours until you give all to God.

Give to God first. Give liberally: Give cheerfully. Then God will give His best to you.

HONEY FROM THE ROCK.

"So the Lord alone did lead him and there was no strange God with him. And he made him to suck honey out of the rock."—Deut. 32: 13-14.

Stored in the niche and crevice
On the sides of the big, strong rock,
Are the choicest sweets of Nature,
Finer than fruit or flock.

Here's wine brewed from the dew
'Mid twilight's gentle gloom;
Here's sugar pure, rose breath,
Quintessence of perfume,
Fair heart of palm and olive,
And kiss of myrtle bloom.

Well kept in their rocky caskets,
These rare, sweet treasures lie;
Bees know how dear their store,
And guard it close and high.

To whom will be the pleasure
Of feasting at this board,
Of sucking from the rock
The waxy, golden hoard?

The soul who wins the heights,
And bees with bold offence—
For out of toil and courage
Flow sweets in consequence;

Those led of God alone,
Nor strange gods with them keep,
Who follow, e'en through fire,
Enduring 'till they reap.

Secure a good name to thyself by living virtuously and humbly, but let this good name be nursed abroad and never be brought home to look upon it. Let others use it for their own advantage; let them speak of it if they please; but do not thou use it at all but as an instrument to do God glory and thy neighbor more advantage. Let thy face, like Moses', shine to others, but make no looking-glass for thyself.—Jeremy Taylor.

The book of the prophet Ezekiel is one of the longest of the prophetic books, and, perhaps, one of the least read. It lacks the beauty and sustained eloquence of Isaiah, the pathos of Jeremiah, and the condensed clearness and force of Amos. It is, however, a book of very great interest to the student of Jewish history, as giving a picture of the Jews during the exile. "Although born a priest, and an ardent advocate of ritualism and the written laws, Ezekiel . . . was a preacher of practical personal righteousness."

Ezekiel was the son of Buzi; he is called "the priest" (chapter 1: 3), and may have been of the family of Zadok (chapter 44: 15). He was one of the captives carried from Jerusalem 597 B. C., and began to prophesy 592 (chapter 1: 2). It is not known how old he was at this time. The statement relative to his having a house (3: 24; 12: 3; 8: 1; 14: 1, etc.), would all indicate that he could not have been a very young man, nor had he been young, is it likely that he would have been consulted by the elders. He appears to have been much influenced by Jeremiah, though the latter is not mentioned in the book.

He lived during a period of transition, and he exerted a powerful influence in showing the current of Jewish thought and preaching. He desired not only that individuals should feel their responsibility to the Lord, but that each one of them should recognize that he belonged to a community—the community of the chosen people of God. This latter idea is specially shown in the concluding portions of the book.

Rejected by his fellow-exiles at first (3: 25), he was afterwards listened to respectfully, and his counsel and advice sought. "The problem [before him] was to preserve Israel in Babylon, to prevent the nation from being absorbed by the Gentiles. To this end Ezekiel insists that his people shall absolutely eschew the worship of the idols of their conquerors."

The last utterance of Ezekiel appears to have been in the year 570, and after that nothing is known of his life, though a tradition states that he was killed by a Jewish noble whom he had reproved for his idolatrous practices.

It would appear that many of his utterances were written in the first place, whereas the other prophets first spoke and then wrote.

The book has some very striking characteristics, notably its symbolical figures as in chapters 15, 19, 27; its symbolical actions, as in chapters 5, 11, etc.; its many visions, of which the most remarkable is that of the valley of dry bones, chapter 37. It is important in studying or reading the book to keep these points in view. Ezekiel himself calls attention to the symbolical nature of the book when he refers to one of his figures as speaking a parable or riddles (20: 49).

The present lesson in its essential points closely resembles New Testament teaching.

The prophet in the early verses of the chapter has given a picture of the idolatry and wickedness of the people, and the punishment which had come upon them. He says that the Lord will restore them to their own land.

25. "Then." After the restoration. "Clean water." The idea of this method of cleansing comes from the ceremonial law. See Num. 19: 17-19; Ps. 51: 7.

26. "A new heart." Ezekiel is not satisfied with any mere external cleansing, which could be but symbolical; there must be a new heart. The heart is used for the whole inward being—the character. Their heart was formerly hard, strong; compare 2: 4; 3: 7. "Heart of flesh." That is, impressible, sensitive to the Divine will.

27. "My spirit." "My own spirit will I put in you." "Cause you to walk." "There always attaches to 'spirit' the idea of power in operation, the spirit of God is God exerting power." It will be seen how closely Ezekiel's idea of regeneration agrees with that of the New Testament. There seems little doubt that our Lord alluded to these words of the prophet in his conversation with Nicodemus. John 3: 3-8. Compare also 2 Cor. 5: 17; Gal. 5: 22, 23; John 1: 12, 13; Titus 3: 5. "Statutes, judgments." These are not simply the external rites and requirements; they embrace all things which go to make up a life of righteousness. Compare chapters 18, particularly verses 8, 9; 33: 19; also 11: 19, 20; 37: 14.

28. "Ye shall dwell," etc. Obedience to the Lord and the physical well being of the people are inseparably united in the eye of the prophet; this idea runs through the whole of the Old Testament. See Exodus 20: 12; Ps. 37: 3, 9, 29, etc. "My people." A promise conditioned on obedience. Is. 43: 6; Jer. 31: 9; Hos. 1: 10; 2 Cor. 6: 16-18.

29. "I will save you," etc. "I will deliver you from your impurities," by purifying you. "I will deal for the corn." The grain.

30. A continuation of the promise of prosperity which will follow a change of heart and obedience.

31. Then they will see what their true condition was, and what sin really is, and so will be able to measure what God has done for them.

32. "Not for your own sakes." They did not deserve this love. The meaning is, not for any good you have done. Compare Titus 3: 5. The remembrance of their deeds could only bring them shame and confusion.

33-36.—A continuation of what the Lord will do. This restoration will be a manifestation to the nations of the Lord's power, but it will not come until the day in which the people are cleansed. Purification, cleansing, must precede restoration and prosperity. Compare Isa. 40: 1, 2.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Ye must be born anew."
2. "If any man is in Christ he is a new creature." Compare Gal. 6: 15.
3. Heb. 10: 4, 8, 9, 19-23.
4. "Repent (change your mind) and believe the Gospel."

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 5.—Be steadfast, unmovable. 1 Cor. 15: 50-58.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

The Denominational Rally of Friends, at the Ohio State Christian Endeavor Convention, was well attended. Members of the different Yearly Meetings represented gave reports of what the Endeavorers of the State are doing for missions. The amount given the last year averaged almost a dollar per active member.

Isaac Stratton gave a short and interesting talk. He said some people had the idea it took a deeper consecration to go to the mission field than to stay in the home land, but that this was not true. We ought to be entirely consecrated, whether our work is at home or abroad.

Those who go to the foreign field must not only be consecrated to the work in that field, but to God's work everywhere.

Charles E. Terrill, of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, who has been doing efficient work as Vice-President for the last four years, requested that a new Vice-President be appointed. Samuel Purviance, of Ohio Yearly Meeting, was elected for the coming year.

A. E. B.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting, Christian Endeavor Union, held its regular meeting Sixth month 10th.

The exercises consisted of Bible reading, prayer and songs, closing with an address on "A Peculiar People," by Dr. J. F. Brown, of Earlham College, in which he spoke of many of the characteristic principles of Friends and the necessity of Endeavorers still observing and maintaining them.

MARY E. LAWRENCE, Sec.

The true moment at which to call upon one's self to take any new step in virtue is at the fainting-point, when it would seem so easy to drop all and give all up; when, if you do not, you make of yourself a power.—J. F. W. Ware.

News from the Field.

Dr. William Hunt, who is well known to many Friends, and who went to Texas when an effort was made to found a Friends' colony at Estacado, Texas, is now living at Plainview, Texas. He has, though well along in years, been able to do much gospel work in the region round about. He has kept up three regular appointments each month, and he has found many other openings for service and has been much appreciated in the community.

Esther G. Frame is again at her home in Jamestown, Ohio, where she will rest for the present.

We are glad to report that M. M. Binford's health is much improved, and he is steadily gaining.

The report of Canada Yearly Meeting has been unavoidably delayed. It is a report which touches one's heart, and we can easily feel how a sadness must have overspread the meeting, as it missed from its ranks the men who have been for years a tower of strength in its assemblies.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Findlay, Ohio.—A series of revival meetings, held in a large tent in our city, came to a close last Sabbath evening, with tent crowded and many remaining outside, who gave marked attention to the preaching and singing. These services were conducted principally by Evangelist N. C. McLean, assisted at times by his wife, S. H. Jones, and others. The meetings were under the auspices of the National Evangelistic Association, and were participated by those of different denominations, and as a result souls were brought to Christ and saved, and Christian people greatly revived and built up in the most holy faith. N. C. McLean and wife have gone to Paris, Canada, to conduct a series of gospel tabernacle meetings. C. S.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Thomas C. Williams came to this field of labor about Sixth month 10th, 1898, from Kansas Yearly Meeting. Although there has been a conflict between the church and the forces of evil arrayed against it, and at times, from outward appearances, seemingly the evil would prevail, Brother Williams has gone in and out before all the people as a man of God, desiring the best for all, preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ without respect to persons, sound, clear and practicable. God has honored his word and the church has the victory through Jesus Christ, and is in the best condition spiritually and every way, it has ever been in all its history. Our brother and his wife made two hundred pastoral visits during their first year's work at this place. They have recently opened up a new field of work at Maple Grove, a small village about four miles west from West Lomons, which already has promise of much good. At this place there had been an Episcopal Chapel, where meetings had been held, but the work had gone down and the people left without meetings. They seem to appreciate the efforts being put forth for them, and already a congregation of fifty or more come to worship and listen to the word spoken. Last Sabbath a Sabbath School was organized with much interest. Brother Williams has arranged to remain another year in the work, and we are expecting the blessing of the Lord to rest upon his work in much greater measure.

THOMAS C. SPRAGUE.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

La Porte, Ind.—Bethel and Stillwell Meetings belong to Indiana Yearly Meeting and La Porte to Western. The three meetings of this county, viz., La Porte, Bethel, and Stillwell Junction, united in a grove meeting, beginning Sixth month 23d, on Sixth-day evening, and continuing until Sabbath evening, the 9th inst., with three meetings each on Seventh-day and the Sabbath.

These were held in a beautiful grove adjoining Bethel Church. Dinners and suppers were served on the grounds, and the entertainment and comfort of the people were remarkable for a grove meeting.

We had with us most acceptably J. H. Douglas, of Oregon; P. W. Raidabaugh, Chicago; and Franklin Meredith, of Fairmount, Ind, besides the pastors of the three meetings, Charles Whitely, M. S. Gause and Martilia Cox. The singing of Mrs. Charles Whitely was very much appreciated, though the congregational singing was also enjoyed. Brother Douglas says he is as young as ever, but the house in which he lives is wearing out; yet he preached with great fervor and power, especially on Sabbath a.m., holding a large audience very attentive to the gospel message.

P. W. Raidabaugh gave us most valuable addresses on Bible study, emphasizing the necessity of recognizing the whole Bible as God's word to us. His address on "What to Teach the Boys and Girls" was full of practical suggestions and highly appreciated.

Brother Meredith proclaimed the gospel in a very forcible manner, showing the necessity of repentance at once, and the undeniable result of sin. Christ our Saviour from all sin and our Sanctifier was proclaimed by all these.

J. H. Douglas remained with us a week at La Porte, attending two regular services and also preaching at the Christian Church on Sabbath evening at a union meeting of five of the city churches. We truly thank God for these ambassadors of the cross. M. Cox.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

The Biblical Institute of Kansas has been provided for the special purpose of helping the members of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and those who neglect to avail themselves of this opportunity of "making ready" to do the Master's will suffer severely for it.

While North Branch is not a railroad town, the Friends have promised us that transportation will be free to any who will address A. H. Rinard, North Branch, Kansas, telling him which of the following railroads he will come on—Missouri Pacific (Burr Oak, Kansas, is the station): See ticket agent and learn the time you arrive, so that Brother Rinard may know when to meet you. The B. M. (Guide Rock, Nebraska, is the station). Rock Island (Otego, Kansas, is the station). Be sure to write plainly the name of the station where and the time when you wish to be met, and it will be attended to.

It is more necessary to be very explicit in these matters, since these stations are from nine and a half to eleven miles from North Branch.

It has been customary at other points where the Institute has been held for lodging to be free and table board at a nominal price, and I am sure that North Branch Friends will do as well. Be sure to bring your Bibles and hymn books. On behalf of board, Nathan Brown, Secretary.

The provisional program of the Institute, which is to be held at North Branch, Eighth month 1st, is as follows:

Third-day, Eighth month 1st.—Evening—Sermon, Wm. S. Wooton.

Fourth-day, Eighth month 2d.—9.00 to 9.30—Devotional.

9.30 to 10.00—Organization.

10.00 to 10.30—"Friends' Church History," Nathan Brown.

10.30 to 11.30—"Friends' Church and Its Organization," President E. Stanley; discussion.

2.00 to 2.30—Devotional.

2.30 to 3.30—"Responsibility of the Church to Foreign Missions," Gilbert Bowles.

3.30 to 4.30—"Elements of Successful Ministry," Wm. S. Wooton.

8.00—Sermon, President E. Stanley.

Fifth-day, Eighth month 3d.—9.00 to 9.30—Devotional.

9.30 to 10.30—"Cardinal Doctrines of Friends, President E. Stanley.

10.30 to 11.00—Discussion.

11.00 to 12.00—(a) Justification, What Is It? (b) Sanctification, What Is It?? Gilbert Bowles.

2.00 to 2.30—Devotional.

2.30 to 3.30—The Pastor in the Society of Friends. (a) His Gift; (b) His Authority; (c) His Support; (d) His Relation to Other Ministers in the Same Meeting, Josiah Butler.

3.30 to 4.30—Discussion, opened by Eliza H. Carey.

8.00—Sermon, Gilbert Bowles.

Sixth-day, Eighth month 4th.—9.00 to 9.30—Devotional.

9.30 to 10.30—"External Evidences of Inspiration," President E. Stanley.

10.30 to 11.30—"The Church as an Evangelizing Force in Its Own Locality," Gilbert Bowles. Discussion.

2.00 to 2.30—Devotional.

2.30 to 3.30—"The Spirituality of Christianity vs. Ceremony and Ordinance," President E. Stanley.

8.00—Sermon, Wm. S. Wooton.

Seventh-day, Eighth month 5th.—9.00 to 9.30—Devotional.

9.30 to 12.00—Bible Schools, J. W. Beeman presiding.

2.00 to 2.30—Devotional.

2.30 to 4.30—Christian Endeavor, William Beesom presiding.

8.00—"Friends and Their Mission—President E. Stanley.

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—2 Tim. 2: 15.

The seventh commencement exercises of Haviland Academy occurred on the 17th of Sixth month. There were four young lady graduates, all of whom acquitted themselves well. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered the Sabbath preceding by Isaac A. Woodard.

President Edmund Stanley, of the Friends' University at Wichita, was present on the evening of the 16th, and favored us with a very interesting and instructive lecture on "The Two Civilizations." He was also present at commencement, and delivered the class address. His presence was much appreciated by our community and another impulse given to the work of education. Our field is a good one, and any Friend who is a college graduate and desires a position as Principal of an Academy in a good Christian community, would do well to correspond with Isaac A. Woodard, President of Board of Trustees, Haviland, Kansas.

Children's Day was observed with marked success.

President E. Stanley, of Wichita, is to dedicate the new church at Twin Mound, the 16th.

Seth C. Reece is conducting the holiness camp meeting at South Riverside Park, Wichita, Kansas.

E. H. Carey expects to conduct a two-days' meeting at Oak Creek, Kansas, on the 29th and 30th of Seventh month, and attend the Biblical Institute at North Branch.

Isaac and Elizabeth Lindley, of Independence, are visiting in Indiana.

Four of the university students will give musical and oratorial entertainments in Eastern Kansas and Western Missouri during the summer. Hear them. It will be good for you.

Minnie Bassett is doing some good work in the limits of Buffalo Quarter.

Iowa Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, is planning to have some special meetings at the time of their next Monthly Meeting, which occurs the second Seventh-day of Eighth month, to be held at Valley Queene. This is one of the Monthly Meetings making a request of Grand River Quarter for a new Quarterly Meeting in Oklahoma.

The outlook for the attendance of a good number the coming year at the University of Wichita is good.

Wm. Perry's work in Mount Ayr Quarterly Meeting this year has been helpful. He will probably remain in that Quarter another year, or for some time at least.

Hannah King is in Pratt County. She went to attend at what proved to be the last sickness and death of her sister.

Quite a number of Friends will go to North Carolina on an excursion about the first of Eighth month. Rates have been secured.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Daniel Huff, of Fountain City, Ind., recently died at an age of more than four score years. A lifelong Friend, he was intimately connected with the underground railway of the anti-slavery cause, and, in the town where his death occurred, assisted many a slave on his way to Canada and bodily freedom.

Indiana Yearly Meeting realizes its loss by death, during the current year. Of ministers the following have been taken: Levi Jessup, Murray Shipley and Hannah Lawrence. Other prominent persons taken are Thomas N. White, Martha A. Jay, Thomas Baldwin, Lydia Baldwin, Susan Stubbs, Caroline E. Cowgill and Daniel Huff.

The death of Susan Stubbs, widow of Hiram Stubbs, occurred at her home at West Elkton, Ohio, on the 13th inst., her age being 72 years.

Caroline E. Cowgill died at her home at Summitville, Indiana, on the 15th inst., and the funeral service and interment occurred on the 17th at Fairmount. She is daughter of Solomon Macy, and wife of Samuel C. Cowgill, and leaves seven children. Of these four have college degrees, and the fifth one is in college, the other two being yet quite young. Her husband is perhaps the largest manufacturer of tile in the world, and both have been much esteemed in the Yearly Meeting both for their character and their work's sake.

So far as reports can be received, it seems that the Bible Institute, to begin at Earlham College on the 24th and continue twelve days, is well remembered and will be well attended.

Needed improvements are being made at Earlham College, and students returning this fall will appreciate rooms newly papered, new bath tubs, and other valuable changes.

President Mills is now expected to return near the first of Eighth month, his health having improved much.

Tennyson Lewis, pastor of Anderson Meeting, has affliction in the family, his wife being seriously ill. Both of them are valued as workers for Christ, and the meeting at Anderson is having very encouraging prosperity.

The Yearly Meeting was pretty well represented at the Detroit Christian Endeavor Convention. Among many delegates attending was Enos Harvey, of Fairmount.

Abijah J. Weaver, of New Castle, will give an address on the Christian Endeavor movement some time during the Bible Institute at Earlham.

Prof. David W. Dennis, of Earlham College, has been engaged during several weeks as instructor in Biological Studies at the Winona Assembly, at Warsaw, Ind., held under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church.

It is reported in the papers that the Hicksite branch will hold their Yearly Meeting (Indiana) this year at Pendleton, Ind., and that hereafter it will be held at Richmond, Ind.; Waynesville, Ohio, and at Pendleton, in the order named.

The marriage of Oscar Moon and Mary Ann Overman is announced for the 10th of next month, to take place in Friends' meeting and according to Friends' order, at Marion, Ind.

Rayburn Robinson and Olive M. Kaminsky were married at Richmond, Ind., on the 12th inst., the Friends' ceremony being used. The bride is a graduate of Earlham and a student of Bryn Mawr.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

The meeting at Lynn, Mass., has been blessed of late by the attendance of various Friends from other meetings. On Sixth month 17th, Alfred Neave Brayshaw and John Wilhelm Rowntree were most acceptably present; also Aquilla H. Pickering, who was so shortly after suddenly called home. In the evening A. N. Brayshaw attended the meeting at East Lynn, while J. W. Rowntree remained at Lynn.

On the 24th of Sixth month Eli G. and Mary M. Parker were present both at the morning and evening meetings.

On Seventh month 1st Joseph Elkinton, Jr., of Philadelphia, was quite unexpectedly in attendance.

On the 8th Phebe S. Aydelott, of Fall River, was with us.

William Penn Varney, from Maine, was present at the Monthly Meeting, at Salem, on the 13th inst., and also at the mid-week meeting at Lynn on the 19th.

The ministry of all these Friends has been most helpful to the meeting, and we rejoice in the renewed sense of the close bond of sympathy which unites Friends in Christian service.

MARY S. PAIGE.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

The work of the Master at Westfield is prospering under the pastorate of Brother Willis Bond, who has been located there the past year. Last Sabbath, being set apart as Children's Day, he gave a good talk to them. He will probably be returned another year.

Henry H. Hodgkin, a minister of many years, known and loved by many, is and has been for several months lying very low, with little prospect of recovery. Through Divine grace he evinces great patience.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Stuart, Iowa.—Children's Day, Sixth month 18th, was observed here by an entertainment that was very interesting. A fair collection was taken up for the Jamaica mission work.

A two-days' meeting was held Seventh month 1st and 2d, conducted by the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, John Stribling, and Altha McCoy. The gospel was preached with power and much good done.

Seventh month 9th a Sabbath School rally was held, which was very profitable to the school. A committee was appointed at last monthly meeting to look after securing a pastor for the coming year.

CYRUS H. HAWKINS.

President A. Rosenberger and family, Levi Rees and family, Sarah and Nannie Wing, Ada and Mildred SeEVERS, Prof. Benjamin L. Miller and John Lofland, all of Oskaloosa, Iowa, are spending a few weeks in Denver and vicinity. Sabbath, Seventh month 16th, was almost equal to a Quarterly Meeting for Denver Friends. Almost all the members in the city were out, and Levi Rees preached with great freedom. President A. Rosenberger also took part. Eber Gause, of Gardner City, Kansas, was very acceptably present and preached in the evening. The coming of these Friends is going to be a great uplift to this meeting.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

Canada Yearly Meeting was held at Pickering, Ontario, commencing Sixth-day, the 30th of Sixth month, and closing on Third-day, the 4th of Seventh month, 1899.

The Meeting of Ministry and Oversight convened on Fifth-day previous at 10 a.m. The attendance at the morning session was not large, and the company of some visiting ministers from other Yearly Meetings was very acceptable. At both the morning and afternoon session a sense of loneliness, which at one time almost reached a point of sadness, was felt, owing to the removal by death of so many of our members during the past year. But we were encouraged to let our motto be "Onward," and rather than mourning because they have been taken home we should rejoice because they have gone "to be with Christ, which is far better;" and we should praise God for having allowed such men to live so long among us.

At the afternoon session Hannah J. Cody was appointed as clerk, and Henry A. Sutton as assistant clerk.

From the replies to queries, it appears that the members of this body are sound in doctrine, and are laboring harmoniously together; but the need was expressed of more earnest prayer and greater zeal in extending the kingdom of Christ. We were shown the importance of being right ourselves before we can be a benefit to others. We need the "Spirit of power, of love, and of a strong mind." The phrase in one of the answers—"Whatever promotes efficiency in gathering to Christ"—was also emphasized. We have a diversity of gifts, but all are needed, and each becomes a help to the others.

The meeting requested of the Yearly Meeting the liberty in the future to invite all Friends in attendance of the Yearly Meeting to attend the sitting of the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight, which was granted. The meeting adjourned to meet on Second-day, at 8 a.m., when all Friends interested were invited to attend.

The committee appointed last year to prepare a program for this session, on Second-day, relative to the Doctrines of our Church, proposed that two subjects, viz: "Oaths" and "War," be taken up.

The subject of "Oaths" was first opened by the reading of a paper prepared by James H. Stover; that of war by Henry A. Sutton. An interesting discussion on both these subjects proved helpful to all, and it was shown that the New Testament teaches that the servants of Christ should neither take the oath, nor take up arms; also the need in these times for Friends not only to stick to their principles, but to give the Bible teaching along these lines which the world so much needs.

On Sixth-day, at 10 a.m., the Yearly Meeting met. Twenty-nine of the representatives appointed by the Quarterly Meetings were present and six absent.

Owing to the removal by death of the clerk, John R. Harris, William I. Moore was appointed to that office for the session.

The minutes of the following visiting ministers were then read: Rebecca W. Flagler, from New York; Herbert Nicholson, from London; Robert B. Warder, from Baltimore, and Gurney Binford, from Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Loving words of welcome were extended by many present, which were responded to by the visitors, and each felt that we are all one in Christ.

The London General Epistle was read, and directed to be printed in the minutes, and to be read at each of the subordinate First-day meetings.

At the afternoon session the representatives proposed the names of William I. Moore for clerk, and Hannah J. Cody and John Webb for assistant clerks, which was united with. After the Standing Committee was appointed, the London Yearly Meeting epistle was read, which expressed deep sympathy with Canada Yearly Meeting because of its loss in the death of John R. Harris, clerk. Dublin Yearly Meeting epistle was then read, and a letter from George Grubb, clerk of Dublin Yearly Meeting, enclosing a draft for £20 5s. to be appropriated towards the building of a meeting-house in Hartney, Manitoba. Expressions of thankfulness to our Heavenly Father followed, that those far-away Friends have been moved to help with the work in our new province.

The epistles from New York, Baltimore, Ohio, Western, Kansas, Iowa and Oregon Yearly Meetings were read, in which we rejoice to see signs of the favor and blessing of God.

A letter from John Henry Douglas contained words of loving greeting and tender sympathy in the loss of the clerk, but that our loss is his eternal gain. He also expressed a heartfelt interest in the extension of the Master's kingdom in the Northwest and in Japan.

At 7.30 the public meeting of the Home Mission Committee was held. An address given by Herbert Nicholson contained an interesting account of work in the slums of Sunderland. Alma G. Dale gave a stirring account of the work in Manitoba. The facts concerning work already done, and the needs for further extension, moved the hearts of those present to show their interest in a practical way, and a collection of $24.18 was contributed for the general Home Mission work, and subscriptions to complete the sum of $1,000 needed for the building of a meeting-house in Hartney.

Seventh-day.—10 a.m., as the statistical report was read a discussion arose as to why there was, on the whole, a decrease in membership. Whether or not the need of pastors to feed the flock did not cause the falling off. We were shown that only a baptized church could know what plans to follow; also the great need of the members upholding the minister, and sharing the responsibility of caring for souls. A Committee on Correspondence having been appointed, the state of society as presented by reports from the Quarterly Meetings was considered, and exhortations given regarding the need of true family worship, and of acknowledging Christ at all times and places, whatever the circumstances. At the afternoon session the epistles from North Carolina and Indiana Yearly Meetings were read; also a letter from M. M. Binford, relative to the Ecumenical Conference, to be held in New York city, in which all the Missionary Societies of the Protestant world are to be represented, the Society of Friends being entitled to eight delegates. Following the treasurer's report, that of the Home Mission Committee was read, and verbal reports given by a number of our Home Mission workers. Many cheering words were given to those working in the different small meetings. A collection and subscription was taken amounting to $323.75. It was also agreed to appropriate $300 from the Yearly Meeting treasury to the Home Mission Fund. In the evening the public meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. was addressed by several of the Christian Endeavor workers. Some of the societies have advanced in the missionary spirit. J. L. Thomas, of Toronto Christian Endeavor Society, was appointed delegate to Detroit International Meeting.

First-day.—Meetings were held at 10.30 a.m. and at 2.30 and 7 p.m. in the Friends', Methodist and Presbyterian Churches. An open-air meeting, at the close of the other evening meetings, was largely attended.

Second-day.—10 a.m., the Standing Committee proposed the names of Friends—one from each Preparative Meeting—to constitute the Home Mission Committee for the coming year, which was united with. Elias Rogers, Toronto, was reappointed treasurer for the Yearly Meeting, and the subordinate meetings were directed to raise $700 for the Yearly Meeting's use. The Peace Committee reports $14.90 collected, in addition to the amount of $25 which was appropriated to their use by the Yearly Meeting last year. The same amount was granted for their use this year, and they were directed to raise a like amount through the Preparative Meetings. The Bible School report was then given, and the work of the "Home Department" was commended to the attention of the meetings and schools. A memorial of William Allen was read, calling forth many loving tributes to his memory. The meeting directed that it be printed in the minutes, and also issued in pamphlet form to the number of five hundred. At 2.30 a memorial of Seneca Doan was read. Expressions of esteem for his faithfulness to the church were read, and his memory is cherished with tender affection. A letter from London Yearly Meeting of Ministry and Oversight was also read. The report of the W. F. M. S. was then given. The President, Phoebe Manning, emphasized our duty by saying: "It is a great responsibility to undertake to send Gurney Binford and his wife to Japan, but it would be a greater responsibility not to send them." One thousand dollars will be needed this year for their support. A collection and subscription were taken in aid of this work amounting to $285.25. In the evening a public missionary meeting was opened by singing and prayer, followed by loving words of greeting from Mrs. A. McCauley, the wife of the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, in whose house the meeting was held, the Friends' meeting-house being too small for the company. An address was given by Gurney Binford from Nehemiah 2: 18: "Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me. . . . Let us rise up and build." The Japanese say: "You do not understand our spirit." One must be there long enough to become acquainted with their spirit before being able to be of much use to them. Following this interesting address, two stanzas of the hymn, "Go Labor On," were sung. Then a few heartfelt words from Mrs. Binford, specially asking that they be upheld by our prayers.

Gurney Binford spent several years in missionary work in Japan, supported by the W. F. M. S. of Canada Yearly Meeting; but came home over a year ago on account of failing health. Having now quite recovered, he expects, after visiting a number of meetings in Canada, to return to the work so dear to his heart, taking a wife with him, to share the labor and joys of missionary life.

Third-day.—10 a.m., the report of Christian Endeavor Societies was given. The Committee on Printing was appointed, and was directed to have one thousand copies of Yearly Meeting minutes printed. An interesting letter from Theophilus Waldemeier and wife was read, telling of the progress of the work for the mentally afflicted in Bible lands. Oregon Yearly Meeting sent us an epistle of this year's proceedings, so as to reach us before ours closes, which was marked by their thoughtfulness of the work in our part of the Master's vineyard. Drafts of letters to Albert A. Colquhoun, who has been for several years assistant clerk of this Yearly Meeting, and Squire W. Hill, for many years an elder of Pelham Monthly Meeting, but now living in Toronto, were read, expressing the sympathy of the meeting with them in their affliction. Both the Friends mentioned are suffering with cancer, and Albert A. Colquhoun's wife is very ill with consumption. A memorial of William Wetherald was read, which called forth many references to the widespread influence of his life for God; copies of memorial were ordered to be printed in tract form for distribution. The report and financial statement for Pickering College Committee was highly favorable, showing a net gain on the current account of $724.36. The meeting expressed satisfaction with the work of the college; thanks to the committee and to the faculty; but above all to the "Hand of our God, which was good upon us." At 3 p.m. a draft of letter to the Doukhobors was read, and Alma G. Dale appointed to deliver it to them. After several committee appointments had been made a memorial of John R. Harris was read, followed by many expressions of the evidence in his life of sterling integrity of character.

Devotional meetings were held each morning through the Yearly Meeting (except Second-day) at 8.30, and a closing prayer and praise service on Third-day evening, all of which were richly blessed.

The meeting adjourned to meet at New Market at the usual time next year if it is God's will.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

I'LL TRUST IN THEE.

At morning, when the day breaks grey,
And birds bathe in the dewdrop spray,
And whistle and warble, trill and sing,
And hills their notes are echoing;
When the breeze blows fresh and sweet and free,
I'll trust in Thee, I'll trust in Thee.

At midnight, when the black storm cloud
Wraps the earth in misty shroud;
When lightnings flash, and thunders roar,
And wind and rain beat on my door,
And shriek and clash in awful glee,
I'll trust in Thee, I'll trust in Thee.

When joy and peace and hope abound,
And hedge me safe from woes around;
When life's joy-bells their glad notes ring,
And aspirations leap and sing,
And bright dreams wake reality,
I'll trust in Thee, I'll trust in Thee.

When sorrows press upon my soul;
Adversity's dark waters roll;
Temptations sweep across the deep
Of life; disappointments keep
'Twixt Thee and me,
Oh God! my soul will trust in Thee.

J. WINFORD HUNT.

Married.

DEVALL—DILLINGHAM.—At the home of the bride's mother, Sarah D. Gardner, Elba, N. Y., Frederick A. DeVall, of Plattsburg, N. Y., to Mary H. Dillingham, Sixth month 8th, 1899, by Friends' ceremony.

Died.

BISEL.—Jonathan, son of Joseph and ——— (Moon) Bisel, was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, 1st of First month, 1832, and died suddenly of heart failure at his home near Boundary, Jay County, Ind., Fourth month 12th, 1899, aged 67 years, 3 months, 11 days. He was a member of Pike Meeting, Portland, Ind., Monthly Meeting.

CAREY.—At Kansas City, Kansas, Sixth month 3d, 1899, of smallpox, Eleazer Carey, son of Sylvanus and Sarah Carey, both deceased, aged 48 years.

JEFFREY.—John H. Jeffrey, son of Job and Rebecca Jeffrey, was born near Fountain City, Ind., Fourth month 18th, 1818, where he spent his early life. He was twice married; his second wife, Mary Smith, daughter of Charles and Mary Johnson, being a Friend, he attached himself to the Society of Friends. He afterwards settled in the Adams County woods near Berne, where he made a farm, on which he resided until his death, Fifth month 3d, 1899, aged 81 years and 15 days. He was buried at Dover, Wayne County, Ind., alongside of his companion, who had preceded him about eight years. He was a member of Pleasant Valley Meeting, Portland Monthly Meeting.

MOON.—Aaron Moon was born near Martinsville, Clinton County, Ohio, Third month 16th, 1832. Died at Spring Valley, Ohio, Sixth month 19th, 1899, aged 67 years, 3 months and 3 days. He was married to Eunice Wolard, Seventh month 1st, 1852. He had a birthright membership with Friends, and was recorded a minister of the gospel by the Springfield Meeting in the year 1878, which place he faithfully filled until the time of his death. He was ever very earnest in his pleadings to the sinner that he should forsake his evil ways, and turn to Christ, who came to seek and save that which was lost. He manifested a deep abiding interest in the welfare of the church, exhorting her to be found filling her place faithfully in the world. He was also a member of the Christian Endeavor Society, which he attended regularly until within the last few months, being confined to his home by sickness which he bore with Christian fortitude and patience, often praying that the dear Lord would take him out of his bodily suffering, which ended as he sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

MARTZ.—Magdalena Martz, daughter of Christian Kessler, was born Eighth month 15th, 1850, and died of consumption at her home near Monroe, Ind., Fourth month 20th, 1899, aged 48 years, 8 months, 5 days. She with her husband, George W. Martz, joined the Friends' Church about three years ago at Pleasant Valley, Adams County, Ind., and was a member of Portland, Ind., Monthly Meeting.

PEASLEE.—Mary B., wife of Francis Peaslee, fell asleep in Christ Jesus at her home in South Pittsfield, N. H., Third month, 20th, 1899, aged 69 years and 21 days.

The death of this beloved Friend leaves a vacancy in her home, church and neighborhood such as is rarely experienced. She was converted in early life and joined the Methodist Church, faithfully and loyally devoting herself to its interests.

Her husband being a member of the Society of Friends, she became interested in it, and eventually was convinced of the principles and united in membership.

She brought to her new church associations the same zeal and earnestness which characterized her in the former, and no sacrifice was too great for her to make if only the cause of Christ and the prosperity of the church could be advanced thereby.

She was never weary of entertaining the Lord's servants in her home, ministering most indefatigably to all their outward necessities, and at the same time encouraging and inspiring them in their work for the Master.

There are very few homes for many miles around her own that she has not visited on her errands of mercy and love, watching with the sick, ministering to the dying, comforting the afflicted, and always watching for a suitable opportunity to speak a word of warning or of invitation to the unsaved, or of loving helpfulness to the weary or discouraged.

Of her it may truly be said, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

PENSINGER.—Mary Susan, daughter of Warren and Harriett Wight, was born at Galion, Crawford County, Ohio, Seventh month 12th, 1838; was married to Daniel Pensinger at the old home in Ohio, 26th of Ninth month, 1858. They afterward came to Jay County, Ind., where they made for themselves and their large family of six sons and six daughters a comfortable home. About five years ago she with her husband and several children joined the Friends' Church at Walnut Corner, near their home, which meeting was attached to Olive Branch Monthly Meeting. As the shades of evening drew near on the 4th of Seventh month, 1899, she quietly fell asleep after nearly three months of suffering, much of the time partially or wholly unconscious, at the age of 61 years less 8 days.

ROBERTS.—At the home of Abert Hambleton, Oskaloosa, Iowa, the 16th of Fifth month, 1899, aged 93 years, 4 months and 18 days, Rebecca H. Roberts, daughter of Daniel and Hulda Hunt, born at Douglass, Mass. At Providence, R. I., in 1824, she was married to Laban Jenks. From 1836 to about 1858 they lived in Miami, County, Ohio, and afterwards at West Branch, Le Grand, and Oskaloosa, Iowa. At this last place her husband died in 1865. Later she was married to Reuben L. Roberts, M.D., with whom as United States agent she labored several years among the Shawnee Indians. Since his death in 1875, her home has been mainly at Oskaloosa, Iowa. She was a Baptist in her early years, but while yet in her teens, by unusual experiences—immediately from the Lord, she ever believed—she was fully convinced of the doctrines and principles of Friends, and she held them ever precious, and some of them with rare clearness to the end. For one so aged she read much, being particularly fond of her Revised New Testament, which was marked and underscored with spiritual discernment. It helped her constantly to grow in the life and grace of her Lord and Saviour, and to see His will concerning the church. While she seriously regretted some tendencies to extreme in the Society of Friends, her love and patience towards all steadily grew. She was deeply interested in the suffering, and contributed much to aid the Indians, negroes and orphans. Always industrious and sparing, she gave freely of her means to the Children's Home Finding Society, and to provide for the education of indigent youth, and she was long a life-member of the American Peace Society. Of two things she often spoke tenderly and tearfully—of her own unworthiness of God's great goodness, and of her sympathy for the suffering. In her last years, while ever in sweet submission to the will of God, she more and more desired to depart and be with Christ.

SMITH.—John Smith died at his home, in Halsted, Kansas, Fourth month 23d, 1899, aged 63 years and 3 months. He had a birthright with Friends, and since early manhood held important positions in the church. He was one of the charter members of Fairview Monthly Meeting, and after the Friends composing it had removed when it could no longer be maintained, and was discontinued, he joined with his family the M. E. Church, and was one of its most active workers and trusted counsellors. Few men had so large a share of the public confidence and esteem. At the time of his death he was completing a term as Mayor of the city. As a mark of respect all business was suspended. Six ex-Mayors acted as pall-bearers, and both the outgoing and incoming council attended in a body the funeral services.

VIA.—Delilah, daughter of John and Sarah A. Studebaker, was born in Preble County, Ohio, 28th of Tenth month, 1833; was married to William O. Via in 1855, and died at her home near Pennville, Jay County, Ind., 27th of Fourth month, 1898, aged 64 years and 6 months, a member of Walnut Corner Meeting of Olive Branch Monthly Meeting.

WHITE.—Isabella White died at the home of her daughter, in Richmond Hill, Long Island, on the 10th of Sixth month, 1899. She was the daughter of William and Mary Wilson, and was born in Pasquotank County, North Carolina, on the 6th of Ninth month, 1830. She early gave promise of the usefulness of her mature life. With her sister, she was placed at an early age in Westtown Boarding School, and later attended Friends' School at New Garden, North Carolina. On the 8th of 12th month, 1847, she was married to David White, son of David and Elizabeth White, of Belvidere, North Carolina. They were earnest young Friends, devoted to the principles of the Society, and faithful in the performance of such duties and responsibilities as devolved upon them. Very soon they were both raised to the station of elders, and, later, Isabella was recorded a minister. Her communications, while not lengthy, were often remarkably adapted to the needs of those present, and were a means of blessing to many hearts. The labors of David and Isabella White were not confined to their own Monthly and Quarterly Meetings; they were influential members of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, serving on important committees for many years, blending in their position a wise conservatism with a liberal and progressive spirit. In 1884 they removed to New Garden, N. C., and built for themselves a new home near Guilford College, where they not only endeared themselves to the entire community, but were enabled to render much service to the meeting. For several years Isabella White was a member of the Advisory Committee of the College. After the death of David White, Second month, 1895, Isabella remained in the home, closing it temporarily, as was then thought, for a sojourn with her daughter, Margaret Simms, where until within a few weeks of her death she lived very comfortably and happily, with the prospect, however, of again entering upon service in her own meeting and community, where her return was greatly desired. It pleased our Heavenly Father to take her to her home eternal, the preparation for which she had so often and so earnestly pressed upon us all. The remains were brought home and a most precious meeting was held in New Garden Meeting-house, at which were present those who testified of her worth and service for her Master throughout her entire life.

WHITE.—Mary White, daughter of Hiram and Sarah Jones, was born Fourth month 19th, 1830, at Rockville, Park County, Ind., and died Sixth month 18th, 1899, aged 69 years, 1 month and 29 days. She was married to Jesse White, Fifth month 25th, 1848, in Hendricks County, Ind., where they have since resided, the greater part of the time near Plainfield. She was the mother of two daughters and four sons. One daughter and three sons survive her. Throughout her life she was always ready to assist those about her who needed a helping hand, finding time amidst the busy cares of household duties to visit and assist the sick. A birthright member of Friends, she retained her membership and association with them through life, manifesting the Christlike spirit by the life she lived and openly acknowledging Him as her redeemer.

WILLIAMS.—Died, James M. Williams, son of William and Lucetta Williams, at his home in Washington, Kansas, Seventh month 10th, 1899, aged 56 years. He was converted the winter of 1878 and joined Friends, and was a recorded minister of the gospel, and was actively and faithfully engaged in Christian work.

WOLF.—Merlin Wolf, son of Jacob B. and Emaline Wolf, died Fifth month 16th, 1898, near Monroe, Ind. He was a member of Pleasant Valley Meeting, Portland Monthly Meeting.

Also, Emaline Clark, daughter of Jesse and Evaline Clark, a member of the same meeting, died in the springtime of 1899. No dates obtained.

News and Events.

Sir Wilfred Laurier, the Canadian Prime Minister, announced in the House of Commons last week that the Joint High Commission had utterly failed in its effort to establish an Alaskan boundary line satisfactory to both the United States and Canada; in fact, the negotiations had not advanced one iota from the position of January last. To him the only alternative was arbitration or war. The latter, he said, could not for a moment be thought of, and consequently the final resort must be arbitration. Competent judges, however, believe the questions in dispute may yet be settled by the two countries alone, and that Premier Laurier is altogether too much of an alarmist. The situation is greatly strained, each nation being determined not to yield to the other.

Secretary of War, Russell A. Alger, resigned his portfolio last week. His resignation was generally unexpected at this time, as he had shown himself apparently thoroughly determined to weather the storm of criticism, and had stated that he intended to remain in office to the end of the term. It had become evident, however, that his further retention in the Cabinet would seriously jeopardize the chances of President McKinley for a second term, and with popular disfavor generally surrounding him, and desiring to push himself as candidate for Governor of Michigan, his withdrawal seems everywhere to have been entirely acceptable. The resignation takes effect on the 1st of next month, when he will be succeeded by Elihu Root, a prominent New York lawyer. The latter is a man of pronounced ability in his profession, but without any experience in matters pertaining to the new position. He has yet to prove his adaptability to managing the army.

The South African War Cloud appears to have disappeared for the time at least. The Volksraad, the legislative body of the Transvaal, has passed a bill giving Outlanders the right of the franchise after seven years' residence. This is a reduction of two years from the terms formerly offered by President Kruger, and the franchise law will be "retrospective as well as prospective," so that old residents may hope to vote at the next election. It is said that the measure had only five negative votes, and President Kruger himself supported it most vigorously.

As a result of the increasing strictness in censorship of press despatches from Manila, regarding the conduct of the war, the correspondents now in Luzon have united in sending a round robin to the papers of this country. The correspondents protest against the treatment which they claim to have received at the hands of General Otis, and allege that the campaign is full of mistakes, and that misleading and untrue reports regarding the situation in the islands have been made constantly. The statement is dated July 11th, and was sent by way of Hong Kong. It was published in this country on the 18th. It is a severe and direct arraignment of Major-General Otis. The latter has made a denial of the charges, and accuses the instigators of courting martyrdom.

The Brooklyn trolley strike, at this writing, appears to be practically dead. The strikers have made a determined stand, but the company has been unusually successful in running its cars. More or less violence was in evidence during the height of the strike last week, and many cars were prevented from running, but new men being rapidly secured to take the place of the strikers, and ample police protection being afforded, there has almost from the first been but little hope for the old employees. Many of these will not even be received again upon reapplication for work. The Cleveland employees are again on strike. They declare that the trolley company has wholly failed in carrying out the concessions granted, and believing that they have been unjustly treated, they are showing themselves determined to fight the question out. Much lawlessness has prevailed, and several attempts have been made to blow up cars with dynamite and nitro-glycerine. It has even been necessary to call out the militia to suppress disorder. As usual, in both the Cleveland and Brooklyn strikes, the chief offenders are not the strikers, but their sympathizers, the idlers and riff-raff of the city, who are ever ready to unite in mob force on a sufficient pretext.

Five Italians were lynched at Tallulah, Louisiana, on the 20th. It is possible that Italy will demand restitution for these murders.

Colonel Robert Ingersoll, the noted lawyer, agnostic and lecturer, died at his home, Walston-on-Hudson, in New York, on the 21st. He was in his sixty-fifth year.

More is accomplished in this world always by the suggestions of motive and force than by the impositions of form and rule. He who believes in suggestion has trust in the vital power of things. The whole world is waiting to start into far higher action than anything yet, if one could only touch its springs. This is the beauty, this must be the quiet satisfaction, of the lives of those obscure and patient workers who build nothing themselves, but who suggest the need and wish of building to other minds greater than theirs. Think of being the school teacher of Milton or Pascal, and yet only a few antiquaries know the name of either. Surely there are last that shall be first. Surely this power of suggestiveness must always be the teacher's wisest and best.—Phillips Brooks.

"THE GOOD OLD TIMES."

We have heard much of "the good old times," and are indebted to the New York "Tribune" for a description of a few of the advantages which our forefathers enjoyed at the beginning of the century :

There was not a public library in the United States.

Almost all the furniture was imported from England.

An old copper mine in Connecticut was used as a prison.

There was only one hat factory, and that made cocked hats.

Every gentleman wore a queue and powdered his hair.

Crockery plates were objected to because they dulled the knives.

Virginia contained a fifth of the whole population of the country.

A man who jeered at the preacher or criticised the sermon was fined.

A gentleman bowing to a lady always scraped his foot on the ground.

Two stage coaches bore all the travel between New York and Boston.

LED INTO IT

By Following the Habit of Friends.

As I took my coffee in very moderate quantities, I really did not believe what my friends frequently told me, that coffee was the cause of the gas on my stomach, which has troubled me for, oh, perhaps forty years.

I am now a little over sixty years old, and I know that this gas trouble came on about the time I was twenty, and has been with me ever since. I have denied myself almost every kind of food pleasant to my taste, but without any appreciable benefit.

All of my friends have known of my trouble, as it has been of such long duration. Some time ago I was called to nurse a sick friend who had Postum Food Coffee in the pantry and used it in place of coffee, praising it very highly. For about a week I used it as they did, as my only beverage, and the second day I noticed a change in my condition, and from that time on I never had one attack of the belching of gas. The friends exclaimed, "Why, where has your trouble gone?" and everyone in the house knew that I had been entirely cured by leaving off coffee and taking Postum Cereal instead. You can depend upon it that never since that time has coffee passed my lips, and never will while I can get the food drink Postum. My stomach has grown so strong since that time that I can eat anything I like, and now take great pleasure in my meals and in life altogether. I send you a list of friends whom I know have been greatly helped by leaving off the use of ordinary coffee and using Postum Food Coffee in its place. Some of these made very flat, poor, Postum on the start, as they only boiled it a few minutes, but it is generally known now about here that the only way to get the flavor is to boil it long enough. LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL & GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE

WHEN BUYING, NOTE THE SIGNATURE-LEA & PERRINS ACROSS THE WRAPPER.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AGTS., NEW YORK.

A day laborer considered himself well paid with two shillings a day.

The whipping post and pillory were still standing in New York and Boston.

Beef, pork, salt fish, potatoes, and hominy were the staple diet all the year round.

Buttons were scarce and expensive, and the trousers were fastened with pegs or laces.

A new arrival in jail was set upon by his fellow-prisoners and robbed of everything he had.

When a man had enough tea, he placed his spoon across his cup to indicate that he wanted no more.

Leather breeches, a checked shirt, red flannel jacket, and a cocked hat formed the dress of an artisan.

The church collection was taken in a bag at the end of a pole, with a bell attached to arouse sleepy contributors.

THE RED CROSS.

The National Red Cross Society, in compliance with the wishes of the Government of the United States, and in response to many appeals, has returned to Cuba to assist in completing the work of relief. The service is purely of a hospital nature—to shelter the homeless and care for the sick. The Society is in urgent need of funds, and its success will depend entirely upon the co-operation and support given it by the American people. The Red Cross work is also to be extended to the Philippines, where by reason of the rainy season and the attendant increase in sickness its help is particularly needed at this time. The Philadelphia headquarters of the Red Cross are at 1501 Chestnut Street.

AN ENGLISH COBBLER.

"The New Voice" tells of the good work accomplished by John Pounds, an English cobbler. His heart was filled with pity for the ragged children, whom ministers and magistrates, ladies and gentlemen were leaving to run wild, and go to ruin in the streets. He pondered over their situation until he began gathering in the outcasts, and trying to train them up in virtue and knowledge.

He taught them to read and write, and with no thought of fame or recompense, single-handed, earning his daily bread meanwhile by toil at the cobbler's bench, he saved five hundred children, who became useful citizens.

He was sometimes seen hunting down a ragged urchin on the quays of Portsmouth, compelling him to attend school, not by the power of a policeman, but by the temptation of a potato. He knew the love of an Irish boy for that delicacy, and was often seen running beside an unwilling lad, holding a hot potato under his nose—the boy's temper nearly as hot as the potato.

It was this work, undertaken by a man poor even to rags, that inspired the greater work of Thomas Guthrie, founder of the Ragged Schools of Edinburgh.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

Co-operates with the CIVIL AUTHORITIES in enforcing the laws, and with the evangelical CHURCHES in extending the influences of the GOSPEL.

The Chinese Mission at No. 929 Race Street, near a heathen temple, is under the auspices of The Christian League, and seeks to promote the social, moral and spiritual welfare of these strangers in our midst, and invites the co-operation of Christian men and women in this hitherto neglected work.

The Christian League is greatly in need of financial aid, and contributions sent to the Treasurer, Mr. JOHN H. CONVERSE, 500 N. BROAD STREET (Baldwin Locomotive Works), will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND, publishes in its columns, as frequently as it can find space for the purpose, the location and time of holding Friends Meetings in the large cities throughout America. Many of our readers have expressed their satisfaction with it. If in visiting the different cities Friends could also find a comfortable home in some Friend's family, it would frequently be very much appreciated. Our readers who could accommodate such transient boarders would find it of value to keep an advertisement in our department of "Subscribers' Wants." Such a notice would cost only 25c. for each insertion of 5 lines.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch Street, PHILADELPHIA.

The Bible Student and Friends' Evangelist.

A sixteen-page Monthly, edited and published by the Cleveland Bible Training School, has the following distinct departments:

Consecutive Bible Study, or helps to understand and appropriate the teaching of successive books of the Bible.

Topical Bible Study, or helps to a clear knowledge of Bible doctrines.

The Higher Life, or helps to a knowledge and experience of holiness, the baptism with the Holy Spirit, the victory of faith, the joyful, fruitful service of God.

The Mission Field, or helps to appreciate and carry out the Great Commission.

The Bible Training School, which keeps readers somewhat in touch with the spirit and work of this young institution, through which so many have received and are receiving blessed spiritual helps as workers for Christ.

The Miscellaneous Department, which has helpful articles on a variety of religious subjects, some of them of great value.

Single subscription, per year, in advance, 50 cents.

Any one sending four names, beside his own, and $2.00 in money, will receive the paper for one year free. Address

MONKEYS PICKING COTTON.

The "Cotton Planters' Journal" gives an account of the training of monkeys to pick cotton, in the plantations of Mississippi, an account which it would be hard to believe if it were not accompanied with names, dates, places and circumstances which put deception out of all probability.

The introducer of this novel kind of labor is Mr. W. W. Mangum, and the principal scene of its employment has been Mr. Mangum's plantation at Smedes, Sharkey County. The attempt was suggested first by Professor S. M. Tracey. He had seen the performances of some trained monkeys, and assured Mr. Mangum that he thought they could be trained to pick cotton.

Mr. Mangum was so much impressed by the suggestion that in the summer of 1897 he hunted out the owner of the monkeys which Professor Tracey had seen at work, bought the whole lot, ten in number, and induced their trainer to come with them to the plantation. There, in September, 1897, their training as cotton-pickers began, and was conducted to a successful issue.

Each monkey was provided with a bag which would hold about twenty-five pounds of seed cotton. This bag was hung over the monkey's shoulder. Baskets to hold the cotton were placed at the end of each row, and one man beside the trainer was needed to take the cotton out of the sacks and put it into the baskets.

The female monkeys proved the best pickers, not only picking cleaner cotton than the males, but picking more in a day. In less than a month after they were set at work, they could pick on an average one hundred and fifty pounds daily. They picked in weather in which negroes would not pick, and picked cleaner than the negroes. The first experiment was so successful that in June, 1898, Mr. Mangum sent to Africa for three hundred more monkeys of the same breed. They arrived at Smedes about the first of September, and their education under the superintendence of the old trainer began at once.

It was much more difficult to teach these than it had been to teach the others, as they were wild, and had not gone through the general civilizing process that the others had undergone. However, Mr. Mangum and his trainer persisted, and before the season was over they had them well taught; although Mr. Mangum fears that they never could have succeeded but for the ten original monkeys, whose example was invaluable.

A staff correspondent of the "Cotton Planters' Journal" visited Smedes in November last to see the monkeys at work. He writes:

"I must admit that it was a glorious sight to see, and one that did my heart great good. The rows were filled with monkeys, each with her little cotton sack around her neck, picking quietly, without any rush or confusion.

"When they got their sacks full they would run to the end of the row, where a man was stationed to empty them into the cotton basket, when they would hurry back to their work. The monkeys seemed actually to enjoy picking."

The cost of picking cotton with the aid of monkeys is only about one-third as much as with negro labor, and the cotton brings a higher price, being cleaner. As cotton-picking machines have been a failure in the South, there is great interest in the Smedes experiment.—"Youth's Companion."

A retired linendraper went into an English school one day and began putting the scholars through an examination in geography.

"What is the capital of 'Olland?" he asked.

"Capital H!" was the crushing rejoinder from the smart boy of the class.

MODEST APPEAL.

The attention of English-speaking visitors to the Milan Cathedral is readily attracted by the following notice, which appears over an alms-box:

"Appele to Charitables. The Brothers, so-called, of Mercy ask slender arms for the Hospital. They harbor all kinds of diseases, and have no respect to religion."

THE TRAIN AMONG THE HILLS.

Vast, unrevealed, in silence and the night
Brooding, the ancient hills commune with sleep.

Inviolate the solemn valleys keep Their contemplation. Soon from height to height

Steals a red finger of mysterious light,
And lion-footed through the forests creep

Strange mutterings; till suddenly, with sweep

And shattering thunder of resistless flight
And crash of routed echoes, roars to view,
Down the long mountain gorge the Night Express

Freighted with fears and tears and happiness

The dread form passes; silence falls anew.
And lo! I have beheld the thronged, blind world

To goals unseen from God's hand onward hurled.

SUMMER.

Though not often consciously recognized, perhaps this is the great pleasure of summer—to watch the earth, the dead particles, revolving themselves into the living case of life, to see the seed-leaf push aside the clod and become by degrees the perfumed flower. From the tiny mottled egg come the wings that by and by shall pass the immense sea. It is in this marvelous transformation of clods and cold matter into living things that the joy and hope of summer reside. Every blade of grass, each leaf, each separate floret and petal, is an inscription speaking of hope. Consider the grasses and the oaks, the swallows, the sweet blue butterfly—they are one and all a sign and token showing before our eyes earth made into life. So that my hope becomes as broad as the horizon afar, reiterated by every leaf, sung on every bough, reflected in the gleam of every flower. There is so much for us yet to come, so much to be gathered and enjoyed. Not for you or me, that every line in my face means pessimism; but in spite of my face—that is my experience—I remain an optimist. Time, with an unsteady hand, has etched thin, crooked lines, and, deepening the hollows, has cast the original expression into shadow. Pain and sorrow flow over us with little ceasing as the sea-hoofs beat on the beach. Let us not look at ourselves, but onward, and take strength from the leaf and the signs of the field. My heart is fixed firm and stable in the belief that ultimately the sunshine and the summer, the flowers and the azure sky, shall become, as it were, interwoven into man's existence. He shall take from all their beauty and enjoy their glory. Hence it is that a flower is to me so much more than stalk and petals. When I look in the glass I see he is indeed despicable who cannot look onward to the ideal life of man. Not to do so is to deny our birthright of mind.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THY WILL BE DONE.

My Father, give me strength to say,
"Thy will, oh Lord, not mine."
I feel my weakness, and I know
Thy power Divine.
As keen a pain as thrills my heart,
Thou, Christ, didst bear for me,
When cruel nails pierced Thy dear hands
Upon dark Calvary.
The cross is heavy, Lord, to bear;
Help me to see
It is not heavier than Thine,
Once borne for me.
The path of life is thorny, Lord,
But, pressed upon Thy brow,
Were sharper thorns; and so this pain
Thou, too, dost know.
The way is dark and lonely, Lord;
The end I cannot see;
But surely Thou in Thy great love
Wilt do the best for me.
I take the cross that Thou dost give;—
Thy will, not mine, be done.
Oh, make me in the likeness, Lord,
Of Thy dear Son.
The cup is not more bitter, Christ,
That to my lips is pressed,
Than Thou didst drink for me; and oh,
Thou knowest best.
Thy loving heart could not deny
The craving of my soul,
Unless 'twere best. So let Thy will
My will control.
Thou callest me to sacrifice
The dearest thing on earth;
And yet, compared with Thee, it is
Of little worth.
What matter if my life be dark
And desolate my way,
If through the darkness Thou dost lead
To endless day?
So, Father, with my hand in Thine,
I listen to Thy voice.
Choose Thou the path that I must tread,—
I would not have my choice.

What seemeth best to my poor heart
So sweet, oh God,—so dear,—
Might lead from Thee; so take it, Lord,
And keep me near.

Yes, Father, may Thy will be done,
Though bitter tears may flow;
Just why Thy hand on me is laid,
I do not know.
Heed not my pain and anguish, Lord,—
I would be Thine alone;
Take down the idol from my heart,—
Thyself enthrone.

Thou wouldst not take it from me, Lord,
If 'twere not best.
Oh, help me on this precious thought
My heart to rest.
My weary, wounded, storm-tossed soul
In Thee may find sweet peace;
Within the haven of Thy love
The storm shall cease.

A LESSON FROM A LIFE.

It is perhaps not wise or best that much comment should be made here upon the life and work of the noted agnostic, Robert G. Ingersoll, whose earthly career came to an end on the 21st of this month, but there is one solemn lesson which his life should teach us, and it seems right to point it out.

Those who have examined his treatment of the Christian religion are well aware that his attacks never reached the citadel itself at all; in fact, he never seems to have comprehended the real message and power of Christianity, and he was merely fighting a "man of straw" which he set up for Christianity, and, even if everything which he ever said had been true, it would still have left Christianity, as it is taught and embodied by Christ, unshaken and untouched. The most Ingersoll could do was to show that some positions which the church has held are ridiculous and weak—never that there is no power of God unto salvation in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

But, notwithstanding this fact, he has made a great impression upon the multitudes, and he has tremendously increased the number of those who call themselves infidels, or even atheists. He has, for a quarter of a century, stood as the mouthpiece for expressing and directing anti-religious views, and his influence in shaking the faith of weak and unthinking persons was incalculable. Nothing now can undo the harm which has been done, but we should ask the question, Why did this man become such a power for the destruction of faith? What made him an agnostic and a teacher of infidelity? The answer is a solemn one. His father, who was a minister, and whose theology was hard and rigid, was determined to make his son accept this faith, whether he liked it or not; whether it met the need of his soul or not. It was the old attempt to force the mind to take a doctrine whether it seemed reasonable or not, just as parents formerly gave all their children calomel for every ailment they might have, regardless of what they really needed. This young man refused the dose which was offered for his spiritual condition, and at once he was treated as a bad disbeliever. Such treatment only drove him to question more and more, and to conclude that the sort of religion offered to him was not true, and then to conclude that no religion was true.

If some Christlike man with the real spirit of the Master could have showed this young man the real meaning of the Gospel, and how it is adapted to the needs of every soul, and could have made him see that Christ draws men with love and never drives from behind, this brilliant mind might have become devoted to proclaiming the Christianity which he tried to bring into ridicule. This life might have led its thousands or its tens of thousands to Christ, if some wise teacher had come to help him in the time of his early spiritual difficulties and perplexities, when an unwise man was trying to force him to accept a thing which did not seem to him true, and which went against his nature. Instead of Ingersoll, the evangelist, we had Ingersoll, the agnostic.

Now, the lesson is plain. It is a Christian minister's business to enter into the intellectual and spiritual difficulties of young men. They should be treated with wisdom and tenderness, and it should be understood that nothing is gained by trying to force truth upon a mind which cannot see it. From the nature of the case, men must be drawn, not driven, and there is no higher service than to enter into a young man's difficulty intelligently and show how the truth makes free and how Christ himself leads into all truth.

THE TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

SOME of our English Friends have been deeply stirred over the condition of criminals in the Southern States, and they have been amazed that American Friends seemed to take little or no interest in the matter. It is a question which ought to arouse not only Friends, but all Christian people much more than it has done, and yet we all feel that the problem is such a difficult one that only an expert on the subject can talk intelligently upon it. The situation, briefly stated, is that the great proportion of criminals to tax-payers in some of these States has resulted in a demand for a cheap method of providing for these criminals, and the "chain-gang" and the "contract-system" have been adopted as the cheapest method of disposing of them. The prisoners are hired out to contractors for various kinds of work, and, where it seems necessary to do so, they are chained together to prevent desertion. It is claimed that many of these contractors are cruel and treat the prisoners much as though they were beasts, and reports further say that young persons of both sexes, especially young negroes, are sent to the chain-gangs for very slight offences. These chain-gangs are undoubtedly schools of vice, as a recent writer in "Harper's Weekly" says, and they have the effect of destroying what little manhood or womanhood—what little spark of a better self—was left in the convict. It is a system of punishment which is "cheap" for the State, to be sure, but it ends in making a total wreck of the poor creature it punishes, and a system which does that is dreadfully "dear" at any price. At present there is only one reformatory for young negroes in all the Southern States, though another is about to be opened in Virginia. The present crying need is the creation of more reformatories where young and unhardened offenders may be reformed and won back to lives of morality and usefulness. This is the way to solve the problem, and our philanthropists must realize that the way to abolish the dreadful "chain-gang" is to put a better and a Christian system in its place.

We must not forget the burden which the South is carrying, and the load which it is struggling under. There are masses of poor, ignorant and criminal-disposed population, while the men and women who have a fine, virile sense of righteousness and human brotherhood, together with the material means and the intellectual power for grappling with such complex and difficult problems, are not over-abundant. We must not be too ready to cast the stone when we find our delicate sense of the fitness of things shocked, but we must rather endeavor to help our Southern brothers work out satisfactorily their hard race and penal and educational problems.

THE UNIFORM DISCIPLINE.

THE Indianapolis Conference decided that a Uniform Discipline, and a plan for the closer union of the Yearly Meetings through a Central Body, should be prepared and submitted to the Yearly Meetings. For this service a committee of two from each Yearly Meeting was appointed. This committee chose a very small sub-committee to make the first draft. This has been, as every one will understand, a long and difficult task. It could not be made by merely hashing over again the old Disciplines of the American yearly meetings. Much of it had to be new and constructive work. At length the work on this draft is finished, and it has been sent in printed form to the members of the committee for examination, criticism and suggestion. When the reports are all in from the members of this committee, the original sub-committee will put it into its final shape, so that it can go directly to the yearly meetings. It is now expected that it will be ready for some of the yearly meetings this autumn. The committee is planning to take measures to put the draft before the members of the yearly meetings in such way that they will have plenty of opportunity to give it a careful, personal consideration, and go to yearly meeting with an enlightened and intelligent judgment upon it. Friends' Discipline is the result of hundreds of years of growth, and Discipline-makers must to a certain extent adapt their work to the situation which really exists in the church, though at the same time every new Discipline should be an educational and directing force, as it is hoped this one will prove to be.

CHURCH NOTES.

The British and Foreign Bible Society reports that the work of translation is in progress in not less than 120 languages. Through its 725 colporteurs last year 1,500,000 copies of the Scriptures were sold.

The Epworth League, which has been in National Convention at Indianapolis, was attended by 20,000 delegates. This is the fourth annual reunion of the League, and one of the most successful and enthusiastic.

It is announced that definite action is to be taken by the opponents of Dr. Briggs in the Episcopal Church. The aim is to accomplish the overthrow of the broad churchmen as a body, so that the church may no longer have to be responsible for their alleged looseness of belief and teaching.

The donations to the American Board have increased $40,270 in ten months, while the legacies in the same period fell off $57,363.

Details of a new railroad to cross the Holy Land have been received by Secretary Hay. The proposed capital is $50,000,000. The road will run from Haifa, a seaport town 75 miles south of Beirut, to Damascus, a distance of 142 miles. The project also includes an extension from Damascus to Bagdad and the Persian Gulf.

The Czar has sanctioned by imperial order the first official breach of the May (1882) Laws, which prohibited Russian Jews from settling in the villages, and thus prevented them from devoting themselves to agriculture. Baron Horace Gunzburg has set apart 1,350 acres of his estate in Bessarabia to the formation of a Jewish agricultural colony.

A dangerous phase of "Christian Science" is now threatening the public. Several instances have recently occurred where the followers of this cult have declared their disbelief in infectious and contagious diseases. Their open disregard of the usual precautions taken at such times is bringing them into further disrepute, and in time must subject them to police supervision.

The plans for the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York next spring, are advancing very satisfactorily, and everything points to a most successful gathering. Among noted personages who are expected to be present are Lord Overtoun and Lord Aberdeen. Copies of the prospectus of the Conference can be had from Ecumenical Conference Secretaries, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York city.

A factor to be reckoned with in the evangelization of France is a canal boat used in connection with the McAll Mission, "Le Bon Messager." In France, owing to the extended net work of canals, it is possible to travel 20,000 miles in the heart of the country by this means. The floating chapel seats 150, and wherever it stops the room is crowded with listeners. Intense interest everywhere attends its progress, and great good is accomplished by this unique method of work.

We may be sure that nothing will be so likely to make us miss the mark of the Divine glory as the habitual exercise of unworthy thoughts with regard to the Christian calling in general, or our personal vocation in particular. Faber says that it is as easy for the devil to contend against God with low views as with mortal sins. I think this is probably true, and that if it is true low views must be classed with the temptations that make for mortal sins. In the armory of the devil they are ranged alongside of the most biting and burning of his fiery darts.—J. R. Harris.

OUR EVANGELISTS.

BY E. HOWARD BROWN.

We have recently come in contact with quite a little opposition to evangelists and evangelistic work, the greatest objections being, first, that so much of the work done by them is only superficial; second, that many are converted to the evangelist, and the work left in such shape that the pastor cannot hold what has been gathered; third, the lack of sympathy on the part of the evangelist for the pastor; fourth, the lack of experience in living among men as a pastor and knowing their several difficulties and trials.

I do not write to deny these things, for they are true, but as an evangelist to help someone else and to keep many of our pastors from going to the other extreme. While these things are true, evangelists are not the only superficial workers. The cause may be due to different things. It may be a lack of sound and definite teaching; it may be that the evangelist has hurried them to claim what they have never received. Some are urged to ask for the baptism with the Holy Ghost who are not yet justified. Many lower the standard of justification to get to preach sanctification. There are evangelists who build themselves up by lowering the pastor in the eyes of his people, and by making them dissatisfied with him. There are some who shut themselves up in their rooms and who will converse, visit or try to help any one only in the meetings. There are those who pray all night for things they might reach during the day.

There is a tendency to ignore the evangelist because of these things and to require our pastors to be evangelistic pastors and hold their own revivals. We might as well try to ignore the pastor and do away with the pastoral system because some pastors have failed—some in pastoral visiting, some in getting the church to work, some in holding the attendance and in building up the church.

The early church recognized the gift of the evangelist, our church has always recognized it. There are many who can tell how clearly they have been called into pastoral work and urge the need of it; and some of us can tell how clearly God has called us into evangelistic work, and some of us only have the evangelistic gift. I was recorded an evangelist two years before I was recorded a minister, by Indianapolis Monthly Meeting. God recognized the gift, the church recognized it, and while there are many mistakes made and some sad ones, let us not ignore the gift of the evangelist. Every evangelist ought to be in harmony and unity with the church and her doctrines. Every evangelist ought to be in sympathy with pastoral work and know something of the pastor's difficulties.

Many times a revival is not at all due to the evangelist, but is the harvest of the pastor's labor. Every evangelist should mingle with the people and show himself sociable. Jesus Christ ate and drank with sinners (not for His own pleasure, but for their sake), and a true follower of Him will not lock himself up for self-gratification, either in sleep or prayer. He ought to be so saved and kept, so filled with the Spirit, that all the time possible might be given to the Master's business.

Don't unchristianize everybody who does not claim to be sanctified. Many times they are living better than those who do profess it. Don't neglect the poor and the sick. Above all else, stand by the pastor. Use the pastor. Counsel with the pastor. Make the people love the pastor. Help the pastor in everything possible to get hold of converts, so he may hold them and help them.

While we need more evangelistic pastors, I believe we need more pastoral evangelists. One or two years of hard pastoral work will be the making of an evangelist, and without he is not, and cannot expect to be, altogether successful. So much of this chasing from east to west, and stopping from two to ten days at a place, cannot help but create a restlessness and dissatisfaction in many churches—a kind of spiritual or religious anarchy. Therefore, let the modern evangelist be experienced, use good common sense and judgment, and be baptized and filled with the Holy Ghost, and led of Him in all things.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A SERIOUS LEAKAGE.

BY A CONCERNED FRIEND.

A recent editorial under the above heading has led me to give some thought to the subject. A careful examination of the membership record book of a meeting shows the following facts: A list of 395 members shows an actual leakage of 13 during the past year, and a future possible leakage of 90. Of these 103 persons the location of 4 has not been known for years. Of the other 99, 92 are birthright members; 3 were received by request, 2 adopted children at the request of their foster parents, and 2 by letter; 44 of these have never come under the influence of our meetings, having either lost their interest before they were received by certificate here, or else they do not reside near the meeting, their membership being sent because it was the nearest meeting; 31 others are minor children for the most part in families who are not interested. The present status of these members is about as follows: Thirty-nine within reach of our meeting but rarely attend our meeting or any other; 13 within reach of our meeting, but attend elsewhere, either by preference or because more convenient; 20 reside elsewhere, and so far as I am able to learn are not interested in any religious society; 22 reside elsewhere and are more or less interested in some other church; 18 are still more or less interested in our meeting, but their life is so absorbed either in business care or social pleasure as to make their case somewhat discouraging.

The causes of indifference in these members may be stated about as follows: Of those who attend other churches when they might their own—with five it is a matter of convenience; five have become tinctured with theosophy, Christian Science, etc., and attend their meetings; five have been led to other churches by school companionships; one prefers the quiet Wilbur meeting, and his wife, while preferring ours, does not think best to split the family; one other attends that meeting to please his wife, who is a member there. Of the others 40 moved away from friends because of business opportunities, and with about half of these business cares crushed whatever of religious life they may have had. Uncongenial home life set one adrift; a profligate father three others; four married companions who were not interested in religious things; three boys were permitted to distribute Sunday papers, taking them away from Bible School and into loose associations; three were educated away from the church; three became absorbed in fashionable society life and had no time or strength left for attending meeting. The two adopted children, though under earnest Christian care, developed hereditary tendencies toward profligacy of such a character that they had to be given up. Two of those who joined the church did so under a temporary impulse and have not maintained their interest. The three others who were not birthright members have moved away from us and have not taken their membership as yet. Of the large number whom we have received from outside Friends' Church, these five are all that seem likely to leave us, and so far as I know none of these have lost their Christian faith. A large number of those who have joined by letter or request are among our most useful and valued members.

Another fact worthy of note is that most of these indifferent members have come from meetings in this country and England that have been regarded as Quaker strongholds. They are the product of old Quaker method, or lack of method, and cannot be charged against modern innovations or aggressive movements. They are largely the residuary deposit of a birthright membership system. They are a source of weakness to the church, for as a tree cannot thrive if there be much dead wood, no more can the church. And yet it is difficult to remove them. They have committed no flagrant violation of discipline; they attend on rare occasions, such as are of special interest—e.g., quarterly or yearly meetings, funerals, or when some traveling friend of wide reputation appoints a meeting. They give occasionally small sums for church purposes. They don't like to be cut off, and they have relatives or friends among our more active members who are hurt if they are dropped. And so the church carries them as long as there is any hope, and when finally they reach the point of absolute indifference they are dropped from the records.

Are there any remedies for these evils? There are two subjects that are intimately connected with the difficulty—birthright membership and the growing tendency toward city life.

1st. Birthright membership. I am more and more convinced that birthright membership is inherently wrong. I find this conviction growing both in this country and England. If recent reports published in an English Friends' paper are correct, there are Friends over there who refuse to allow their children to be considered as members because they regard its influence as evil. I also notice in a recent article in the "British Friend" on this subject (a serious leakage) the same evils existing there as here, and our system of membership is spoken of as one of the causes.

Strange as it may seem in this intelligent age, there are many people who rest in the fact that their names are on the church records, when they know nothing of Christian life. We have no right to permit people to have an excuse for that idea. There are two principles that have become very clear to me: 1st. We ought not as a church to assume responsibility for children where the parents will not assume any responsibility in training them for Christ and the church; and 2d, active membership in a professed church ought to correspond—at least in theory—with membership in the real church of Christ, and depend upon the confession of faith and personal choice of the individual. Most other churches recognize these principles, and it is time for Friends to adopt them.

The mere fact of birth gives no right claim to membership. The children of the church ought to be considered, and consider themselves as the wards of the church. But to be the child of the church, the parents ought to request it and to publicly pledge themselves, with divine help, to train the child for Christ. Why is not such a pledge as vitally important as the vows taken in marriage? It lies at the very foundation of a true Christian home. When the church comes to emphasize it as it ought to be, there will be fewer marriages of believers with unbelievers where the two cannot stand side by side in this sacred covenant; there will be fewer prayerless homes, where parents undertake the duties and conflicts of daily life in their own strength; there will be fewer nominal members of the church and less of this "serious leakage." I believe also it will result in a larger membership and a better membership. When we strengthen our stakes we will have need to lengthen our cords.

Then, again, under the second principle mentioned above, we ought to distinguish between a ward of the church and a church member. Church membership ought to be a sacred obligation, assumed voluntarily, solemnly and publicly by the individual. When we assume to be a branch of the church of Christ, we falsify ourselves and dishonor Him by any lower standard. Perhaps as simply a "religious society" there might be some excuse for a membership that never confessed Christ, but yet were supposed to be religiously educated and religiously disposed. Heathen bodies may rightly call themselves religious societies. But when we profess to be a Christian church it radically alters the basis of membership. A religious society may certify as to the membership of any one who chooses to permit it, but when we give certificates asserting that a person is a member of the church who has never been willing to confess Christ, it is a falsehood upon its face. Friends have always been rigidly careful about the use of words, that they are strictly truthful. Unless we rectify this wrong, we are liable to fall under the denunciation of those who "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

I do not advocate any system that requires a decision at any specified age as to whether a member is going to remain a member or not. I plead for the recognition of a truthful relationship. Let us recognize wards as such whether they be five or fifty years of age; and a member as such from the time they intelligently become such until that relationship for any reason may cease. When we shall come to this basis the most potent cause of a serious leakage will have been removed.

2d. The movement of population from the country to cities.

Friends have largely been a church of the country. There they have gained their greatest victories. This fact has been one prominent cause of their independent, sturdy character. With the tide of population from country to city, many of our most energetic, active young people are taken away from our church influences. Had we churches in the cities where they go, maintained at the standard they ought to be, these members would be retained and add largely to our efficiency, both numerically and financially. As it is, probably less than half of them become actively connected with any church. The atmosphere and observances of other churches are so different from that in which they have been trained, that they fail to become actively interested, and drift away from church life. They often become prominent citizens. Generally they take pride in their Quaker ancestry and connections, and too often are of the class who trust and rest in these. There is probably not a large city in the country where there are not a hundred or more such people whose names are on our records somewhere. Have we not as a church a responsibility for these as well as a duty in the evangelization of city populations, and the carrying into these centers of influence those principles which, as Friends, we hold to be purer than those of any other people? The rapidly increasing population of our cities makes this question serious.

Unless we face this problem earnestly, and use our best judgment in its solution, our days are nearly numbered as a church. We cannot solve it as scattered communities. It will require a united organization. There must be a special adaptation to new circumstances, both in methods and workers. I do not say that we must be like and do like other churches. They are not satisfied that theirs is the best. This much is certain, however, that crudities and blunders of manner and matter that may be overlooked or excused in a country meeting, where every one knows and can make allowances for every one else, would destroy the success, if not the existence, of a city meeting.

It is not especially pertinent to this paper to discuss the city meeting, more than to point to the fact that the lack of it is a serious source of leakage; and that if this leakage is to be stopped we must not only have city churches, but they must be of a character worthy to hold our own and take their place as centers of influence in city life. I trust these subjects, which seem to me of vital importance to us at this critical time in our church history, may receive the best thought of our "weighty friends."

PENS.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

Millions of people use a pen thousands of times without giving any thought as to how it is made. Our grandfathers could tell exactly how every pen they used was made, and just what kind of a feather made the best. To-day we know all about some rare or sensational thing, but frequently entirely overlook the most common and useful ones. Because an article like a steel pen is so cheap we hardly think it worth our time to investigate. If the readers of this article should set out to construct all the machinery to make a single steel pen it would require about $50,000. Astonishing as this fact is to most of us, it may make the process of manufacturing pens more interesting.

Through the kindness of Alexander Wood, of the Esterbrook Steel Pen Co., the writer had the unusual privilege of inspecting the process of manufacturing pens. The raw material comes to the factory in the shape of hard steel straps. These are placed in crucibles and heated to the proper temperature to soften them. They are then annealed and cold rolled to the exact thickness and width to make the grade of pen desired. The steel straps are passed under the cutting machines, which are operated by girls, and a piece just the right size and shape drops out. If you will examine your pen you will see one or more holes in it. These are punched in the steel by dies that have been constructed by very skilled machinists, who receive about fifty dollars a week for their services. The piece of steel is now ready to be annealed. Each one must then be placed by hand in the machine that marks the name and number on it. If all the work thus far has been perfectly done (and no other kind of work will do at all) the piece of steel is placed in a machine which bends and crushes it into the shape we find it in the market. Thus far the process has been quite complicated but the more one studies the nice, smooth movement of a perfect pen the more difficult all these processes become.

They are now ready to be placed in a cylinder and properly tempered over a very hot fire. The amount of heat applied at this point produces the desired color of the pen. On examination we find they vary in color from a silver gray to a bronze. After being cooled, the pens go to a little room, where they are given an oil varnish bath and quickly dried.

All the rough edges are ground off by hand, and finally the point is split and the pen is complete. At last they go to the packing room and are counted by weight and packed in little boxes, as we see them in the market.

From the above we can see how easily we often overlook small things. How true this is in our everyday life. We neglect the little deeds of kindness and the little words of cheer because a single one does not amount to much.

THE MAKING OF A SAINT.

The character of any man is likely to be conceived wrongly, unless we have seen it in the making. We are apt to treat as natural elements in his make up what has been acquired by long struggling for the conquest of his baser self. If we contemplate George Herbert in the calm of his later years, and his unsparing devotion to the interests of his spiritual flock on the Salisbury plain, we naturally suppose him to have been a person of singular unworldliness, and a piety which sought nothing but God's service as his reward. But if we read between the lines of the autobiographic poems in his "Temple," we find that he was a man whom the world had drawn very strongly, and that he had his share of that Herbert temper of which we meet so much in his elder brother's autobiography. George Herbert, apart from divine grace and the conquest of himself that it made possible, might have become just such a man as Edward Herbert depicts himself. And any thoughtful man who compares the poems of the one with the narrative of the other must feel an almost infinite difference in the atmosphere of the two books, and in their effect on his own spirit.

A case nearly parallel is found in the Apostle John. We take the Apostle also on the record of his later years, when he wrote his great Epistle, and his still greater Gospel, and we not unnaturally project the great qualities of the veteran saint upon his whole life in our conception of it. We think of his nature as one in which the gentler affections abounded, and fancy that he had less difficulty than have most people in entering into his Master's thoughts and purposes of love. We speak of men of that disposition—Nander, for instance—as Johannine natures. And we thus fail to do justice to the triumph of divine grace in the Apostle's character, who, no less than Paul, might have said, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

The synoptic Gospels give us no reason for ascribing an especially affectionate and lovable character to any son of Zebedee. The appearances of the two brothers at the outset indicate nothing more than their comparative wealth. They leave the fishing-vessel in charge of their father and his hired servants when they follow Jesus. It was early in the third year of our Lord's ministry that the brothers exhibited their temper of mind by proposing to call down fire upon the Samaritan village. Our Lord treats the proposal, many ancient authorities say, not as an isolated or transient fact, but as a disclosure of character. He answers them, according to all the early translations, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." That he gave them the name "Sons of Thunder" was due, probably, to this occurrence. Toward the close of the year, as he was proceeding to Jerusalem to his passion, Salome made the request that her sons should have an especial place of honor in his kingdom. The sons seconded her request very heartily, and not in a way which indicated a loving spirit. It made the other apostles very angry, and thus showed that they also had not risen above the zealous, self-seeking spirit which Jesus bans and bars out of his kingdom. Both occurrences give us an impression of the sons of Zebedee which is not that of unusual amiability. Nor is there anything else in the Gospels to offset this. It is true that both were of the inmost circle of confidential apostles; but so also was Peter, who never has been supposed to have obtained that place through his amiable qualities. It also is true that John is described by himself five times as "that disciple whom Jesus loved," but never as "that disciple who loved Jesus" in any especial sense. "We love Jesus because he first loved us" (1 John 4: 19) may well have been an autobiographic reminiscence.

The height and power of love in Jesus cannot well have found their most impressive manifestation in his relation to one who at once and easily responded to his affection. As of his love to mankind, so it must have shown itself to individuals whose unloveliness made it remarkable to those who witnessed it. The neglect of this fact has led many to infer that the disciple whom Jesus loved must have been naturally lovable. Had he been so, neither that disciple nor his associates would have been impressed as they were by our Lord's affection for him. It was because he took a naturally harsh, self-seeking, and impatient nature, and lavished his wealth of affection upon it, that men made note of the outgoing of his gentleness and patience. It was upon the disciples who would have crushed the village, its women, its children, and its dumb beasts, under the fires of wrath, that Jesus lavished his long-suffering love. It was to one who would have pressed himself to the front in despite of others' claims, that Jesus taught the love which envieth not, vaunteth not itself, seeketh not its own, endureth all things.

Look at the matter in the light of our Lord's training the Twelve for their apostolate. A wise and loving teacher is sure to fasten upon the most unpromising scholar in the class, and to make a point of bringing that scholar to a proper understanding of the subject in hand. It is the mark of a weak teacher to feel and show most interest in those who get on the quickest. So Jesus seems to have dealt with this son of thunder, this fire-finger, this throne-asker, who had so much to learn before he would be fit for his work.

The result in John's gentle and affectionate old age is the fruit of grace, not of nature. He has become the loving John, who writes "the Gospel of the heart of Christ" because he has been brought so near that heart by Jesus' loving care. Grace has triumphed in him. The fruit which once was so bitter and acid is now mellow and sweet. They carry him to the church in Ephesus when he is too weak to walk. They hold him up in presence of the people when he is too feeble to stand. The last of the Twelve repeats to them the same sermon Sunday after Sunday, and it is simply "Little children, love one another." "Why tell us that again and again?" they ask. "Because this is enough, that is all." Love is enough.

And what our Lord did in John he can do in us. He can take us, in all our defects and deformities, and make us a proverb for perfection in the very qualities we lack the most. He can make a Herbert a marvel of patience and unworldliness. He can make a John, through his love, the disciple who loved Jesus and all the flock of Jesus with a love that is modeled after his Master's own.—“Sunday School Times.”

EXTREMES IN THE MINISTRY.

In studying the words or command of the Master, “Fill the waterpots with water,” I was reminded of a conversation with William Wetherald some twenty-five years ago. He had been at a Monthly Meeting in Farmington, and spoken in the business meeting very forcibly on the subject of pernicious literature and its poisonous effects. A day or two afterwards we were on the cars, bound for the General Meeting at Poughkeepsie. Noticing his close attention to a magazine in his hands, I jokingly remarked to him, “What, William! reading pernicious literature?”

With a motion of the hand, he said: “Alexander, sit down here,” and doing so, he said: “This is ‘Harper’s Magazine,’ and I am reading a very interesting account of incidents in the travels of Dr. Livingstone in Africa, and I find it food for thought in connection with the heathen and mission work. I am putting it away in the storehouse of my mind, not with the intention of using it at any particular time, nor have I any idea now of preaching on that subject on any set occasion; but some time, or on some occasion when the mission work is being discussed or the Spirit leads me to preach upon that subject, I shall be better prepared to present it.”

I replied: “Yes, that’s it. ‘Fill up the waterpots with water,’ and when He gives the command, ‘Draw out now and bear to the governor of the feast,’ it will then become the wine of the kingdom.”

“Yes,” he replied. “I believe in a certain preparation for the ministry; that is, to store our minds with as much profitable information as it is possible to do, and, trusting in the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we shall then be instructed, well prepared for His work.”

“But, William, thou dost not preach on all thou reads?” he replied, smilingly, and pointing to his brain, “Fill the waterpots with water,” and when He gives the command take therefrom.”

Blessed words, indeed, and on these and the thoughts or principles therein contained is the pith of true spiritual Christian ministry, and to my mind the minister who ignores it is and will be lacking in spiritual power and success.

Too many in these days who are depending on prepared sermons and their manuscript will not step out on God’s promises, and practically illustrate true faith and trust.

I am satisfied from over forty years’ experience and observation with and among Friends’ ministers, that there are two extremes, both of which, I believe, are enormous, and beget poverty to the souls of both speakers and hearers. One—and too common to-day, especially with Friends, so-called—is mapping out, planning and fixing up sermons beforehand, and even announcing subjects to be preached upon, and the other, too over-cautious in their ministry, fearing to study up on Bible subjects or think upon and thoroughly digest texts of Scripture that come to them, for fear of making improper preparations in their ministry, and thus not depending entirely upon the Lord, forgetting that one may be lazy in mind as well as in body, and that God will not use successfully such kind of instruments. To such comes the command, “Fill up thy waterpots” in answer to the words, “They have no wine,”—that is, observe, read, think, study, converse, pray—and last, but not least, trust in the leadings and guidings of the Holy Spirit.

Palmyra, N. Y.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

“OUR THOUGHT OF GOD.”

BY JUDGE J. M. WASHBURN.

For more than thirty years I have been more or less a reader of the teaching, theology and lives of the Society of Friends. As I read the style of this paper, at the head of the first article in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of Third month 30th, 1899, I had a desire to write a short article on the subject, believing that the article of that date relates to the arch stone in the temple of Christianity. If one will mingle with myriads of professing Christian people of all names, he cannot help seeing, if he possesses spiritual discernment, a wide gulf between what they profess to be and hope they are, and what they are, by real spiritual discernment, perceived to be.

There is no implication here that persons mean to dissemble. It is implied only that they do not understand themselves. A man’s material organization is not the man. That is matter. Man is a spiritual being. In his spiritual nature he is dual. He is constituted of will and understanding. The will receives love and life from God. The understanding receives truth from God. In a state of evil the will and the understanding are divided. In that state men see and know (largely) what is right and what is wrong. They see and know by truth in the understanding. But if the will is evil it does not love the truth in the understanding; will not choose the truth and will not follow the light of truth in the understanding. And so here rises a division in the empire of the soul which ought to be “the kingdom of God.”

Truth is a spiritual substance. Jesus says, “I am the truth.” Love is a spiritual substance. “God is love.” Now Jesus and God are not two infinite Beings; because if they are, they are two Gods. But every constituent of the Infinite is infinite. And Jesus is infinite truth. God is infinite love. Truth is the Form; love fills the form, and is one with it. A spiritual form is not distinct from what it contains. Jesus and God are one, as in the original, “I and the Father are one.” So to express it, Jesus contains God; or Infinite love is in infinite truth.

Re-generation is a re-birth from God. It is a birth.

It is analogous to the natural birth. There is a conception. From the conception there is growth of the spiritual embryo. Finally, there is a spiritual birth; a child is born out of the Lord Jesus Christ. God is the Lord, Jesus, Christ. The spiritual child is a child of God—is born out of the Lord, Jesus, Christ. The spiritual child derives its nature, its disposition and its spiritual body from the Lord, Jesus, Christ.

God is trinal. Man is trinal. Man has "the image and likeness of God"—the understanding and the will. And these are in a third part of man—the part of him that lives in this world—"the natural man," as Paul calls him.

Christianity is the regeneration of each of the three parts of man. All three parts are not regenerated at once; there is the conception, the growth to the preparation, and then the birth. This process is expressed in Matthew 3: 11 by three baptisms; regarding each one as spiritual, the first symbolized by the element of water, as it purifies from filth.

The first of these baptisms is intended to regulate the passions, the appetites, the lusts in "the natural man." This baptism is truth ministered from Christ, or it is the anointing of the mind, in order to wash it from the grosser sins. It leads "to repentance," and a turning to Jesus—fuller life.

The second baptism is from Jesus; and "Jesus saves his people from their sins." Man is the spiritual temple of God. In the temple are "three courts." The second baptism is inauguration into the second court, "the holy place." When this court is open, it has in it "truth and love." The result is a divided empire in the soul. Love does not control. Truth contends with love for dominion in the man not yet fully regenerated. The state in the soul is, "When I would do good evil is present with me." The spiritual child is not yet born.

"The baptism of fire" is the baptism of Divine love—it is heavenly fire. This is ministered from God, who is love. In the Old Testament the Lord is called Jehovah; in the New, Lord and God are the same. So the three baptisms give a threefold birth. One is to regenerate the natural man; the second creates "the image of God" in man; the third creates "the likeness of God" in man. And the three are a spiritual birth out of the Father, the Son of God, and the Son of man, the same as the Lord Jesus Christ. Here is the real spiritual birth.

In the soul of this man there is no spiritual conflict. His thoughts are one with his feelings. His will and his understanding are one, or in harmony; and both are one with the will of God. The person is born of God, and lives in God and from Him. "The kingdom of God" is within him and he is in the kingdom of God. God rules over him and reigns in him. His will his thought, his feelings and emotions are in harmony with each other, and in harmony with God.

God's love and life and truth are in him as his love and life and truth. He is "made partaker of the Divine nature." "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for His seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."

For more than a score of years I have regarded such a spiritual state as this to be simple Christianity. And as I understand, such was the spiritual state of many of the early Friends. There may not be many in this state now. It is not much taught; and when it is attempted to be taught the teaching is not very clear and well expressed.

I would like to see your paper take the like ground here expressed, so as to lay a true Christian life before the minds of its readers. It is a great need of the age, when Christendom is much agitated and we have a war with a semi-barbarous people. I have been considering this matter for more than a quarter of a century, the life itself not being a theory, but an experience, with me.

Denver, Col.

A MODOC FRIEND.*

"Uncle George," as he was familiarly and lovingly called by his neighbors during the latter years of his life, was one of the fifty-five Modoc braves, who for several weeks withstood a thousand United States troops in and near the lava beds of Oregon, twenty-six years ago.

When the band surrendered, he, on account of the killing of a white man under circumstances which caused it to be considered murder, was condemned to be hung.

Standing on the gallows, in company with Captain Jack and others, the ropes already looped around their necks, they were given the privilege of speaking for themselves.

George's speech seems so to have influenced the officers that he was taken from the gallows, and his sentence changed to imprisonment for life. After spending three years in his island prison he was pardoned and sent to his friends at Camp Modoc.

Under the instruction of the missionaries—Asa and Emeline Tuttle, I think—he soon accepted Jesus as his Saviour, took the straight pathway of a Christian life, and with unfaltering step and eyes ever fixed on the goal, pursued it to the end.

Always in his place at meeting, unless providentially hindered, his earnest prayers and cheering words of testimony and exhortation, though delivered in Modoc, were a rich blessing, not only to his own people, but to us all; and even when his words were not interpreted they seemed to bring a blessing. His life ever harmonized with his profession. The savage warrior had put on Christ, and manifested Him forth in all his words and acts. During the course of his last sickness, which lasted six months, we were privileged to care for him under our own roof for about six weeks. During that time we never detected anything in word or act that did not honor his profession. Always patient, loving, gentle and polite in the highest sense of the word his care was a privilege rather than a burden.

*Died, at his home on the Modoc Reservation, Indian Territory, Seventh month 21st, 1899, George Denny, a member and elder of Grand River Monthly Meeting.

A short time before his death, when I called on him, asking how he was, he laid his hand on his breast and said with a pleasant smile and cheery tone, "All light (all right), all light here."

Funeral services were held at the close of our monthly meeting, and it seemed appropriate that Uncle George, who was always at monthly meeting here while he lived, should be brought even in death. The funeral text was, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

EZEKIEL'S GREAT VISION.

Ezek. 37: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I will put my spirit within you.—Ezek. 36: 27.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 7.—Ezekiel's Vision. Ezek. 37: 1-14.

Third-day, Eighth mo. 8.—Promise of Restoration. Ezek. 37: 20-28.

Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 9.—All Have Sinned. Ezek. 22: 23-31.

Seventh day, Eighth mo. 12.—Quickened by the Spirit. Rom. 8: 1-11.

First-day, Eighth mo. 13.—From Death to Life. Eph. 2: 1-10.

The present lesson has always been considered as one of the most striking pictures in the Old Testament. It is, it must be remembered, wholly allegorical; and the prophet clearly means that it should be regarded as a vision.

Some have thought that this vision is intended not only to illustrate the restoration of the Jews, but also the resurrection of the body. It seems, however, unlikely, as the prophet himself, in verses 11 and 12, distinctly says, that the bones represent the people of Israel who were living at the time he spoke.

His prophecy is one of the resurrection of the nation, and in idea it somewhat resembles the thought of Hosea (6:2; 13: 14). The nationality was dead, and its bones were scattered and dry. The people in captivity appear to have had but little hope of a restoration, and their feelings are expressed in the words, "Our bones are dry, our hope is gone, we are ruined" (Verse 11.) Under such circumstances the prophet sounds his word of encouragement. As in the last lesson, we learned the only condition under which restoration was possible—change of heart,—so in this lesson the power which is only able to bring about such a lesson is illustrated by a vision.

1. "Hand of the Lord." The communication of the prophetic impulse, the prophetic ecstasy. "In the spirit of the Lord." Indicating that what he saw and heard was in a vision.

2. "Open valley." That is on the surface of the valley. "Very dry." This is to show that there was absolutely no life in them. The interpretation of the prophet is given in verse 11, which may be considered here. "Our bones are dried," etc. As a nation the Jews were dead. Hope was dead. This feeling is found in other prophets. Compare Isa. 40: 27; 42: 18-22; 49: 14; Lam. 3: 45-47, etc. "Cut off for our parts." "We are clean cut off." Revised Version. "The whole house of Israel." Here the prophet refers to the inhabitants of Judah and Benjamin, who had been carried into captivity, and who represent the true Israel.

3. "Son of man." This expression is used ninety times in Ezekiel, and perhaps its meaning would be clearer if read "child of man." It expresses the contrast between the prophet, as one of mankind, and the majesty of God." It is never used by Ezekiel of himself, but always when he is addressed by Jehovah. "Can these bones live?" Is life possible to such dried up bones? "Thou knowest." The prophet in his humility could not answer no, though it was contrary to experience and all human understanding that such a thing could be possible. Compare Rev. 7: 14.

4. "Prophecy." "Speak forth." A good illustration of this meaning of the word prophecy—the meaning which it so often has in the New Testament. See Acts 21: 4; Rom. 12: 6; 1 Cor. 13: 7; 14: 1; 24, 31, 39; 11: 4; 14: 6; 1 Thess. 5: 20; 1 Cor. 12: 28; Eph. 4: 11, etc. "Word of the Lord." The message of the Lord sent through the prophet.

5. "Breath." The breath of life. Compare Gen. 2: 7.

6. They were to be complete men, having all that which makes a perfect man, including souls. "Ye shall know." This miracle will be followed by a knowledge that all this is the work of the Lord.

7, 8. The prophet obeyed the word of the Lord, and in his vision he saw the accomplishment of that which the Lord had told him would come to pass. They were complete bodies, but they lacked souls.

9. "Then." After the coming together of the bones and the "coming up of the flesh." "Prophecy." Speak unto. "Wind." In Hebrew the same word is used for spirit, and for "breath," as for "wind"; this is also the case in many other languages. "Come from the four winds." "A symbol of the universal life-giving spirit of God." "Upon these slain." "Into these dead bodies that they may live."

10. "So I prophesied." The prophet, as before, in his vision does what the Lord commanded; the life came into the inanimate bodies and they became living beings, and "stood up," not simply a great body of men, but an army, ready to do valiant service.

11. See above.

12. The figure is somewhat changed here. The people are regarded now as buried, and they are called from their graves, but the figure still applies to the people as a nation, as the words "bring you into the land of Israel" imply.

13. This verse corresponds with verse 6.

14. "And shall put my Spirit in you." The figure of putting breath into the bodies is here explained. It is the Spirit of the Lord—this only can give life. Psal. 104: 30. It is clear that it is the life-giving spirit which is here spoken of, or rather the spirit in its life-giving work. Compare Ezek. 36: 27, where it is rather the Spirit in his regenerating, guiding character.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. No one is so dead in sin that he cannot be raised to life by the power of God.
2. "The word of the Lord." The message from God to the human, no matter in what way or through what means it may come.
3. It is only as men receive the power that God gives, and use it that they can conquer sin and resist temptation.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

The Christian Endeavorers of Oregon Yearly Meeting have succeeded this year in making an organization of a Union, under which we hope to accomplish more for the church on this coast. Our session during the yearly meeting was an inspiring one, in which old and young participated. An excellent paper on the blessings and privileges of the Quiet Hour was read by Miss Julia S. White, and an address on "Christian Endeavor as a Practical Force in Oregon Yearly Meeting" was given by Herbert T. Cash. He showed how Quakerism and Christian Endeavor tally, and what a power young Friends as Christian Endeavorers might be in the kingdom of Christ.

The Union spreads over a very wide territory now, as we received the new society at Boise City, Idaho. May God help us to occupy the fields that are ours.

THE TWO LIVES.

Beautiful is old age—beautiful is the slow drooping, mellow autumn of a rich and glorious summer. In the old man nature has fulfilled her work; she loads him with the fruits of a well spent life; and, surrounded by his children's children, she rocks him softly away to a grave to which he is followed with blessings.

God forbid we should not call it beautiful, but not the most beautiful. There is another life, hard, rough and thorny, trodden with bleeding feet and aching brow; the life of which the cross is the symbol; a battle which no peace follows this side the grave, which the grave gapes to finish before the victory is won; and, strange that it should be so, this is the highest life of man. Look along the great names of history; there are none whose life has been other than this.—"Christian Work."

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Pauperizing the Rich," by Alfred J. Ferris. 426 pp. T. S. Leach & Co. Philadelphia, 1899.

This volume presents an attempt to set forth a remedy for some of the evils of the existing social régime which are presumably directly traceable to the glaring inequalities in the distribution of wealth. The author believes that the wealthy leisure class, so far as it is made up of members who have inherited and not earned their wealth, belongs just as truly on the world's list of receivers of charity as the dependent class in the slum districts of our great cities, and consequently is just as much of a burden to society. The great diseases of society—chief among which is the absence of equal opportunity to all—are due to the fact that the former class secures too much and the latter not enough at the hands of charity. The only thing required to make success inevitable to the man in the most wretched conditions of human existence is to give him an endowment which will afford him a lease for life on food, shelter and clothing. The funds for this endowment are to be secured by a tax, placed upon the well-to-do members of society, and especially by the confiscation from the rich man of all property accumulated above that amount which is necessary to provide food, clothing and shelter for his children. All good things will follow to society if this plan be adopted. Equal opportunity for all, abolition of the conflict between labor and capital and between rich and poor, one common high level of culture and refinement for the entire community, and the rest, are all promised. This is the essence of the book.

The author takes pride in calling himself a disciple of Henry George, and, like his master, avowedly makes an attempt to reconstruct the science of political economy. Very few students of that science and of social problems will admit that he has succeeded in his ambitious task. He seems to be laboring under a not uncommon misapprehension among reformers that a change in some parts of the machinery of the present social organization will effect results attainable only through the slow and painful process of better character-building. There is, however, much here that is suggestive and worth reading, and that gives evidence of considerable observation and research, but one must bring his patience to bear sufficiently to extract it from the mass of material with which it is surrounded. D. C. BARRETT.

"A Dictionary of the Bible." By John D. Davis, Ph.D., D.D., Professor of Semitic Philology and Old Testament History in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1898. 802 pp. $2.00.

A much-needed work seldom appears more opportunely. The very unusual acquisitions in Biblical research of many years have of late called loudly for the recasting of the facts in more comprehensive, yet conveniently concise, text-books and reference books. There is not in the English language to-day a reliable

Biblical history abreast of the times and within proper compass to serve the demands of students of the Bible in the home, the Bible School, and various Christian associations, and in the Biblical courses of schools and colleges. Even so, the Bible dictionaries of suitable size and price for general use were out of date and inadequate to the needs of all Bible students when the volume before us appeared. But here is a thorough work by a thoroughgoing Biblical and Oriental scholar, with two competent collaborators. It contains well written articles on all the more important words of the Bible, and also on many topics in the larger field of Biblical literature and Biblical history. In short, it contains what one should expect in a Bible dictionary. When one thinks of the volume of current Biblical and Oriental literature and criticism, the labor lavished on this work and the degree of scientific accuracy attained are simply surprising. The articles on "Creation," "Flood," "Sabbath," and many less significant words, receive competent and careful treatment, bringing the author's large and diversified scholarship under contribution. The subject "Chronology" is handled quite satisfactorily and comprehensively, considering its very difficult problems. The transcription, spelling and meaning of proper names are marks of real excellence, and the new and superior maps and illustrations, many of them made especially for this work, are of great value. The work goes beyond the Biblical books in both the old and new versions, and includes 1 Maccabees in the Apocrypha, as throwing much light on the period between the Old and New Testaments, a period affording little reliable information, but one now receiving increasing attention. Many students of the Bible will welcome the full and carefully prepared article on "History," which will go far towards compensating for the above-noted lack of a satisfactory Biblical history. Indeed, this outline, with a competent instructor and suitable reference books, will serve classes capable of research quite as well as a text-book. It must also be said that the articles on the books of the Bible are ably written, and with surprising completeness and compactness. Questions of literary criticism could, of course, not be discussed at length. But the author's conservative views have been set forth clearly and cogently, and with a wholesome moderation, and the objections fairly stated and their weakness shown. This work is often necessarily done in a somewhat summary manner, but it will generally be regarded as satisfactory to those convinced of the credibility of the Holy Scriptures. Although present-day well-attested facts of Biblical science are seldom overlooked, it is a great advantage to have a work which will doubtless be generally used so free from current conjectures and consequent contradictions, which, while they are the natural and unavoidable products of a progressive scholarship, too often appear in magazines and books as the ultimate conclusions of science. Of course no single volume can be expected to entirely satisfy profounder scholars in place of the more comprehensive and expensive Bible dictionaries, like that of Hastings, yet to be completed in four volumes, by a number of able writers of different points of view and oftentimes contradicting views.

News from the Field.

The Spanish literature which has gone out from the Friends' mission in Mexico is bearing fruit in Cuba. For many years this stream of literature has been kept running, and many Cubans have been helped by it.

The item from Marshalltown, Iowa, in our issue of Seventh month 13th, appealing for money to better the condition of the people of Cuba, should have added that contributions may be sent to Mary J. Mendenhall, 2052 South First Street, Marshalltown, Iowa.

John Henry Douglas is still laboring in the State of Indiana. At the present time he is attending the Bible Institute at Earlham College.

Prof. Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, is arranging to give courses of lectures on Bible subjects in any part of the country where his services may be desired, during the school year of 1899-1900.

Mention was made in our issue of Seventh month 13th that women Friends did not appear on the program of the Earlham Bible Institute. The committee makes the following statement on the subject, which will considerably enlighten those who made the criticism: "We deem it proper to give the information that three prominent women Friends were selected to serve on the program, and one accepted, but finally all three declined for various reasons to serve. We have no doubt their reasons were good, for all are loyal to the cause and very worthy women. But, after they declined, there was not good opportunity to secure other suitable women in their stead. Two very worthy and prominent women are on the program, though they are not Friends. The committees in charge of the Institute have several women on them, and men and women are united in the desire to promote the ministry and service of women equally with that of men, and to maintain the righteous standard of equality of the sexes."

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Portland Monthly Meeting of Friends was held at Portland, Ind., Seventh month 22d, 1899.

All the meetings were represented. Two made written reports and two gave verbal reports on the state of society.

The statistical secretaries made a complete report of the membership.

William W. Watts, wife and daughter, were granted certificates of removal to White Oak Monthly Meeting.

The time of holding the monthly meeting in Eighth, Ninth and Tenth months next ensuing will be at 1.30 p.m., instead of 10.30 a.m., with a hope that a larger attendance may be had from both city and country.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

A sub-committee visited the Blue Ridge Mission of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, Sixth month 27-30, and carried into effect a change of the caretakers there, Samuel R. Pickett and wife taking charge in place of J. Addison Griffiths and wife, who have held the position for four years and who now leave for other work. The importance of the Mission still impresses us, and we hope that the yearly meeting and all its friends will be disposed to sustain the efforts of the new managers and the committee. Our annual report will soon be before the yearly meeting.

Since that visit the new Surry Quarterly Meeting has been held at the Mission, which has been arranged to occur once in two years. It was a harmonious and interesting occasion. Beside our own members, some of whom drove twenty-four miles, we had the company of James R. Jones, lately returned from his visit across the Atlantic.

When the new term of school opens our friend, Lorena Reynolds, will assist Brother Pickett in the teaching.

The committee desires that all parcels intended for the Mission shall be directed in care of David E. Sampson, Superintendent, Mt. Airy, N. C., with notice mailed to him at East Bend, N. C.

On behalf of the committee,

JOEL G. ANDERSON, Chairman.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Yorktown Heights, New York.—In obedience to a God-given concern Eli G. Parker and wife were here about ten days, when, on account of the illness of Mary Parker's mother, they left for Spiceland, Ind. The gift of prophecy was daily exercised, and people acknowledged that God speaks to states and conditions to-day as well as in former years. The meeting was brought to see its relations to God and its duty to man. The meeting is now on the basis of individual responsibility to the great Head of the church, and those who had been grinding in the prison-house of formality and selfishness saw the liberty there is in Christ Jesus and are now in the secret place of the Most High. Truly the Gospel was preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. With thanks to our Heavenly Father for sending His servants among us, we pray He will continue to use them to His glory and blessings to many of His children. EDGAR L. REQUA.

Cornwall Quarterly Meeting was held at Clintondale, New York, the 19th and 20th of Seventh month. Lindley Stevens, Elmer D. Gildersleeve and Mary S. Knowles were in attendance and had helpful service.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Edgar P. Ellyson has been holding tent meetings in Kanawha, a new town in Hancock County, Iowa, on the extension of the Iowa Central Railroad from Belmond to Algona. A meeting was organized during the time of his meetings of thirty-three members. Three months ago work was commenced on the railroad, at which time there was no town nearer than ten miles from this place. The construction train reached the town the 19th inst. and found a town of thirty houses, almost all kinds of business being represented and a Friends' Meeting organized and plans under way for a meeting house. Jessie Perisho has been located there as pastor, and the work bids fair to be a fruitful field for Friends. Edgar P. Ellyson closed his meeting here on the 29th ult. and went to Okoboji, where, assisted by Harry Hays, he expects to hold a meeting.

Greenville Quarterly Meeting was held at Spencer, Seventh month 7th, 8th and 9th. Z. L. and Susie J. Martin were in attendance. Z. L. Martin visited Friends at Greenville and Annaville, encouraging them in the building of a new meeting house at Annaville. A new railroad being built there, this neighborhood is bringing to Friends added responsibilities in increased opportunities that they are anxious to meet. Brother Martin went from here to Kanawha, in Hancock County, to encourage the organization of a church there.

Some few months ago word came to the superintendent of Greenville Quarterly Meeting that there were two families of Friends in Sheldon who wished a meeting. The field was looked over, a young minister sent there, the quarterly meeting paying the expense. A house was secured in which to hold a Sabbath school and meeting. The prospects are hopeful for an open door for Friends. Sheldon is a town of 2,500 inhabitants, in Obrien County. There are many places in Iowa where like doors might be opened by Friends who are located there if they would prove as loyal to the church and as zealous for God as are these Friends in Sheldon.

Edwin Loft and James Pickard are holding tent meetings at Batavia, Iowa. Friends are expecting to arrange a meeting in that new field.

Z. L. Martin attends the dedication of a new meeting house at Cedar, in Mahaska County, the 23d instant. This is a new work started this year by H. Kenworthy and others.

The new meeting house in Lynville, Iowa, is nearing completion, and Friends hope to get it ready for Quarterly Meeting, to be held there second Seventh day in Eighth month.

Marshalltown, Iowa.—Readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will probably remember that some time since the points in Iowa at which Dr. Bunce and Lewis I. Hadley, evangelists, were to hold tabernacle meetings, were given. They are going forward with these meetings successfully. Their meeting at Creston, a two days' meeting on the 4th of Seventh month at a point called Talmage, and their meeting in Marshalltown, were crowned with great blessing to the people. More than one hundred souls professed to have been definitely blessed at these services, thus proving that men and women may be saved in July and August as well as amid the frosts of winter. Their work, in point of thoroughness goes above the ordinary. E. B. MENDENHALL.

THE ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The minutes of the late annual meeting of this committee, together with summary reports of its work for the year ending Fifth month last, have lately been printed and are in the hands of all delegates to the committee from the several yearly meetings, for distribution amongst interested Friends.

Continuous work under the care of the Associated Committees is now in its thirty-first year. As heretofore the aid and sympathy of Friends generally are much desired by those upon whom the responsibilities of the work rests. It may be added that there seems to be a call at this time for some religiously concerned Friends to associate themselves with some of our stations in Indian and Oklahoma Territories as missionaries.

THE BI-CENTENNIAL OF DARTMOUTH MONTHLY MEETING, MASSACHUSETTS.

For several years previous to the year 1699, members of the Society of Friends had been settling within the limits of the town of Dartmouth, one of the leading townships of the old Plymouth Colony. Their numbers increased from year to year, and at the close of the century they felt that the time had arrived for the establishment of a Monthly Meeting of their own. Consequently they applied to the superior meeting, and asked to be set off from Rhode Island Monthly Meeting, to which they at that time belonged, and in this connection the following minutes are of interest:

"At a general yearly men's meeting at the house of Latham Clarke, in Newport, on Rhode Island, the 9th day of the Fourth month, being the 6th day of the week in the year 1699, before the public meeting of worship began. . . .

"Dartmouth Friends desire to be a Monthly Meeting apart from Rhode Island, and to have one day more added to their Yearly Meeting. . . . Seventh-day the meeting being together met, proceeded as followeth: It is agreed by order and consent of this meeting that the second day of the week be for the business and service of the meeting for the future, and that two Friends from each Quarterly Meeting, and where no Quarterly Meeting two or more from each Monthly Meeting, to attend the service of the Yearly Meeting till the business is ended, and as many other sober Friends hath freedom."

"The desire of Friends of Dartmouth to be a Monthly Meeting apart from Rhode Island, and to have one day more added to their Yearly Meeting, is granted and approved by this meeting. It is the desire of this meeting that Friends of Dartmouth and Narragansett Meetings do consider of and appoint days and times for keeping of Monthly Meetings for business in order to compose and make one Quarterly Meeting to be kept at Rhode Island, and to bring in their result to this meeting next Second-day."

"Second-day, the 12th of the month. The Friends of Dartmouth hath agreed that their monthly men's and women's meeting of business shall be the next Second-day after the Monthly Meeting of worship at the house of Peleg Slocum, to which this meeting doth unanimously consent and agree. . . ."

Their desire having been granted, the next step was the building of a meeting house, and this matter had claimed their attention several months before the setting up of the Monthly Meeting, so that when the latter event occurred, the house was nearly completed.

On the 6th day of the Eleventh month, 1698, O. S., or First month, 1699, N. S., several members of the Society met at the house of John Lapham, in Dartmouth, and decided to erect a meeting house, as appears by the following agreement:

At a man's meeting in the Town of Dartmouth the 6: day of the 11 month 1698-9, at the house of John Lapham, wee under-written, Peleg Slocum, Jacob Mott, Abraham Tucker and John Tucker, the day and year above written undertake to build a meeting house for the people of God, in Scorn Called Quakers, 35 foot long, 30 foot wide and 14 foote studds, To worship and serve the true and Living God in according as they are persuaded in Contience they Ought to Do, and for no other use, Interest or Purpose, but as aforesd, and when one or more of us decease, then immediately the survivors Choose others in our room, together with the consent of the assembly of the said people, so to be and Remain to us and them forever as aforesd, which sd House shall be compleatly finished at or before the 10 day of the 8 month next Insuing the date herof.

In witness here to wee subscribe our names with our own hands. And further we of the said Society of people towards the building of said House of our free will Contribute as followeth: £ s.

John Tucker	10
Peleg Slocum.....	15
John Lapham	05
Nathanel Howland	05
Abraham Tucker.....	10
Increases Allen	3	12
Ebenezer Allen	05
Eleazer Slocum	03
Jacob Mott	03
Benjamin Howland.....	02
Richard Evens	01
Judah Smith	01

We have no means of ascertaining the total cost of the building, and we learn that additional amounts were collected at subsequent times to meet the expense.

This meeting house was removed in 1790, after a service of 91 years, and the present building erected in the same year.

The opening records of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting are dated Fourth month (June) 26th, 1699, and the anniversary exercises were held on Seventh month 5th, 1899, when a company of between 300 and 400 people assembled at this ancient and time-honored spot. An adjournment of the Monthly Meeting was held at 11.30 a.m., followed by lunch, and the subsequent exercises were held in the old meeting house at 1 p.m.:

Philip A. Cornell, the Clerk of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting, presided at the gathering.

Addresses of welcome were made by Job S. Gidley of Dartmouth, and Robert P. Gifford, of Providence, R. I. (a former member of this meeting).

Job S. Gidley said that it was a pleasure to extend a kindly welcome to so large a number, and trusted that all present were Friends in spirit, and further, that if all the company which he was addressing were as faithful to the requirements of manifested duty as the early Friends, this gathering would not have assembled in vain. He alluded to the influence of the Society during the passing years, as one whose battles were fought with spiritual and not carnal weapons, citing also interesting incidents in the travels of George Fox, William Edmundson, Thomas Chalkley and other Friends, and dwelling also on the fact that Friends would have a mission to perform upon the earth, until the promised day, when "nation shall no longer lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

He read a poem written by an elderly Friend, recalling his childhood days at Apponegansett Meeting, a few stanzas from which are as follows:

Two hundred years have quickly passed
Adown time's flowing tide,
Since first a house of worship here
Did willing hands provide.

The old house gone, the new now old,
Its wood with age is stained,
Bench, post and ceiling, all one hue,
And thus have long remained.

And here in childhood's days I came,
And sat the meeting through,
My childish fancy took free range
On all within my view.

Each crack and crevice, knot and stain,
Was pondered o'er and o'er,
The post where worms had eaten through,
And the sunlight on the floor.

I even now remember well
The sound the door-latch made,
A harsh, metallic, quivering sound,
As in the catch it played.

Here, ranged before my vision, sat
The elders not a few;
They all, I thought, were goodly men,
And reverence was their due.

And one among the number,
Black-eyed, and straight, and tall,
My child fancy thought him like
The great Apostle Paul.

And here, upon those seats, have sat
Meek servants of the Lord,
Who left their homes in other lands,
Obedient to his word.

Robert P. Gifford alluded happily to the meeting at Apponegansett as the child of the Quarterly Meeting which he represented. "What cheer" was the word of welcome from Rhode Island. He alluded to his boyhood days in this Monthly Meeting, and bore a greeting to Dartmouth Friends from his aged mother, Phebe R. Gifford, 96 years of age.

Dr. Edward T. Tucker, of New Bedford, gave an historical address covering the leading features relating to the Monthly Meeting during that period. Thirteen individuals have served as Clerks during this time, an average of fifteen years for each one. John Tucker, the first Clerk, filled this position for fifty-two years—from 1699 to 1751—and James Tucker, a great grandson of the foregoing served the second longest period, from 1801 to 1833, or thirty-two years. Eighteen individuals have served as treasurer, commencing with Benjamin Howland in 1705. The longest service was by Osman Wood, from 1816 to 1855, or thirty-nine years. Since the year 1768 sixteen ministers have been acknowledged, and thirty-seven elders have been appointed since 1750. Up to the middle of the last century it was not customary to enter such appointments upon the records, in the case of either ministers or elders, although there were individuals who filled those stations. Hence a complete list of the select members can not be obtained.

Among the more prominent ministers in the early part of the seventeenth century were Nicholas Davis, Adam Mott, and Elizabeth Gidley. In the early part of the present century Warren Gifford, Sarah Tucker, and Mary Davis were widely known in this respect. Phebe R. Gifford, now residing in Providence, R. I., at the age of 96 years, was a prominent and esteemed minister for 30 years before her removal from the meeting.

Dartmouth Monthly Meeting was a large body numerically, at one time. In 1766 the present Westport Monthly Meeting was set off from it, and at that date it must have included nearly 1,300 members. In 1788 it was taken from Rhode Island Quarter and annexed to Sandwich Quarterly Meeting, and in 1792, New Bedford Monthly Meeting was set off from it also. For nearly 200 years the Monthly Meeting was held continuously at Apponegansett, the site where the first meeting house was erected on a lot presented by Peleg Slocum, a minister, and one of the original members of the meeting. Meetings at this spot were attended by hundreds of the townspeople for nearly a century and a half. Samuel Bownas, in 1727, and Thomas Chalkley, in 1737, mention great gatherings here. William Reckitt, in 1758, alludes to a company of 800 people at the meeting which he attended. John Griffith, in 1766, estimated that 2,000 people were there at one time, and in 1839, more than 100 years after the visit of Thomas Chalkley, Joseph Edgerton, from Ohio, stated that nearly 1,000 were at the Monthly Meeting in the Sixth month of that year.

Dartmouth Monthly Meeting, during the first 100 years of its existence, made frequent contributions to assist in building meeting houses elsewhere in New England, as in Boston, Salem, Kingston, Dover, Providence, Tiverton, Leicester, Taunton, Westerly, Richmond, Warwick and Smithfield, all of these localities being within the limits of Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting, with exception of Boston, Salem and Dover.

As early as 1716 the subject of human slavery became a source of uneasiness, and the query arose whether it was right or just to maintain their fellow men in bondage. Several of the members were the possessors of slaves. Their scruples sprang from religious grounds, and the subject, when once agitated, was never settled until the evil practice was entirely removed, nearly 70 years afterward. In 1772 a few Friends were still the holders of slaves, but it was impossible to stem the current which was setting so vigorously towards emancipation, and by the year 1785 slavery, as far as appears, was a thing of the past.

An unflinching testimony against judicial oaths and war was borne steadily by Friends of this meeting, and during the latter part of the last century they began to grapple with the great problem of intemperance, and thus became, with Friends elsewhere in America, pioneer workers in this great and important field.

The first public Friend to visit Apponegansett after the establishment of the Monthly Meeting was Thomas Story, in Sixth month (August), 1699.

Among eminent ministers of our Society who have attended meetings here during the first one hundred and fifty years of the Monthly Meeting, are the following:

Thomas Story, James Dickinson, John Richardson, Thomas Chalkley, Samuel Bownas, John Fothergill, Daniel Stanton, John Woolman, Samuel Fothergill, John Griffith, William Reckitt, Samuel Neale, Joseph Oxley, Catharine Payton, David Ferris, Susanna Lightfoot, William Hunt, Comfort Hoag, Warner Mifflin, William Jackson, Daniel Offley, Richard Jordan, James Thornton, Thomas Carrington, Thomas Scattergood, Rebecca Jones, John Pemberton, Martha Routh, David Sands, Henry Hull, Joseph Hoag, Stephen Grellet and Thomas Shillitoe, and as one reads the foregoing list he can but feel that Apponegansett is indeed historic ground.

Among the members of this meeting there have been descendants of Mary Dyer, Christopher Holder, Richard Scott, Lawrence and Cassandra Southwick, and of other Friends prominent in early New England history.

From that summer morning, 200 years ago, when Thomas Story came to this place with a gospel message, until modern times, this meeting place has been a landmark hallowed by associations, and filled with memories of the past.

John H. Dillingham, of Philadelphia, spoke of the religious side of the Friends, and of their doctrines, both 200 years ago and to-day, though he particularly emphasized the doctrine as it existed when the Dartmouth Meeting was formed. He referred to the standards set up by the fathers, and expressed confidence that the true inwardness of them as it then existed was good enough for the twentieth century, as it had been for the eighteenth and nineteenth, if rightly heeded and appreciated. He dwelt on the coherence of the Friends' principles, especially their belief in Christ as the word of God. He firmly upheld an abiding in the principles of the founders, as the foundation of the church of the future, and hoped that Friends would return more livingly to them and develop them in the life of the society and its members for centuries to come. He alluded in the course of his remarks to a translation of the principles into Turkish which, it is now found, can be used by the Doukhobors, who understand that language.

Franklyn Howland, a descendant of Friends, spoke as a member of another branch of the church militant, to give his message of congratulation, and to say that though of another body, he felt a deep sympathy in the meaning of this anniversary.

He alluded to some facts in connection with the family history of the signers to the agreement to build the first meeting-house in 1699, and paid a tribute to the endurance and spirit of sacrifice manifested by the early Friends of Dartmouth, concluding as follows:

"This ancient building should never be allowed to pass into decay till time shall consume it. These grounds should not be desecrated by being permitted to pass into the avenues of business traffic. They should be preserved as a monument to the fidelity, courage and loyalty to Christian principles of the men and women who founded this meeting and sustained it in its early years, of God's tender watchfulness over them, His marvelous guidance of them and His wonderful mercies to them.

"Members of this and other divisions of Christ's church on earth; descendants of these religious pioneers of old Dartmouth, and others gathered here, let us, here and now, dedicate ourselves to the cause for which these noble men and women were Pauline martyrs, and firmly resolve with the high purpose which they possessed, 'that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.'"

Stella Gifford, of Dartmouth, read a poem, in which she gave a very interesting word picture of the early Dartmouth Friends.

From home and friends the Pilgrims
Sailed across the wintry sea,
They sought the right to worship God
From stern oppression free.

And yet within their midst were those Who they in turn crushed down,
Till many Friends left Plymouth
And came to Dartmouth town.

Undaunted by privations,
With heart and hand they worked;
Reared homes amid the forests
Where wily Indians lurked.

Yet several years they cut the grass
And turned the new-mown sod
Ere they could build a meeting-house,
Wherein to worship God.

Then near the Paskamansett,
Which bridge had never spanned,
A kind Friend, from his acres,
Gave up this spot of land.

Where George Fox, saith the legend,
(To every Friend endeared),
Once stood and preached a sermon,
Their meeting-house was reared.

And here one summer morning,
From far and near, they came
To hold their first June meeting,
And bow before His name.

The fireplace filled with pine boughs
Lent fragrance to the air;
Soft twitterings from the chimney-throat
Told swallows nested there.

When all had come together
Deep silence fell o'er all,
For best in time of quiet
They hear the Master's call.

He speaks to each directly
And points the way to go;
They guided by the inward light
And not by outward show.

At length, an earnest Friend, perhaps,
Some message had to tell,
And musical, though loud and clear,
His accents rose and fell.

They listened with great interest,
And, at the speaking's end,
The mantle of divinest love
Seemed resting on each Friend.

Through open windows breezes strayed
Across the sanded floor;
While placid face and reverent mien
Showed peace was reigning o'er.

A gentle, eager rustle
Again deep silence broke,
As woman's softer cadence
Sweet words of comfort spoke.

A prayer for strength and guidance
Stanch Quaker lips let fall,
And mingled with thanksgiving
For His watchful care to all.

And then the oldest member
Of all that earnest band,
Turned to his nearest neighbor
And shook the proffered hand.

With never-ceasing motion
Time's even waves have rolled,
For since that first June meeting
Two hundred years are told.

In yonder graveyard olden
Their hero ashes rest;
Their courage and endurance
Have many times been blest.

But much about those old-time Friends
Untold must ever be;
Through two long centuries, even yet,
Their "faith looks up to Thee."

And Friends, two hundred years from now,
With laurels may entwine
The memory of the faithful ones
Of eighteen ninety-nine.

Richard H. Thomas, of Baltimore; Allen C. Thomas and Henry N. Hoxie, of Haverford, Pa., and Mary S. Kimber, of New York, attended the exercises and spoke briefly.

The proceedings were under the care of a committee of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting, and it was felt that a profitable and interesting day had been spent.

The committee were Phillip A. Cornell, George C. Akin, Henry A. Slocum, Phebe A. L. Smith and Sarah F. Potter.

HOLLOWAY.—Died at his residence in Spice'and, Indiana, Third month 24th, 1899, Joseph W., son of David and Mary Holloway, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. He was a consistent and useful member of Spiceland Monthly Meeting of Friends, and was loved and honored by a large circle of friends. He was converted in early manhood, and from thenceforth, with a heart full of praise to God and love to his fellow man, he faithfully and cheerfully discharged the duties of a Christian citizen.

WELLS.—Died, Philena Wells, on Second month 5th, 1899, aged 57 years. She was the daughter of G. W. and Rachel McGrew. And on the 13th, William D. Wells, her husband, aged 66 years. Both were well-esteemed members of Timbered Hills Monthly Meeting, Kansas. They were killed by a team running away and throwing them from a wagon.

News and Events.

Philadelphia is actively engaged in preparing for two important celebrations which will be held here during the coming autumn. The first is the reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic, which will hold its annual encampment in the first week of September. About 50,000 old soldiers are expected to attend. The second is the Export Exposition, which will open one week after the Grand Army has left. This Exposition, while little heard of outside of Philadelphia, and even here not popularly regarded as a striking event, will be an unusually valuable contribution to the commercial interests of the country. The exhibits will be mainly of manufactures suitable for export trade. Thirty-two States are already entered in the list of exhibitors. Many foreign guests are expected, and nearly every nation in the world will be represented by delegates. As special guests of the city there will be President McKinley, Admiral Dewey, and President Diaz, of Mexico. While not equal in magnitude to the Centennial Exhibition of 1876, the present project will be far reaching in its aims, and will undoubtedly be productive of excellent results. The present size and importance of the Exposition are far ahead of anything which the projectors originally conceived. It will open in the middle of September and close in the last week of November.

General Ulysses Heu'reaux, the San Domingo, President of was assassinated on the 26th. He was fifty-three years old, and had been president of the republic since September 1st, 1882, having been re-elected three times. Two attempts had previously been made to take his life. On the whole, his career has been a very stormy one. The assassination appears to have been the signal of revolution, or at least the firebrand which will involve the country in civil war. Insurgents are gathering in force and are preparing for an attack upon the government. The United States has sent two war vessels to protect its interests in San Domingo.

Over one thousand State troops have been stationed in Cleveland, Ohio, the past week, to assist the municipal authorities in preserving order during the street car strike. The presence of the militia has had a very salutary effect upon the lawless element, fewer obstructions have been placed on the tracks, and more cars have been enabled to run on the different lines. The managers of the Big Consolidated, whose employees are on strike, now express their hope that the end is near, but the strikers are even more confident that they will win, believing that since their sympathizers have been compelled largely to desist from mob violence, they will be given more encouragement by the public. A curious phase of the strikers' struggle is a boycott which has been attempted against certain merchants who ride in the cars.

The recent immigration of the Finns to this country and to England is the result of political oppression and an effort to Russianize Finland. The Finns are an excellent, industrious class of people, greatly superior to the ordinary immigrant, and their reception should be thoroughly cordial. Finland was severed from Sweden in 1809, and though under the protection of Russia ever since, it has been an independent state, with its own constitution, laws, army and Diet. Its Grand Duke is the Czar of Russia. A year ago a Russian Imperial Decree required the Finns to serve in Russian regiments, increased the term of military service, and exacted a large contribution to the Russian treasury, and in February last the Czar canceled the Finnish constitution and deprived the Diet of the power which it had hitherto possessed in regulating the affairs of the country. Repeated protests against this oppression have been ignored, and the Finns being wholly unable to resist Russian aggression, nothing remains for them to do but to submit or emigrate. A considerable number are choosing the latter.

NOTES.—The Peace Conference at The Hague held its last session on the 29th ult., and adjourned finally.—Yellow fever has broken out in the Soldiers' Home, at Hampton, Virginia.—Chief Justice Chambers, of Samoa, has returned to the United States.—The long pending reciprocity treaty negotiations between the United States and France were brought to a successful close on the 24th ult.—Up to the 29th ult., inclusive, there had been a total enlistment for the Philippine regiments of 7,092.—Admiral Dewey has been widely quoted as having recently expressed very candid opinions regarding Germany's attitude in the late war. The occasion seems to have been a private conversation which was not for publication.—Negotiations are in progress for forming an alliance between China and Japan.—Captain Dreyfus has been reported seriously ill.

CORRECTION.—In the last number of the "Annals from Our Bible Class," the paragraph which begins, "Everywhere and always He was the guiltless man," should have read "guileless."

IN HIS EYES.

Sometimes a deaf man gives an answer which makes a wonderfully close hit, although he has totally misunderstood the question.

"Is your son's bride a pretty girl?" asked an old lady of a penurious and very deaf old gentleman, whose son had recently married the daughter of a prosperous grocer.

"No," said the old man, calmly, "she isn't, but she will be when her father dies."

A CONFESSION.

Says She Can Now Talk With a Clear Conscience.

"While attending the state convention of the W. C. T. U. at Manville, Wyo., I was entertained by Mrs. Nina Higby. I am a temperance lecturer, and at breakfast Mrs. Higby handed me a lovely cup of coffee with the remark, 'Did you ever realize that it is not at all consistent for temperance people to continually advise others to avoid poisonous stimulants, and yet day by day drink such articles themselves. This is particularly true of coffee, which is one of the most powerful narcotics in existence, although its effects are not shown as actively as whiskey.'

I was rather surprised at her remark, but after thinking it over a moment, I realized that it was apropos. I had noticed many a case of nervous prostration that was directly traceable to coffee, for the individuals at once began to improve when they left off coffee, and I had found it so in my own experience.

I had made several attempts to break away from the habit and had failed, much to my disgust, and, oftentimes, when addressing an audience on the evils of liquor drinking, I had in my own heart felt that I was very much like an old toper, the only difference being that I wanted coffee and he wanted liquor.

Mrs. Higby went on to say: "We have abandoned coffee entirely in our family, and are using the Postum Cereal Food Coffee, made down at Battle Creek, Mich., and I think when you drink this cup you will agree with me that it is in many respects a more delicious beverage than ordinary coffee, for it has a smoother, more fascinating taste, much like the very highest grades of mild Java."

I drank the cup slowly and realized that her remarks were true, and I want to say to you that I gained no more valuable knowledge at that convention in Wyoming than that which I learned at the breakfast table where I had my first cup of Postum. I have since used it regularly, very greatly to my physical and mental advantage, and have found no difficulty whatever in doing away with coffee. No one can tell how glad I am to be free from its baneful effects. I can now make a temperance address with a clear conscience, and, perhaps I might add, a clearer complexion than formerly."

CAMP-MEETINGS OF EARLY DAYS

Clifford Howard, in the July "Ladies' Home Journal," writes that the first camp-meeting in America was held on the banks of the Muddy River, in Kentucky, in August, 1799, and was conducted by the McGee brothers, two eloquent evangelists. "It is lasted for little more than a week," he states, "and the novelty of it and the success which attended it were so marked that there arose an immediate demand for a continuance of this form of worship. Accordingly, the meeting was speedily followed by a large number of camp-meetings throughout the West. So great was the interest they excited that in some instances a single meeting was attended by two or three thousand persons, resulting in the complete desertion of the neighboring towns and settlements for the time being. This first camp-meeting marked the beginning of a revival of religion which assumed such proportions and wrought such widespread good that it has passed into history as the 'Great Revival.' It was the reaction following the period of doubt and unbelief, and swept through the country in a glorious wave of triumph. The earlier camp-meetings were not held under the auspices of any particular denomination. People of all churches and all phases of belief attended them and took an interest in their management. Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist and other ministers conducted the services. Denominational differences were cast aside. All churches were merged into one in the tide of revivalism. But after the first excitement roused by the 'Great Revival' died away, this particular form of worship became a Methodist institution. Other denominations gradually abandoned it and left it to the Methodists, who have maintained it to this day, and continue to find in it a source of good and a no less worthy means of salvation than on the occasion of its establishment one hundred years ago."

It is a good thing to be with the multitude when one can do so with a good conscience. It is better to be in harmony with one's fellows than to quarrel with them, if peace and righteousness can be harmonized. And it is a mistake to cultivate differences about small matters, and thus needlessly weaken their respect for our judgment. But, as this world is constituted, it is not always possible to escape the necessity of dissent and resistance to the judgment of the multitude. The only multitude that ever rises to the highest level of the truth and righteousness is "the great multitude which no man could number," which John sees before the throne. Earthly people commonly rise no higher than the lower average of sentiment and opinion in their own ranks. They are liable to the contagion of fear, hatred and other passions. Even the good people among them are not always at their best, and have to be on their guard against "following a multitude to do evil."—"Sunday School Times."

ECONOMIC RESOURCES OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The United States Government has published a timely report on the industries of the Philippine Islands, based on the preliminary investigations of recently appointed American Commissioners, which should be studied in connection with the query, "Will the islands ever be worth to us what they will ultimately cost?"

Taking the year 1894 as the fairest of recent ones it is shown that the rice crop is about 765,000 tons—not enough for local demands—chiefly produced in Luzon and Mindoro; that the sugar crop of the Visayas was about 235,000 tons, of which one-tenth was consumed locally and the remainder, valued at $11,000,000, exported; that the hemp crop of Southern Luzon, Mindoro, the Visayas and Mindanao was 96,000 tons, valued at $12,000,000, and nearly all exported.

Tobacco, raised in all the islands, but the best in Luzon, yielded 7,000 tons of leaf, valued at $1,750,000, and coconuts, grown in Southern Luzon, supplied a large local demand and had a surplus for export valued at $2,400,000. The foregoing are the chief productions of the soil. Of important minerals, gold in various forms is found in many localities from Northern Luzon to Central Mindanao. The present survey is expected to show large possibilities in the way of gold, copper, iron, and, maybe, coal mining, under the application of American methods.—"Saturday Evening Post."

AT THE SET OF SUN.

At the set of the sun,
When our work is done,
With all its tangled web;
When the clouds drift low,
And the stream runs slow,
And life is at its ebb;

As we near the goal,
When the golden bowl
Shall be broken at its fount:
With what sweetest thought
Shall the hour be fraught,
What precious most shall we count?

Not the flame of the sword,
Nor the wealth we have stored
In perishable things on earth—
Not the way we have trod
With the intellect broad,
Though that were of precious worth;

Nor the gain we achieved
Through the hearts we have grieved,
And left unhelped by the way;
Nor the laurel of fame,
When, for worldly acclaim,
We toiled in the heat and the fray.

Ah, no! 'tis not these Will give our hearts ease.
When life sinks low in the west,
But the passing sweet thought
Of the good we have wrought,
The saddened lives we have blest.

And the love we have won,
And the love beckoning on
From His islands far and dim;
Love out of the light,
Shining into the night,
The night which leadeth to Him.

A STORY ABOUT THE QUEEN.

In Windsor Castle there is a suite of rooms for the use of the queen's chaplain. A private passage connects the chaplain's study with the queen's apartments, and she frequently repairs there to consult him on important matters. One day, as the queen was returning to her apartments after an interview, a parrot called out some words in a cross tone of voice from its cage in the passage. Failing to understand the sounds, the queen turned to the chaplain, and asked, "What is the parrot saying?" With much embarrassment, he replied, "If you please, your Majesty, I would rather not repeat it." "But what was it?" she said. "Something, I fear, your Majesty will not like: therefore, I hope your Majesty will excuse me from telling it." The queen's curiosity was now thoroughly aroused; and she said, "Come, I insist." The chaplain bowed low, and made answer, "Since your Majesty insists, the parrot said, 'Go along, you ugly old woman!'" Queen Victoria laughed heartily as she said, "Well, I am glad there is at least one voice in the kingdom which is not afraid to tell me what it thinks of me."—"Watchman."

Very few people, even among the cultured, can read the following paragraph of ninety-nine words without a mistake.

"Cleopatra, isolated in the oasis, soon became acclimated, and had ample leisure to contemplate all the economic details of her inextricable sword. The wound resisted the allopathic misogynist, who gave a courteous diagnosis and humbly craved precedence for a tiny idyl in the form of a vase with an esthetic, acoustic apparatus. This told the news like a book, but it might have been a dog living in squalor from the look she launched at him when he wrote down his address. She ate her breakfast, and then fraternized with a national expert in appendicitis, who attended the obsequies."

THE HOUSE IN THE WOOD.

A late number of "Littell's Living Age" contains a very interesting article on "The House in the Wood," taken from the "Nineteenth Century." The article, which is by Elizabeth Lecky, gives a very clear historical account of this building, where the International Peace Commissioners have been in session. We quote from it as follows:

"The House in the Wood is a monument of the golden age of Dutch history. The seventeenth century produced in Holland that extraordinary outburst of energy and power in all directions which seems the climax in the life of a nation and leaves a glorious recollection for all time. Freedom's battle had been won. The Dutch flag was planted in Brazil, at the Cape, in North America, in the East and West Indies. It was the age of Vondel, the Dutch Milton, of Hooft, the great historian, of Rembrandt, of Huygens, of Grotius, of Spinoza. And he who during part of that great century presided over the destinies of the nation was the Stadholder Frederick Henry, son of William the Silent and of his wife, Louise de Coligny. History has given him a place among great statesmen and great tacticians.

Prince Frederick Henry was the first of the Stadholders who held a brilliant court. William the Silent's life had been one of perpetual struggle and self-sacrifice. His son, Maurice, was above all a great soldier; his tastes were simple, he was unmarried, and his only luxury was battle-steeds. Prince Frederick Henry loved art and splendor, and his consort encouraged his tastes. Rembrandt and Van Dyck painted for him, and he surrounded himself with works of art of various kinds. The Prince built two country houses, one at Ryswyck, where the Peace was afterwards concluded, and one at Honse-laarsdyk. Neither exists any more. Amilia de Solms wished to have a country house of her own near the Hague, and selected for the site the neighboring wood. On the outskirts to the east side she bought a piece of land which was then not much more than a wilderness and a morass. The plans of the new palace were devised, according to the Princess' ideas, by the great architect of the day, Van Campen, and were submitted to the Prince, who was then conducting the campaign in Flanders. We know from a letter of his secretary, Constantyn Huygens, father of the celebrated Christian Huygens, that he wished the house to be on a more moderate scale and to have no entrance-hall, but he wisely gave in to his wife's wishes. On the 2d of September, 1645, the first stone of the House in the Wood was laid by the Queen of Bohemia, and the plan of building a large octagonal central hall, with a set of rooms on each side and an upper floor, was carried out by an architect of renown, Peter Post, who executed the plans of Van Campen.

"In 1647 Prince Frederick Henry died at the age of sixty-three, before the building was completed. The Princess then resolved to dedicate the great hall of the House in the Wood to the memory of the Prince by commemorating in paintings on the walls the chief events of his life and his great feats of arms, which had so powerfully contributed to bring the eighty years war with Spain to a close, though the Peace of Munster was not concluded till the year after his death.

"Rubens and Van Dyck were both dead; but next to Van Dyck, Jordaens of Antwerp, was the greatest pupil of Rubens, and it was he who was chosen to execute the chief portion of the work—the triumph of Frederick Henry.

"Jordaens, though inferior to his master in power of imagination and sense of beauty, was at least his equal in richness of coloring. His huge painting which covers one side of the wall, is a masterpiece, and the description he wrote for the Princess helps us fully to understand his meaning. We see the noble figure of the Prince seated in the triumphal car and crowned by Victory, who reserves another crown for his son and successor, William the Second. The young Prince, at the head of a band of cavaliers, rides near the car, which is drawn by four white prancing horses, led by Pallas and Mercury. The statues of William the Silent and Maurice on either side are surrounded with spectators. Hatred and Discord are trodden under foot. Death, hovering above, vainly struggles with Fame for the mastery; while Peace, one of the last wishes of the Prince on earth, is seen descending from heaven, holding an olive and a palm branch, and accompanied by angels bearing the symbols of the Arts and Sciences, and an unfolded scroll with the "Ultimus ante omnes de parta pace triumphus." (The greatest victory is that by which peace is won.) The figure of Peace is dressed in white, as the painter tells us, to symbolize that peace should be of sincere intention and without fraud or guile."

ADVERTISING

in

THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has now a circulation of 7,000 copies each week. This means that every number of the paper is read by about 35,000 Friends, or something more than one-third of the entire membership of our denomination from Atlantic to Pacific and from Canada to Mexico. This affords an excellent field for advertisers to reach a prosperous and buying class of people, and as such it is used by many of the most prominent and successful advertisers in America. Never before have we presented such a large and excellent selection of advertisements to our readers, and the estimation in which the paper is held is as strongly reflected in the increased demand for space as in our expanding circulation. When it is considered that the entire denomination of Friends can be thoroughly covered with a business notice in THE AMERICAN FRIEND alone, and that it is the only weekly medium of Friends of a general circulation open to the advertiser, it is not to be wondered at that the value of space in the paper is coming to be more and more appreciated. Some of our advertisers have been with us ever since the paper was founded, thus proving beyond a doubt that satisfactory service has been rendered. We admit nothing to our columns which is not reliable, and the character of the advertisements in THE AMERICAN FRIEND is such that we can gladly recommend Friends everywhere to give their custom to the firms represented therein. We would encourage our readers to answer the advertisements which may interest them, and in doing so to mention THE AMERICAN FRIEND. This will be to the benefit of all concerned.

A number of our subscribers are engaged in lines of business which might profitably be advertised in the denominational paper. These are invited to use our columns. Such an action would benefit the advertiser and would materially promote the cause of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. For those who have anything to advertise and do not wish to use large space, our column of "Subscribers' Wants" is always open. Five lines can be inserted here for only 25 cents for a single insertion. We wish to extend the value of this department, and it is becoming—as we wish it to be—a valuable information bureau. Rates for regular advertising will be sent on application.

THE SECRET.

"Thou shalt keep them in the secret of Thy presence from the strife of tongues."

*When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar,
'Tis said, far down beneath the wild commotion
That peaceful stillness reigneth evermore.*

*Far, far beneath, the noise of tempests dieth,
And silver waves glide ever peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs the Sabbath of that deeper sea.*

*So to the soul that knows Thy love, O Purest!
There is a temple, sacred evermore!
And all the babble of life's angry voices
Dies in hushed stillness at its peaceful door.*

*Far, far away, the noise of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise ever peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs that deeper rest, O Lord, in Thee.*

*O Rest of rests! O Peace serene, eternal!
Thou ever livest, and thou changest never;
And in the secret of Thy presence dwelleth Fullness of joy, forever and forever.*

GRIEF'S LESSON.

And dost thou, too, know what it means to see,
Day after day, the life-cord slipping slow
From one whose every glance is dear to thee,
Whose failing accents make thy music low?

And dost thou, too, know what it is to sit
In silence deeper than unpeopled worlds—
To find no light, though sun or moon be lit—
And deem of equal value stones and pearls?

And hast thou stretched thine empty arms in vain,
Unmindful of the night and of the day;
Persuaded only of a deepening pain,
Not knowing how to trust or how to pray?

And then at length, I hope thou hast found rest
Within the brooding Father-arms of God;
Content to wait His will and high behest,
Since nothing can be fully understood.

One lesson more I trust that thou didst learn—
The universal brotherhood of grief,
Which moved thee from thy sorrowing to turn,
And strive to give to other hearts relief.

—Rena M. Hurd, in "The Christian Advocate."

THE ETERNAL NATURE OF THINGS.

THERE is a strong tendency in our day toward what is sometimes called a "soft" or "easy" theology. The harsh and fear-inspiring features are eliminated, and we hear little of the old-time theology which made the world to come such a stern reality. We are told of the love which woos and forgives, until we almost, or quite, forget that there is anything to fear. If God is love indeed, we are told, why should there be anything to fear? and we hear the question asked, Were not the threats and the terrors for an age which could not comprehend a God of love, and which needed to be frightened into goodness? and has not the time come for an easier religion, stripped of all aspects of terror and harshness? We do not profess to be able to say what the Allwise One will do with this particular soul or that when it comes into that world which lies so entirely beyond our experience, nor are we authorized to "speak for our Creator," but we believe that our so-called "soft theology" of modern times is not true to the nature of things, nor does it square with the revelations which have been given of God's nature and His purposes.

An ancient Hebrew poet says that "the stars in their courses fought against Sisera,"—the very nature of things were against him. In fact, every page of history gives us a stern lesson of the futility and impossibility of ignoring the distinction of right and wrong—righteousness and unrighteousness. It is one long story of men and women who "dashed up against the thick bossed shield of God's judgment," and who were broken against this impenetrable shield.

Nature has the same story to tell. You must learn her laws and obey them, or suffer for it. She is never "easy" with those who will not learn her ways. The unplumb building topples over, the rotten foundation brings the structure down, the badly built scaffolding crashes down, regardless of who gets hurt. The ship which is not steered by compass and chart grinds to pieces on the reefs, unmindful of the precious lives aboard; and the train, as we learn this morning, which comes behind time and finds the track blocked, crashes into the obstruction, careless of how many are killed. There is nothing "soft" in the eternal nature of things, if so be we blindly dash against things as they are. The only safe and wise way is to adjust one's course to fit the nature of things, otherwise the punishment comes irresistibly.

Why, in the light of this, or in the light of anything else, should we suppose that all will come out right, no matter how we shape our lives? It will not come out right. Evil is not good, however we juggle with names, and God cannot be God and treat unrighteousness, or even carelessness, as though it made no difference.

Does anybody suppose that love is "soft" and devoid of sternness. The father who loves his child the most is the one who is most afraid to be "easy" with him when he is on the wrong course. It is just because God is love that He is also "a consuming fire." It is not possible that the stubborn, the willful, the erring, the vicious, or even the thoughtless, should go on "in their ways" forever. It would destroy all the purpose and meaning of the universe. This universe makes for righteousness, and those who will not learn this fact by easy methods must have harsh methods,— "the thick bossed shield of God's judgment."

"The tissues of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny
We reap as we have sown.

"Still shall the soul around it call
The shadows which it gathered here,
And, painted on the eternal wall,
The past shall re-appear."

COMMITTEE AND TRUSTEE WORK.

WE dwell much upon gifts in the ministry, as though no other important gifts were conferred by the Great Head of the Church, but what would become of a church which did not have gifted men and women to manage the various lines of active work which the church must carry on, or of a church which had no members of capacity to deal with the practical matters which are a part of its necessary business?

Consecration and devotion are very important, and can hardly be overestimated, but mere consecration and devotion are not enough; there must be capacity, ability, wisdom, foresight, judgment, experience and trained mental powers to be consecrated. Our meetings now have a long list of special committees, each having the care of some important field of work, requiring careful management and skillful planning and safe financiering. There are missions to manage and support, there are educational institutions to direct, with trust funds to handle; there are committees on home missions, on church extension, on evangelistic work, on philanthropic and reform work, on Indians and on Freedmen, while in many yearly meetings there are special trust funds to manage and special activities to direct. Every one of these things require ability and judgment as well as consecration. One of our great troubles in the past has been that too little of this work has been done with business methods. The idea has prevailed that business methods and business ideas should not be carried into religious matters. All should be done as informally and as much by "inspiration" as possible. The result has been that much of our committee work is bungling, inefficient, loose, indefinite and slipshod. Friends are frequently put on committees, not because they have a gift for the service, but because "their feelings might be hurt" if they were left off. The large committees, in their meetings, are not guided enough by the chairman or clerk—i.e., they are not held strictly enough to business, so that as a result there is a waste of talk, a helpless floundering about and all around the subject, instead of moving straight down upon it. We must further confess that our experience has shown us that financial questions do not receive the careful attention which such matters demand. We have in our history, here in America, lost very few trust funds—remarkably few—through carelessness or bad investment, but it is nevertheless a fact that too many of our committees handle their funds with too loose business methods, and come out right by good fortune rather than by clear judgment.

Now, the conclusion of the whole matter is, that we need the best material we have for our committees, the clearest and soundest judgment, the most consecrated ability in the meeting. Then, too, the committee work should be managed by the same strict, careful, accurate business methods as are employed by the most successful men in other lines. It should be clearly recognized that the Lord blesses such methods and that the confusion which always results from loose and careless methods is sufficient condemnation for them. We need to emphasize and then emphasize again the importance of gifts for service on committees.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

It is reported that twenty-nine Mormon missionaries sailed from Philadelphia on the 29th ulto. for work in Europe. Dr. Clarke, president of the Christian Endeavor, says that there is quiet but active missionary work going on constantly in the East in behalf of Mormonism, and that there are six students of that faith at Harvard and sixteen at Johns Hopkins.

The statistics showing the growth of the Methodist Church in New Zealand during the last quarter of a century reveal a very rapid growth of this denomination in that country. From 1874 to 1899 the number of churches and other places of similar nature have increased from 203 to 489, ministers from 219 to 638, and attendants on public worship from 20,087 to 68,524.

The Executive Committee of the New York State Conference of Religion has decided that the Conference is to be held in New York city in the spring of 1900. Nine denominations are now represented. Commenting on the purpose of the Conference, an exchange says: "It is hoped to evince by the coming Conference that religion unites those whom theology divides, in effective co-operation for practical results of moral and social betterment, and a higher righteousness in church and state."

Dr. Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the decision of cases heard by himself and the Archbishop of York, has pronounced against the legality of the use of incense and lights in the Church of England.

The seventeenth annual conference for Christian workers, at Northfield, Mass., opened on the 1st inst. The introductory address was delivered by Dwight L. Moody. Ira D. Sankey, the famous singer, was also present to lead the music.

The courts of Pennsylvania have rendered a decision that no man's religious rights are infringed if police laws forbid him to beat a drum in the streets. Some of the Salvation Army "lassies" have been sent to prison in Philadelphia on this charge.

Prominent Christian Scientists, including Mrs. Eddy, the publisher and trustees of the society's publications, and the Christian Scientist Church, of Boston, are to be sued on a charge of libel by a woman of that city for sums that aggregate over $500,000.

The Unitarians and Universalists in New York are considering whether they cannot enter into some common alliance which, while allowing the two Churches to preserve their individuality, may lead to efficient co-operation in whatever will be for their mutual good.

The Catholics the world over have been asked by the Pope to pray daily during the present month that there may be restored "to the Holy See that liberty and freedom of action which are indispensable to it for the proper exercise of its world-wide jurisdiction and high prerogatives."

The Philadelphia "Bulletin" has been making a comparison of the number of people in that city who attend the theatre and those who attend church, and finds the church attendance far in excess. The weekly attendance at the different places of amusement, it says, is not more than 170,000. It is hard to compute the church attendance exactly.

The strong man does as he believes, and the weak man believes as he does. Robertson says, "Men think in a certain mode . . . because their life is of a certain character and their opinions are only invented afterwards as a defense for their life." The plutocrat grinds the last cent out of his poor dependents because he wants the cent, not because he has first decided that the grinding of the poor is his first duty. He invents his justification after he has determined his course. When we find our better self arguing with our worse self, let us ask the question, "Do I want to do this because it is right, or do I decide it to be right because I want to do it?"—S. S. Times.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

GOD'S SILENCES TO US.

BY J. R. MILLER.

One of the most remarkable incidents in the Gospel is that in which to a poor woman's cries for help Jesus answered not a word. He kept His face turned away, and seemed to treat the suppliant with cold indifference. Yet He was not indifferent. In His heart was warm compassion for her, and in the end He gave her far more than she had asked.

There are times when God seems to be silent to us. To our earnest supplications He answers not a word. We are told to ask and we shall receive, to seek and we shall find, to knock and it shall be opened unto us. Yet there come times when, though we ask imploringly, we seem not to receive; when, though we seek with intense earnestness, we seem not to find; when, though we knock until our hands are bruised and bleeding, there seems to be no opening of the door. Sometimes the heavens appear to be brass above us as we cry, "Is there anywhere an ear to hear, or a heart to feel sympathy with us in our need?"

Nothing else is so awful as the silence of God. It is a pathetic prayer in which a psalm-writer pleads, "Be not silent to me; lest I become like them that go down into the pit." Anything from God is better than that He be silent to us. It would be a sad, dreary, lonely world if the atheist's creed were true, that there is no God, that there is no ear to hear prayer, that no voice of answering love or comfort or help ever comes out of the heavens to us.

Do prayers ever remain really unanswered? There are prayers which are answered, although we do not know it, thinking them still unanswered. The answer is not recognized when it comes; the blessing comes and is not perceived.

This is true especially of many spiritual favors which we seek. We ask for holiness, yet it does not seem to us that we are growing in holiness. But, perhaps, all the while our spirit is imperceptibly, unconsciously imbibing more and more of the mind of Christ, and we are being changed into His image. We expect the answer in the marked way—in a manifestation which we cannot mistake, while it comes silently as the dew comes upon the drooping flowers and the withering leaves. But, like the flowers and the leaves, our soul is refreshed and our life is renewed.

We put our cares into God's hands, with a prayer that He free us from the load. But the cares do not seem to become any less. We think there has been no answer to our prayer. But all the while an unseen hand has been shaping, adjusting, disentangling the complex affairs of our life, and preparing a blessing for us out of them all. We are not conscious of it, but our prayer has been receiving continual answer. Like the tapestry weavers, we have not seen the working out of the pattern as we have wrought, and yet on the other side, where God's eye sees, it has been coming out in beauty. Some day we shall know that many prayers we now think unanswered have really been graciously answered.

We find ourselves in the midst of circumstances which appear adverse. We seem about to be crushed by sorrows, by disappointments, by trials, by opposition. We pray to be saved from these distressful conditions. But no answer seems to come. The shadow deepens, the blow falls. We sit in darkness, and say that God did not answer our prayer. We are unaware of the blessing that really came to us in the pain or the loss. The cup was not taken away, but we were secretly strengthened, so that we were able to drink it. Then, in the experience of suffering, our life was purified and enriched, and we learned new lessons.

We are very ignorant, and we know not how to pray as we ought. The thing we ask for is not just what we need, although we think it is. Then the thing we really need comes to us in the place of what we thought we needed. The prayer seems to be unanswered, while in fact it is answered in a far better way than if what we sought had come instead. We think it is more of God's gifts we need, and these do not come; but God Himself comes into our life anew, revealing and imparting to us more of His love and grace. The giver is better than His best gifts.

But there are prayers which are not answered. For example, we ask God to lift away our burden. To do this, however, would be to rob us of blessings which can come to us only through the bearing of the burden. There are mistaken notions current among good people about the way God promises to help us. Some think that whenever they have a little trouble, a bit of hard path to walk over, a load to carry, a sorrow to meet, a trial of any kind, all they have to do is to call upon God and He will take away that which is hard, or prevent that which impends, freeing them altogether from the trial. But this is not the usual manner of God's love. His purpose concerning us is not to make things easy for us, but rather to make something of us. So when we ask Him to save us from our care, to take the struggle out of our life, to make the path mossy for our feet, to lift off the heavy load, He simply does not do it. It would be most unkind and unloving in Him to do so. Therefore, prayers of this kind go unanswered. We must carry the burden ourselves. God wants us to learn life's lessons, and to do this we must be left to work out the problems for ourselves.

There are rich blessings that we can get only through sorrow. It would be a short-sighted love, therefore, that would heed our cries for deliverance and spare us from sorrow because we desired it, thus depriving us of wonderful blessings which God has sent to us in the sorrow, and which can come to us in no other way.

The child may indolently shrink from the study, the regular hours, the routine, the drudgery and discipline of the school, and beg the parent to let him stay at home and have an easy time. But what would you think of the father who should weakly grant the child's request, releasing him from the tasks that irk him so? And is God less wisely kind than our human fathers? He will not answer prayers which ask that we may be freed from duty, from work, since it is by these very things alone we can grow. The only true answer to such prayers is the withholding of what we ask.

There are also selfish prayers which go unanswered. Human lives are tied up together. It is not enough that any of us shall think only of himself and his own things. Thoughts of others must qualify all our requests for ourselves. Something which might be good for us, if we were the only person, it may not be wise to grant because it might not be for the comfort and good of others. It is possible to overlook this in our prayers, and to press our interests and desires to the harming of our neighbor. God's eye takes in all His children, and He plans for the truest and best good of each one of them. Our selfish prayers, which would work to the injury of others, He will not answer. This limitation applies specially to prayers for earthly things.

There is yet another class of prayers which appear to be unanswered, but whose answer is only delayed for wise reasons. Perhaps we are not able at the time to receive the things we ask for. A child in one of the lower grades in the school may go to a teacher of higher studies and ask to be taught this or that branch. The teacher may be willing to impart to the pupil this knowledge of higher studies, but the pupil cannot receive it until he has gone through certain other studies to prepare himself for it. The higher music cannot be taught until the rudiments have been mastered. There are qualities for which we may pray, but which can be received only after certain discipline. A ripened character cannot be attained by a young Christian merely in answer to prayer—it can be reached only through long experience.

Or it may be that the things we pray for cannot be given to us until they have been prepared. Suppose you were to plant a young fruit tree to-morrow, and were to begin to pray for fruit from its branches, could your prayer be answered at once? There are blessings which we crave and which God will gladly give, but they can come only through long and slow processes. God delays to answer that in the end He may give us better things than could have been given at the beginning. An immediate answering would have put green fruit into our hands. He waits till it is ripe.

These are suggestions of what seem to be unanswered prayers. They may have been answered and we did not recognize the things we sought when they came. Or, they may be, indeed, unanswered, because to answer them would not have been kindness to us. Or the answers may have been delayed until our hearts were ready to receive them. We may always trust God with our prayers. He is wiser than we, and His love for us is infallible. He will do for us whatever is best, at the best time, and in the best way. Unanswered prayers are not unheard prayers. Every whisper of a child, every sigh of a sufferer in this world, goes up to God. And His heart is tender and loving, and what is best for us He will do.

Philadelphia, Pa,

FROM A COLORADO TOWN.

BY HANNAH M. JESSUP.

After an absence of nearly five years from our own church and people, we have longed to represent to them somewhat our surroundings.

Hiawatha Quarterly Meeting, the nearest quarter, is about two hundred miles east of here, and Denver Meeting, the nearest organized meeting of Friends, is fifty miles to the south. The town of Greeley is situated in the valley of the Chashe-la-Poudre and South Platte rivers; it and the surrounding country are irrigated from both. The first settlers came here mostly from the New England States, in the seventies, and formed a colony on the bleak prairies, surrounded by vast country with roaming savages, jealous of the white man, consequently there were many hardships attended by loss of life.

Without experience in the art of irrigation, it took from five to six years to realize anything from their efforts to produce crops from this mode, but after years of perseverance many of the oldest settlers have been greatly rewarded in wordly goods, others we see, under the same circumstances to start out with, are now dependent on others for their daily bread, proving the statement, "The poor ye have with you alway."

In the organization of the colony it was put on a strictly temperance plan, the organizer being a Friend. The colony was named for Horace Greeley. It was supposed at first that only the low lands could be reached by irrigation, but we find that most of the land can be, or is already, reached, and what was once a desert blooms as the rose.

All the principal churches are represented here. We have visited most of them and suppose they are fair examples of most churches over the country, and at no time in our lives have we been so strongly in favor of that one which seems to us the nearest like the apostolic form of worship—our own loved and longed-for branch of the church. For the past five years we have had a Holy Ghost minister here, but since then we know of none in the place which preach the real baptism. The Salvation Army has done its part bravely, but their meetings are attended by only a very few of the better class of citizens. Never before have we realized what a hold the world has on professors, until we wonder no longer at infidelity when we think of the great crowds all over our country, dressed in gaudy attire and with stiff manners, going to the house of God to hear flowery sermons, often with little or no Christ in them; nevertheless the Lord has a chosen few who worship Him out of a pure heart. The State Normal School is located here, calling together a large percentage of the best young minds of this and other States. At the last prayer meeting we attended we overheard a bright young senior ask his pastor if he had any good books on the Holy Spirit, which is an indication of searching after something better.

Since coming here we have had the privilege of listening to some of the evangelists of other churches, among others the world-renowned Moody, loaded with Bible truths and illustrations, song books, numbers of periodicals and books for daily helps, with new and old plans to help on in hastening the spread of the Gospel. Last year the Holiness camp meeting was held here, and no one was more conspicuous on the grounds than "Aunt Rebecca," a dear old colored woman, whom God uses as an inspiration to many a heart to full consecration. It is wonderful to hear her testimonies, how the "Lord blesses poo' me," how she walked so carefully, placing her feet right in the steps they told her when she came to consecrate herself wholly to her Master, and in her own words, "I fell desperately in love with Jesus and have been unto this day." Under these broken testimonies the Lord baptizes the people until her black face becomes beautiful with holy expression that beams out from it, and you forget the outer appearance, for hath not God chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty? One thing has been noticeable: those who are filled with the Holy Spirit are used for most good to others.

May the Lord fill us as a church, and may we keep humble, for has He not brought us out that He might bring us into the land to possess it?

Since writing the above, my husband has received a letter of inquiry from L. L. Martin, our evangelistic superintendent, of Iowa Yearly Meeting, in regard to the church extension work here in this place.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

PRUNING.

BY WILFRID ROWNTREE.

The Sunday School lesson for Fifth month 7th, which is taken from the fifteenth chapter of John, is so beautifully illustrated by the work of the vine dressers of this land, that I thought a few words of explanation might be helpful to some one.

In verse 2, every branch is repeated twice. The pruner goes over the whole vine, taking the branches one by one, examining them carefully and cutting away all that will not tend to fruitage. Not one is left as it grew. All need pruning.

How like us is the inclination to grow into appearance and beauty of self. But what is wanted is fruit, much fruit (vs. 5), and though the branches seem ruinously mutilated, and it makes one's heart almost ache to see them cut back and left with only two or three short stubs, yet he who by faith or knowledge sees the future harvest cannot but rejoice because of the fruit that they will bear. And there is no other way to obtain fruit.

Then let us give praise to God for not allowing us to spend our lives as we would have chosen; for the hard places we have had to go through, and for not being allowed the opportunities and privileges for which we have longed. It must be His hand that has cut them off, because they would not tend to fruit.

The nearer the branch is to the root the better the fruit it bears. And oh, how much better fruit we bring forth by being near to the vine! It will partake more of His nature, and less of the woody consistency of the branch.

It is a common sight in this land of scarce fuel to see women carrying on their heads great bundles of vine branches, which they have gathered (vs. 6) and are taking to burn. No fruit will ever come from all the efforts put into this growth, which, if it had been left on the vine, would also have hindered the production of fruit.

Oh, Heavenly Father, prune me of everything, whether sinful or not, that will not bring forth fruit to thy glory.

FRIENDS' CHURCH IN HAVANA.

A few months ago a communication was received from a congregation of Christians in Cuba asking for some of our publications. The matter was presented to the monthly meeting of Victoria and four dollars was raised for the purpose and the clerk instructed to answer the letter, and to attend to the forwarding of the literature.

On the evening of the fifth of Seventh month, the first day of our annual meeting, the following interesting letter was received:

"Havana, Sixth month 23d, 1899.

"To the Friends' Church in Mexico, Peace and greetings in the Lord Jesus:

"Dear Brethren:—Upon organizing ourselves, it was intended by this church, founded in this city, independent of any religious denomination, the work being sustained by the individual effort of all the brethren which compose it, to establish a National Cuban Church, which, deriving inspiration from the doctrines and disciplines of the old Puritans, should worship the Lord in spirit and in truth.

"We have scrupulously observed this principle up to date. Baptism and the Lord's Supper have the Quaker form with us. The same is true as regards the government of the church and the Christian ministry.

"In view of these points of similarity between our church and yours, assembled in quarterly meeting, it was resolved to direct the following petition to the annual meeting of your church in that Republic:

"First. The Evangelical Church in the city of Havana accepts and acknowledges the rule of faith, discipline and doctrines of the Friends' Church.

"Second. It desires to live by its own efforts, its members promising to defray the salaries of its pastors and the expenses arising from its missionary work.

"An executive body is already organized, consisting of Francisco G. Cala, an ordained minister, as Presiding Clerk and Angel Seratto as Secretary.

"Third. We desire that the Friends' Church in Mexico inform all its congregations of this decision, giving them fraternal salutations in our name.

"Fourth. We desire that the Mexican mission send us religious literature in Spanish, catechisms and texts for the Sunday school.

"Fifth. We desire the prayers of the brethren in Mexico both in their public meetings and in private, for the advancement of this work and the increase of our faith.

"Finally brethren, we pray that the Lord will bless and guide you to the end that his holy cause may prosper.

"Your brethren in faith,

"A. SERRATO, Secretary.

"F. CALA, Clerk.

"Report of the missionary work of the Cuban Evangelical Church:

"Pastor, Francisco G. Cala.

"Ministers, Juan Francisco Galvez, Ana Suarez Rodriguez, Pedro Raices.

"Established meetings, two.

"Membership, eighty-six.

"Sabbath schools, two.

"Attendance, two hundred and sixty to three hundred.

"Havana, Sixth month 23d, 1899."

The above letter should have the widest circulation amongst Friends, and, in fact, all Christians in the United States.

I deeply regret that I did not meet this body of Christians whilst in Cuba. Is not a native church what is wanted there? With this center we Friends can see that the Gospel is preached and the Bible distributed throughout the whole of Cuba, and then the news spread to the surrounding islands.

I would dearly love to see a "Native Cuban Church Aid Society" formed. I will do all I possibly can therefor, and I know of several others of like disposition. If Friends who see this article will write me, I believe we can soon have such a committee working, and through correspondence and the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, render great service to Christians in Cuba, besides preparing for an active campaign there this next fall and winter. Address John B. Wood, Pyne Poynt, Seventh and Erie, Camden, N. J.

Seventh month 27th, 1899.

A heart unloving among kindred has no love for God's saints and angels. If we have a cold heart toward a servant or a friend, why should we wonder if we have no fervor toward God? If we are cold in our private prayers, we should be earthly and dull in the most devout religious order; if we cannot bear the vexations of a companion, how should we bear the contradictions of sinners? If a little pain overcomes us how could we endure a cross? If we have no tender, cheerful, affectionate love to those with whom our daily hours are spent, how should we feel the great pulse and ardor of love to the unknown and the evil, the ungrateful and the repulsive?—H. THE RIVER OF SALVATION.

Ezekiel 47 : 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. Rev. 22 : 17

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth 14.—The river of salvation. Ezek. 47 : 1-12.

Third-day, Eighth mo. 15.—Streams in the desert. Isa. 35.

Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 16.—A miraculous supply. 2 Kings 3 : 9-20.

Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 17.—Living waters. Zach. 14 : 4-11.

Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 18.—The river of God. Psalm 65.

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 19.—A free gift. Rev. 21 : 1-7.

First-day, Eighth mo. 20.—Water of life. Rev. 22 : 1-7.

Chapters 40-48 of Ezekiel appear to have been written or spoken about twelve or thirteen years after those in the preceding chapters. Whether the prophet was silent during the years which intervene we do not know. (Compare chapter 32 : 17, and chapter 40 : 1). Chapter 40 is dated "in the five and twentieth year of our captivity," which appears to be the year 572 B. C. In this section of the work we have the description of the new Jerusalem as seen in vision by the prophet. The ideas in many respects closely resemble Deuteronomy. The ritual is emphasized, and the temple is the center of the nation, geographically and spiritually. The prophet gives a picture of the future commonwealth of Israel, in which the Lord Jehovah is recognized as the Ruler, the Judge, the Law Giver, the God. The Church and the State are one—in short, it is a picture of a perfect theocracy.

The striking resemblance between Ezekiel and the book of Revelations has often been pointed out. In both it is the presence of Jehovah which constitutes the hope of the prophet and of the seer of Revelation. Compare Ezek. 43 : 4, 5; 44 : 1-4, and Rev. 21 : 22-27; Ezek. 42 : 2; also Rev. 1 : 15; 14 : 2; 19 : 6, etc., for verbal resemblances.

The vision of which the lesson forms a part was probably written at Tel-abib, by the river Chebar (see 3 : 15), and while Nebuchadrezzar was living. It was about the middle of the seventy years of captivity; there was much to discourage, and the vision of the New Jerusalem and all that would result from its establishment was intended to call the minds of the captive Jews to what was in future for them if they were faithful to their God.

1. "Afterward:" That is, after the description of the Temple. "The house:" The Temple. "Waters issued out." From under the threshold on the south side, and flowed eastward. There was in Jerusalem a small stream which flowed eastward from the Temple hill; this stream is referred to in Isaiah (8 : 6) and in Nehemiah (3 : 15). See also John (9 : 7, 11). "South side of the altar." The actual stream appeared to start from the Holy of Holies. It is easy, therefore, to see how the prophet in his vision would glorify such a stream in the New Jerusalem, and make the life-giving stream come from Jehovah Himself.

2. "Then brought He me," etc: That is to say,

"Then He took me out through the north gate, and led me round on the outside to the outer east gate." The eastern gates were shut (chap. 44 : 2; 46 : 1). When the prophet, in his vision, reached the east gate he saw the stream issuing at the south side of the gate.

3. "When the man," etc: There is probably no special significance in the thousand cubits (1,500 feet). It is used to show that the waters gradually deepened and widened.

4, 5. In these verses there is a description of the continued deepening of the stream. It took some time to become deep enough to swim in. "River:" Not the word which would be used for a stream like the Jordan, but the one used to describe the ravines with a stream at the bottom; such as one now called by the Arabs a "wady." Beyond the special and obvious meaning of this allegory the prophet may have had in mind the gradual growth of the Jewish nation. Though but a small band was to return to Jerusalem, it would increase and multiply as time went on. It is also illustrative of the general progressive nature of God's work; of knowledge; of spiritual growth, etc.

6. "Hast thou seen this? Dost thou understand this? If so, let us go on."

7. Both sides of the wady or valley were covered with trees. Compare Rev. 22 : 1, 2.

8. "Issue forth toward the eastern region, and shall go down into the Arabah" (Revised Version): The word "Arabah," translated "desert" in the authorized version, "is the depression of the Jordan valley, the Dead Sea, and southward as far as the gulf of Akaba, on the Red Sea." See Deut. 1 : 1; 3 : 17; Josh. 18 : 18. The "sea" is the Dead Sea. It is said that this region is one of the most desolate and inhospitable tracts of country that is known. The healing stream will render even such a scene of desolation fruitful, and turn the salt waters of the Dead Sea into fresh.

9. "Every living thing that moves, wherever the stream comes, shall live; the fish shall be very many:" The Dead Sea is especially remarkable in two respects: (1) it occupies a lower level than any other body of water known, its surface being 1,292 feet below the Mediterranean; (2) its waters are much saltier than those of the ocean; while 100 pounds of sea water contain 6 pounds of salt, those of the Dead Sea contain from 20 to 27 pounds of salt. There have been several explanations why this water should be so salt; one of the most plausible is that the Jordan contains a minute portion of salt, there is no outlet for the sea, and as the water evaporates continually the salt remains and accumulates from year to year. Practically no organic life exists in it; but, contrary to common opinion, birds frequent its shores and fly over its waters.

10. "Engedi:" The "fountain of the Kid," about the middle of the west shore. "En-eglain:" This place has not been identified. It probably was to the north, near the mouth of the Jordan.

11. The marshes were to be left to supply the inhabitants with salt.

12. This verse seems to be a summary of what has gone before, and of the effect of the life-giving stream. The trees shall furnish fruit for food, while the leaves shall be for healing. Compare Rev. 22:2; Ps. 1: 3; Jer. 17: 8. Salt is to the Semites a symbol of perpetual desolation. Compare Judges 9: 45. And yet the life-giving stream could make such a desert blossom as the rose.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Salvation must come from God.
2. The course of the Spirit is an ever-widening and deeper one.
3. Those who are dead in trespasses and sins may be made alive. Eph. 2: 1.

MARY H. ROGERS.

BY ESTHER TUTTLE PRITCHARD.

At Vinton, La., on the 24th of Fifth month, 1899. Mary H. Rogers went to her reward, in the 63d year of her age. Born to Joseph and Ann Hunt, in Spice-land, Ind., and in a direct line of descent from John Woolman, she was cast by heredity in a decided Quaker mould, and was destined to make herself felt through her pronounced convictions and spirit-baptized ministry over a large part of her ancestral church. She has often said that she could not remember the time when she did not feel herself called to preach the gospel; and had there been in her childhood the needful discernment and fostering care on the part of the church the little Mary might have entered as simply and sweetly upon her ministry as did the children of the early Friends two centuries before.

The advantages of neighborhood schools were supplemented by a year at Friends' Indiana Boarding School, now Earlham College, and there, in 1858, she was married to Jonathan T. Rogers of Brownsville, Penna.

Time passed, and the call to preach that had followed her from earliest recollections, grew more imperative, and the struggle became more severe, until, as a consequence, she was prostrated by a serious illness that did not relax its hold until she had given herself to God to obey His bidding.

As was common in those days, her first appearances in public were brief and little more than the quotation of Scripture texts, but there was soon recognized the tiny bud of an evangelistic gift that early developed into a soul-saving ministry. She first entered the field as a revivalist at Hesper, Kansas, and her subsequent labors extended over portions of the eastern states, and extensively through Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Kansas, besides a year of religious service in Great Britain.

She was not so much a sermonizer as an evangelistic exhorter. She knew the gospel and could defend its doctrines, but it was her wont to pour out the message of salvation in fervent utterances, aimed straight at the heart of her hearers. She had an intense, artless, sympathetic temperament that, under the sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost, gave her a passion for souls, and made her a true fisher of men. The writer was once engaged with her and other Friends in the early years of her ministry in holding meetings and visiting families. All her powers were aglow at that time with the anointing of the Spirit and the fresh experience of full salvation, and the reaching and melting power of her appeals and prayers have never been forgotten. Kneeling beside strong men in the family she would beseech at the throne of grace for their salvation, until they would be broken to tears, and the presence of the Spirit would be so manifested that we would often go to our carriages, saying, "This is wonderful."

So early as the days of our Civil War she did missionary work, going out among the soldiers to tell the story of the cross, and before the days of the woman's crusade she visited saloons and gambling dens, distributing tracts and offering prayer. In the jails and penitentiaries of our land her sweet, persuasive voice was heard, pleading with hardened sinners to come to Christ. It was for the lapsed and criminal classes that her sympathies were especially drawn out, and remarkable instances of transforming grace occurred under her labors for such as these.

At one time we find her associated with D. L. Moody in evangelistic work in Chicago, and again at York, England, she is strongly urged by this evangelist to join him in the gospel campaign that was just opening in that land. Owing to the advice of Friends she declined the invitation, which she afterwards regretted.

For years it has been a frequent inquiry among those who had learned to love her, and who had been blessed under her ministry, "What has become of Mary Rogers?"—so completely had she dropped out of sight. In answer to this inquiry, it may be said that owing to her having observed the rite of water baptism she was deposed from her ministry at Barclay, Kansas, and that shortly afterward she withdrew from our church and united with the Methodists. In this step she was joined by her son, Logan, a young man of much promise, who has for years been in the ministry, and who preceded his mother by only eight weeks to the heavenly home.

Transplanted when over fifty years of age from the providential field in which she was born, and in which she was fitted by all her aptitudes to labor, it is not strange that her public fruitfulness came to an end, and that thenceforth she was one who simply bides her time. At heart a Friend, and during all her previous Christian life in active co-operation with her mother-church, her closing years were spent, practically, in denominational exile, and her heart must often have yearned for the old home and the family circle. The frail little body that could never have been robust gradually declined in strength, until the call came on the above date for an exchange of worlds. Conscious to the last, the dear faithful toiler, who had labored and suffered for her Master and gathered many sheaves, said: "I want to go home and rest."

And, then, as her closing words and final testimony, she said: "I am standing on the banks of the river of life." And so Mary Rogers passed over to be with Jesus, and to await the coming of her comrades in service, and her many spiritual children.

IS IT WAR ?

BY WM. G. HUBBARD.

Anent the publication of the "round robin" of the newspaper men representing American papers in the Philippines, it may be opportune to notice the claim that many people of the United States have made that "there is no war in the Philippines." It is claimed that there is only an "insurrection" of a small portion of the subjects of "our (?) government." It is not war, say they. "A few unruly subjects refuse to acknowledge the authority of law."

This is probably the thousandth or ten thousandth time people have found some flimsy excuse for the slaughter of their fellow men. Previous to the war of the rebellion of 1861-1865 in the United States there were many who had advocated that war was wrong and a relic of barbarism; that all disputes should be settled by law and reason, and not by physical force and gunpowder. But when the war came on these men eased their consciences by saying it was not war, but only "insurrection."

But with equal force could the English say that the war of 1776 was only an insurrection. Thus it has ever been that people who wish to fight can find an excuse. But my astonishment was unbounded when a prominent Friend arose in a recent yearly meeting and objected to some reference in the epistles about "the war in which the United States was engaged." He said "the United States is not engaged in war, but is simply putting down an insurrection." Well, is it war? The United States has had an army of some 40,000 soldiers, and a great navy, fighting battles almost constantly for nearly a year, or several times as long as the war with Spain lasted. These troops have slaughtered many thousands of human beings. The casualties on the American side have been more than 2,000, according to this morning's papers.

The statement of the "round robin" that the strength of the enemy has not been fully stated does not surprise any thoughtful reader of the papers. Many battles have been reported as "meeting and utterly routing Aguinaldo's forces," "The war must soon end," etc.

Then inside of a week or two we would read of ten thousand or twenty thousand "insurgents" being utterly routed in another battle. Such reports are calculated to deceive the reader for a while, but after he reads forty or fifty times that the "war is about over," but finds that "twenty-five thousand more troops are needed," he ceases to be deceived.

So the "revelation" of the "round robin" was not much of a revelation to the thoughtful. They have known for a long time that the United States was engaged in a very serious war, likely to be long and vastly expensive. It is war, with all the accomplishments of armies, battles, forced marches, sickness, disease and slaughter, which the word war ever signifies.

The worst of it is that it is a useless and wicked war. Wicked, because all wars are contrary to the gospel. Useless, because there is every reason to believe that if we had said to the Philippines, as we did to the Cubans, that we only propose to assist you in organizing a stable government of your own, there would have been no rebellion on their part. The writer thinks that it was a fatal mistake on the part of the United States Senate not to have ratified the treaty with Spain immediately after it was signed by the Commission, and then a more grievous mistake was in not defining the government's position to be only one of helpfulness. It is believed that many thousands of lives may have been saved, and possibly a hundred millions of dollars also saved, and this mistake is being continued every day by our Government till it ceases the slaughter and offers to treat.

This war is wrong, furthermore, because it logically condemns the founders of the United States Government. Those founders based their right to be free from England upon the principle that "there is no just government without the consent of the governed." But if that principle was true, and three millions were right in setting up their own government in the United States, what right have these same people who fought for that principle to say to nine millions of people, "You have no right to set up your own government; we propose to make your laws and govern you, and you must come under our rule or we will kill you." What are we to reply when these people say to us as we said to Great Britain, "There is no just government without the consent of the governed?"

Some have replied to this by saying, "That does not apply to heathens like the Philippines." Who made us a judge as to how highly a people must be civilized before they may have their own government? Suppose there should be a much more highly civilized nation found somewhere than in the United States, and that nation should say to us, "You are heathen; you don't govern your large cities. You let the worst element 'run' them. They are not governed. They are 'run.' Besides, you have, in your semi-barbarous condition in the United States, slaughtered a whole race of people whom you found in peaceable possession when you came. People who act so much like banditti as you have towards the Indians are not fit to govern yourselves. Furthermore, you are legalizing the death of your people and the destruction of your liberties by allowing 240,000 liquor dealers to debauch millions of your people and control your legislation, and out of 'humanitarian consideration' we must take the government of the United States into our own control." What should we say to a nation that would talk to us like that? We should likely inform them that we would not submit.

Then if they sent a great army to make us submit or kill us, we should doubtless resist, and the world would call it war.

THE LEAVEN AND THE MEAL.

Matt. 13: 33; Dan. 2: 31-35, 45.

(A Missionary Meeting.)

Second-day, Eighth mo. 14.—Like unto mustard-seed. Matt. 13: 31-32.
Third-day, Eighth mo. 15.—Uttermost parts for possession. Ps. 2: 1-12.,
Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 16.—All nations shall flow unto it. Micah 4: 1-7.
Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 17.—The little one, a thousand. Isa. 60: 1-12, 22.
Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 18.—No end to increase. Isa. 9: 6, 7.
Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 19.—An everlasting kingdom. Dan. 7: 9-27.

A small school of exegetes have interpreted the parable of the leaven to mean the mysterious working of evil in the church, and thus made the parable to be a prophecy of the apostasy of the church until the unclean birds of the world all perch within it. But the interpretation is far-fetched, and, upon the whole, unreasonable, though it fits in very well with the theory that there is no kingdom of God now existing upon the earth, that the devil has possession of everything except the church, and that in fact he has most of that, and that all God can do is here and there to intervene in the accursed order of things and by special providences rescue a fragment now and then.

But such a system of thought is destructive, since it rules God out of His world. Between such a system and its opposite—that there is really no evil, since God is all, and all is God—there is the sober and reasonable ground that God yet reigns, hence He must have a kingdom among men.

It is too narrow a construction of the Scriptures to say that when Christ came He offered the kingdom to the Jews and they refused it; hence the church is His substitute in the interregnum, until the Jews shall acknowledge the Messiah and prove worthy of the kingdom when in some future age it shall be given them. Let us leave out of sight for the present prophetic interpretation about future kingdoms, and recognize the fact that the kingdom of God is here among men, first, as a spiritual kingdom in the hearts of those who believe upon Jesus Christ and yield obedience to the will of God; that such a kingdom of God "came with power" on the day of Pentecost, and has never ceased since.

Let us also see that wherever among men the principles of the Master's sermon on the kingdom have obtained sway in a greater or less degree, there the kingdom of God exists to that degree. The horrible barbarities, the shocking atrocities, the shameless and nameless vices and crimes of the old Roman world—the brutality and relentless cruelty of the Middle Ages no longer reign supreme among men. We are bad enough yet, but one year of the ancient regime would make us call these closing days of the nineteenth century millennial days.

The leaven has spread in the hearts of men for their own personal salvation, and the leaven of truth has spread among the institutions of men, changing their character, ameliorating their harshness, recognizing the value of human life, the preciousness of womanhood and childhood. It is folly to despise these changes, or to ignore them, because they are not yet perfected. Whether they are to be perfected by the personal return of our Lord, or by that continued series of His comings in spiritual uplifts for His people and in judgments upon evil whether embodied in a nation or a system, need not now be discussed. It is our duty to spread the leaven in the meal. It is our duty to put the leaven of our personal influence at work on other souls—to put the leaven of divine truth into the minds and hearts of men. It is also our duty to leaven social, educational, financial and political institutions. Penn's "Holy Experiment" was a leaven that is still working among men. Grotius cast a leaven into the meal of international law that has brought about the possibility of the Conference at The Hague.

Every missionary is a leaven in heathen lands. He is a leaven by the truth he preaches—possibly even more by the truth he lives. What a leaven Livingstone and Moffat were in South Africa! thousands of others as well, in the dark mass of heathenism, slowly working away, blest of God, in the transformation of lives around them. There is unleavened meal within your reach also. Get in touch with it; give it the warm touch of the Spirit-quickened message and the Spirit-ruled life. It may not yield to the first, nor to the second, at once, but let the leaven work. It is yours to effect the contact. God will care for results.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE last article the editor was able to write for this department was in connection with the prayer meeting topic, a good vacation. Since then there have been many happy, restful days of vacation and recuperation, until he is again able to resume his work and to greet the readers of this column.

THE re-election of Charles Sweet as president of the Friends' Christian Endeavor Union, and of Myrtle Lightner as secretary, was as it should have been. The position of president involves many responsibilities, and one year is not sufficient for any one to become familiar with the duties of the office so as to render the best service. It is a position where experience counts for much, and experience comes only with time. As for Miss Lightner, it is fitting to say that the work of the secretary has been most admirably done for the three years that she has held that position, and the thanks of all Endeavorers are due to her for this efficient service.

THE importance of the work of the Friends' International Union becomes more and more apparent from year to year. It is, of course, true that not very much can be accomplished in the hurried annual meeting at the time of the International Conventions, though it is always an interesting meeting, but the work of the union goes steadily on throughout the year, preserving in many ways the unity of the Endeavor movement among Friends and fostering its interests, and promoting the work of our denomination. The course of events has fully justified the wisdom of the course taken at the New York city Convention in 1892, when the Friends' Union was organized, largely through the efforts of our lamented friend, Alfred Hathway. At that time some yearly meetings were urging a denominational society, but in the course of time all have adopted the Christian Endeavor movement and fellowship. The wisdom of this action is beyond all question, and it now remains for us to use to its utmost capacity the machinery of the movement in connection with our own church. It has already greatly increased the loyalty of young people to the church, and greatly quickened their missionary zeal. The reports show commendable progress along recent lines of Endeavor. The Quiet Hour is absolutely in harmony with the spirit of our church, and should be observed by every Endeavorer. Proportionate giving, Bible study, missionary reading—let us push forward in all these lines for the coming year.

THE Missionary Committee of the Union are preparing new plans which will be announced soon in this column, but meanwhile it is a pleasure to say a few words in heartiest commendation of the movement in the Methodist Church known as the "Missionary Campaign," and also the undenominational movement of which the "Yale Missionary Band" is a representative. There is no reason why our own colleges should not send forth just as capable and efficient bands of young people to speak on missionary topics as those which have accomplished such remarkable results in other churches. Earlham, Penn, and others of our colleges, have among their students young men and young women who can do this work, and already the matter is under consideration. The presence of four or five young people who are filled with the Spirit and with the facts of missions to overflowing could not but be an inspiration to hundreds of our societies. In connection with this, the purchase by the societies of the missionary library that may be selected and recommended by these bands would be a blessing to them. We trust that at no distant day we shall be able to make announcements as to the organization of such bands.

You cannot sin as if you were the first and only man that God ever made and put into the world. If you will sin, you sin against every high precedent of goodness; you tread on those examples of holiness that have made the world lustrous and sacred; you sweep away the inspiration of sainthood that comes down out of the past and gathers up around you from the present like the very breath of heaven; you turn away and go out, obstinately and deliberately, not merely from the kingdom of God, but from the communion of saints.—Phillips Brooks.

SOME FIGURES FOR CONSIDERATION.

To Whom It Should Concern:

Moneys expended for the year ending Ninth month, 1898, in Iowa Yearly Meeting for the following purposes (as mostly shown by our minutes), should make us feel there is yet much room and need for reform and practical godliness among us.

Our total membership is 11,274.

For foreign missions	$2,861 80
For evangelists	794 75
For pastors	15,400 00
For meeting houses repaired (seven), cost.	384 00
For meeting houses built (five), cost.....	3,250 00

Total $22,690 55

Number who use tobacco, 707.

Amount paid for tobacco at the low figure of $10 on an average for each user, $7,070.00.

We are aware that the sums given above (exclusive of the tobacco bill) do not represent the entire amount given by our people. But we believe that to include the following we shall be able to get at a comparatively correct idea of the amount of money we have put in the Lord's treasury in a year.

Taking for a basis of our incidentals, such as light, fuel, janitor and insurance, 10 per cent. of the above $22,691.00, we have to add to it $2,269.00, to which we add (taking from treasurer's report the amounts which, if we understand, represent sums given and collected on subscription for Penn College) about $1,186.00, making $26,146.00 in all.

At the usual census rate of five per family we have 2,255 families.

A little comparison will show the following for "Friends" (John 15: 14) of Iowa Yearly Meeting: The 707, averaging $10.00 each, equal for tobacco $7,070.00 annually.

Result: Powers of soul and body made to suffer; the breath made very offensive, and the manners blunted; God's money worse than wasted; his temple defiled; a filthy practice indulged in; a decidedly wrong example to the rising generation, as well as a sin against the many clean people who are so earnestly striving to keep their children from forming the habit.

Two thousand, two hundred and fifty-five families (at 5 per family) gave $26,146.00 in above year, or about $10.33 per family, or about $2.06 each for the gospel and education.

It should also be remembered that many families give from $25.00 to $50.00, and even more; this being true, many more are doing practically nothing.

Finally, the money used for tobacco would enable us to have employed twice the number of evangelists we did, and built ten churches instead of five; and then have given $5,886.80 for foreign missions instead of $2,861.80.

"Judgment will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet."

LUCY LARCOM AS A TEACHER.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND :

Dear Friend.—In reading Lucy Larcom's Life, Letters and Diary (Boston and New York, 1894) I have admired her playful vein as a teacher. It strikes me (this playfulness of spirit) as a gift to be coveted by those who, like her, are "apt to teach."

Thinking the passage herewith enclosed may commend itself to thee as worthy of insertion in thy pages, I send it at a venture. I am thine truly,

THOMPSON SHARP.

[A constant reader.]

Leighton House, Marlow, Bucks, England.

"Looking Glass Prairie, June 9th, 1846.

"To Mrs. I. W. Baker:

"Dear Sister,—Here I am, just got home from school.

"My school ! Oh, the times I do have there with the young suckers ! I have to walk rather more than a mile to it, and it is in just the same literal specimen of a log cabin that you can form an idea of. 'Tis built of unhewn logs, laid 'criss-cross'—as we used to say down in the lane—the chinks filled up with mud, except those which are not filled up 'at all, at all,' and the chimney is stuck on behind the house. The floor lies as easy as it can on the ground, and the benches are, some of them (will you believe it?), very much like our sofa. They never had a school in this district before, and my ideas are beginning to 'shoot' very naturally, most of them. I asked one new scholar yesterday how old she was. 'Don't know,' she said; 'never was inside of a schoolhouse before.' Another big girl got hold of my rubbers the other day. 'Auch,' said she, 'be them Ingin rubbers? I never seen any 'fore.' Some of them are bright enough to make up for all this, and on the whole I enjoy being 'schoolma'am' very much. I have not seen a snake since I came here, and if I didn't have to pass through such a sprinkling of cattle on my way to school, I shouldn't have a morsel of trouble. Everybody turns his 'cattle-brutes' out on the open prairie to feed, and they will get right into my path—and such a mooing and bellowing as they make !

"George has three big cows and two little ones and two calves, and a horse, and ten hens, and a big pig and a little one; only the big pig has dug a subterranean passage, and 'runned away.' And I don't milk the cows, and I won't learn to if I can help it, because they will be so impolite as to turn round and stare me in the face always when I go near them.

Talk to me about getting married and settling down here in the West ! I don't do that thing until I'm a greater goose than I am now, for love nor money. It is a common saying here, that 'this is a fine country for men and dogs, but women and oxen have to take it.' The secret of it is that farmers' wives have to do all their work in one room, without any help, and almost nothing to work with. If ever I had the mind to take the vestal vow, it has been since I 'emigrated.' You'll see me coming back one of these years, a right smart old maid, my fat sides and cheeks shaking with 'the agey,' to the tune of 'Oh take your time, Miss Lucy!'"

All send love.

Your everlasting sister,

INDIVIDUAL INFLUENCE.

BY ALIX.

Two thoughts that came to me early in my Christian life have been so helpful that I would like to send them forth again, that they may carry their message to other hearts.

"Wast thou to speak, no man has spoken for thee?"

"If thy labors are useless to all but thyself, the service thou pretendest to render to God is a mere lie."—Luther.

It is almost a truism, and yet it is a fact, that I would like to press upon every conscience to say that our peculiar dispositions, acted upon as they are by the discipline and circumstances that have surrounded our lives, form individual characters that must do its work in its own way, and in a way that no one else can do it; and that therefore if we are not faithful that work must remain forever undone.

I pray you to let this thought have its full weight with you, for it is so easy to step aside and comfort ourselves by thinking that some one else can do what we ought to do, so much better than we can.

We are taught that the Lord has appointed to "every man his work," and just as there comes to each of us a definite time when we accept or reject the salvation that is offered us, so, I believe, there comes a definite time when we take up or practically refuse to take up the life work that is appointed us.

I do not mean the taking up of duties here and there, but the really being willing to use all the talents committed to us—all the talents, I say, for it is too generally the custom to select among them, using some, and consciously burying others.

They are many and varied, and only he who has given, and he who has received, are able to compute the full responsibility.

There are certain talents, however, bestowed in common upon all Christians, although it may be in different measure. Of these the first one is "the knowledge of the truth." This is to be used among those whose opportunities have not been as great as our own, and can only be imparted through the spoken word; so if it is to have any increase we must place our lips at the disposal of the Lord. As no one can think for us, certainly no one can give forth our thoughts. As an encouragement to use this talent the Father has given us a precious promise, "My word shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

If the message is sent through us no one else can carry it, and it is important that we deliver it; since if our dear Lord sends it some heart is waiting for it. Dare we deprive it of its right?

"Lost for want of a word,
A word that you might have spoken.
Who knows what eyes may be dim,
Or heart be aching and broken?
Go, scatter beside all waters,
Nor sicken at hopes deferred;
Let never a soul, by your dumbness,
Be lost for want of a word."

The second talent we possess in common with all Christians is our personal influence as exercised in our homes and among those with whom we are thrown. Every one of us has a circle of friends and acquaintances over whom we have an especial influence; and no one perhaps can reach them but ourselves. This circle breaks and forms, and breaks and forms again as life goes on, and new fields of labor are constantly opening to us.

The third talent is the opportunity of advocating unpopular measures if they really advance God's cause, or opposing popular evils if they are dishonoring it.

There are so many cowardly Christians, who, by their silence, countenance the silence of others, not understanding that they are thus compromising with sin. Dear friends, let me beg you to realize that a willingness to be unpopular is a great attainment. Let it never be said of you that you "loved the praise of men rather than the praise of God," but "with an eye single to his service" place yourself in His hands, asking Him to use you as He wills.—From "Advocate and Guardian."

THE LASH OF THE WAVES.

[Written on Pine Point, South China, Me., Eighth month 19th, 1898.]

There's a message from God in the lash of the waves,
Of the wavelets that toss on the lake;
And a message to me in the tireless round
Of lashing and splashing they make;
One after another,
And over and over,
This musical work of the lake.

They bid me be strong for the work I must do,
Performing each task o'er and o'er,
With patience and genuine lightness of heart,
Like the laugh of the waves on the shore;
With smiles intervening,
All weariness screening,
In the work that I do o'er and o'er.

Delighted I list to their words, and the chimes
Prolonged by each separate wave,
As over the water they hurry to land,
The rocks and the pebbles to lave,
Where white spray ascending
Announces the ending,
The goal of the frolicsome wave.

And the music so low in the lash of the waves
I shall hear once again in my dreams,
When summer is over and pleasure forgot.
And life all monotonous seems,
Their message repeating
To me in the greeting
When I meet them again in my dreams.

OUR MISSION.

BY J. EDGAR WILLIAMS.

The mission of the church is identical with the mission of Christ.

It is the organized representative of Jesus Christ, purchased with His own blood and commissioned to carry out His method.

In the divine prayer He said: "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." And later, speaking to His disciples: "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

The church is to influence laws, opinions and society, but chiefly by turning men's hearts to God. It always stands for that which ought to be, and as long as there is an unsaved soul and an existing wrong in society, it can never acquiesce in the conditions of the present. The world has eloquence, shrewdness, wealth and organization; in fact, all that the church has except what the church gets from Christ.

What the church owes the world is self-sacrificing love. Let us go about paying our debt.

Politicians may speak to suit the issues of the day; our theme is ever the same.

A theological professor sat under the ministry of a certain preacher, and after the service said to him: "Your sermon was excellent, but you seemed more concerned about the truth than about men."

O, brethren, let us take aim in our ministry! When Dr. Lyman Beecher was on his death-bed, a brother minister said to him: "Dr. Beecher, you know a great deal; tell us what is the greatest of all things?" He replied: "It is not theology; it is not controversy; it is to save souls." Then let the church arise and shine, and to the supplying of men's needs be up and doing.

Drummond says: "Men's greatest needs are often homely." But here the gospel is fully adequate.

The progress of the church along these lines may require the casting out of about four devils; first, the deaf devil, who prevents us from hearing the Macedonian cry of "come," and kills our missionary spirit. Second, the dumb devil, who keeps us silent and acquiescent when we ought to speak out against sin and selfishness. Third, the devil of self-seeking and self-glory, whose presence is abominable and leads to abasement. Fourth, the rationalistic devil, who denies the gift of the Holy Ghost and robs the church of power.

Marshalltown, Iowa.

When you come down from the summits, you do not come away from God. There is no task in life in which you do not need him. The work bench needs his light as truly as the cloister.—Phillips Brooks.

We have not learned the full secret of communion with our Lord until our thought rises from our own needs to his desire in intercession and reaches out with something of his love to the communion of all saints.

News from the Field.

A meeting of the committee in charge of Friends' School, at Providence, R. I., was held the first day of this month. Twenty members were present. Seventy applications for free scholarships came before the committee, and the entire day was devoted to the bestowal of the scholarships. Thirty-nine scholarships, either full or partial, were granted, amounting in total to $4,925.

Our English Friends, John Wilhelm Rowntree and Alfred Neave Brayshaw, who have been visiting Friends' meetings in this country for nearly three months, sailed for home on the "Majestic," White Star Line, the 26th of last month. They accomplished much during their stay among us, and their coming has been profitable, certainly to us, and, we believe, to them also.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Friends desiring to attend Western Yearly Meeting will be assisted in finding boarding places by addressing Louis Robbins, Elijah J. Shaw, or Rebecca M. Vestal, Plainfield, Hendricks Co., Indiana.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Goshen Quarterly Meeting was held at Goshen, Logan County, Ohio, Seventh month 21st, 22d and 23d.

We had the acceptable company of Amos Kenworthy of Knightstown, Indiana; Alfred Ware, of Mt. Pleasant, Ohio; and Rhoda Walton, of Winona, Ohio; also home workers.

In addition to these Charles D. W. Hiatt and George Carter of Fairmount, Ind., attended on First-day.

Amos Kenworthy came with special messages from the Lord, which were edifying and strengthening both to the church and to individuals.

On Seventh-day evening Alfred Ware delivered an address at the Christian Endeavor meeting full of solid food, on "Our Possibilities."

First-day morning Amos Kenworthy was used of the Lord for an hour and a half in proclaiming the truth to a houseful of attentive listeners. Many felt it was the best Quarterly Meeting ever held at Goshen.

Goshen Quarterly Meeting is held once a year at each of four places: Goshen in July; Carmel in October; Byhalia in January; North Lewisburg in April. Friends come together from the various subordinate meetings on First-day as well as Sixth-day and Seventh-day.

By the plan of circulating the interest of the general membership is greatly increased.

We have had very faithful service the entire year past on the part of the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, Robert W. Greene. He has spent some time in almost all of our meetings, and visited many of our families.

Jessie Lloyd is now making a tour of the meetings in this Quarter, spending about two days holding meetings and visiting families. Robert W. Greene is taking him around and assisting him in this work.

Rhoda Walton visited a number of our meetings immediately following the Quarterly Meeting.

JOSEPH C. HADLEY.

HAWORTH FAMILY REUNION.

The proposed reunion for the Haworth family of America will occur at or near Plainfield, Hendricks Co., Indiana, at the close of Western Yearly Meeting, Ninth month 21st.

Members of the family are expected to be present from Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, North Carolina, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Texas.

All persons belonging to or connected with the family are hereby invited to be present and participate in the meeting. Also, please notify your immediate families of the meeting, and arrange to meet them there and make it what the name implies—a family reunion. Matters of vital interest to the whole family will come before the meeting. It will be an opportunity of a life-time. Don't fail to be present.

W. P. Haworth, Ottawa, Indian Territory.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting was held at Newport on the 3d inst. It was attended by Dr. Richard H. Thomas, of Baltimore; John H. Dillingham, of Philadelphia, and Nathan Douglas, of Dunham, Maine. Nathan Douglas is now in his eighty-eighth year, but he is fresh and young in his spirit.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

In response to a call received through the Pastoral and Church Extension Board of Oregon Yearly Meeting, under the direction and by the assistance of said Board, I resigned my pastorate at Salem, and left on the 13th inst. for service in this field. I found a few Friends organized into a monthly meeting under the efficient labors of Amanda M. Way forming a nucleus for what promises to be in the near future, under God's blessing, a work of no small magnitude. A wide-open door is before us: "The fields are white." We have a nice, comfortable church building, remote from that of any other denomination, surrounded by people who are largely non-church-goers, many of whom are already expressing themselves as favorable to Friends. Our members, though coming to us from several of the evangelical churches, are working together in perfect harmony. "The spirit instead of the letter," as emphasized in our teaching, is responded to and meets a felt need in the hearts of inquirers after truth. "The work is great" and "The laborers are few;" our latch-string is out; come over and help us.

To the home-seeker the inducements are: a mild, healthful climate, agricultural and fruit lands at reasonable prices, with stock-raising and mining carried on extensively. Boise is a growing city of 8,000 people, doing a large mercantile business. I shall be glad to answer any inquiry respecting this country.

Address Charles R. Scott, Boise Idaho.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Funeral services for Sister Staton, a Wyandotte Indian woman, member of Ottawa Meeting, were held at the Ottawa Meeting House, Sabbath the 23d, and largely attended by both whites and Indians.

Jeremiah Hubbard, for many years an acquaintance of the family, was present and delivered the funeral discourse.

It was felt to be a solemn occasion and a favorable time for warning and admonition to those yet remaining.

W. P. and A. C. Haworth, who have been for four years missionaries at Ottawa, Indian Territory, will retire after October 1st, to obey what they apprehend to be a call of the Lord to engage in general Gospel work within the limits of Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings, for which minutes have been granted them by their monthly meeting.

Wichita, Kansas.—Our pastor, Barclay Hampton, after near three years of successful pastoral and evangelistic work, has concluded to close his pastoral work at Wichita and again enter the evangelistic field, in which he has been eminently successful. Any proposition from any of the fields needing his help will be carefully and prayerfully considered. All communications will reach him addressed to his permanent address, 222 North Washington Street, Wichita, Kansas.

(Signed) W. Hockett, Chairman of Evangelistic Committee.

There is a beauty at the goal of life,

A beauty growing since the world began,
Through every age and race, through lapse and strife,
Till the great human soul completes its span.
Beneath the waves of storm that lash and burn,
The currents of wild passions that appall,

To listen and keep watch till we discern
The tide of sovereign truth that guides it all;
So to address our spirits to the height,
And so attune them to the valiant whole,
That the great light be clearer for our light,
And the great soul the stronger for our soul,—
To have done this is to have lived, though fame
Remember us with no familiar name.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION AT CARMEL, IND.

Two hundred and twenty-five Christian Endeavorers of Western Yearly Meeting were in attendance at the mid-year convention, held at Carmel, Indiana, Sixth month 20th to 22d.

The line of thought through the entire convention was "Missions." Since the true aim of Christian Endeavor is to bring the world to Christ and the Church, the program was fittingly prepared and carried out, and all in attendance felt new zeal in the pushing of the gospel of Jesus wherever it is not known. The program was filled entirely by our own yearly meeting's workers.

Interest in missions and Christian living was manifest in the first session, and, steadily growing, reached its climax in the last service.

Each session was supplied with good music.

The attendance by the fathers and mothers was much appreciated. Their faces and words are always sources of cheer and encouragement to young Christians.

In the opening devotion more than a score of Scripture passages and many sentence prayers were offered by the Endeavorers.

After reading from 1 John 2, Thomas Brown emphasized the truth that our success as a convention depended upon our coming in touch with God.

A letter from E. M. Sein, our native missionary in Mexico, was read. It told us of their Christian Endeavor work at the mission stations. They, too, have the missionary spirit, and are using their mites to spread the Gospel in their home-land. The Juniors are sending their pennies to Africa: thus the ripple is widening.

Susie Mendenhall, of Vermilion Grove, Illinois, gave a most excellent address upon "Missions." This address was full of earnestness, helpfulness and hope. "Pray, Study, Give," the Student Volunteer motto, was her text. Prayer is the most important need in missions. Prayer counts more than money. Five dollars with prayer accomplishes much; five hundred dollars without prayer, little. Study is like fuel to a fire. We must steadily study missions, that the missionary fire may be kept burning. The rapid change of mission fields is one important reason for their study. Give not only your money, but your life, for Him. Christian Endeavorers should get a glimpse of what God intends us to give. We fall far short of His expectations.

The commission to go, to give, was given by Christ nineteen hundred years ago. "The one who cannot serve God anywhere can serve God nowhere." Five cents will keep a converted Hindoo preaching all day. Hundreds are ready and anxious to preach Christ to their fellow-men, but must work for bread at a few pennies a day. Mission boards are better able to control the work than ever before. Why do we not give forth? May we rise to the great possibilities that are before us as young people. The speaker closed the session by a short missionary conference, from which new interest was felt in the work. She also gave a very beautiful word picture of the needs of more workers in foreign lands to the Juniors on Fourth-day afternoon.

The work of Susie Mendenhall at this convention was praise-worthy, and will long remain with those who heard her earnest words and saw her modest but enthusiastic manner.

An excellent address was given by Prof. Irving King, of Bloomingdale. His theme was "Giving." This was followed by an address, "Our Financial Policy," by Dr. S. Newlin, of Kokomo.

The following are some of the thoughts from these addresses:

"There is that giveth and scattereth." "Giving should not only be liberal, but systematic. "Sowing sparingly reaps sparingly." "The gift is not sought for, but the fruit that increaseth to your account." "The love of God in the heart, and seeing the necessity for giving, solves the problem of giving." "Our purpose for giving is to fulfil the commandments in the Bible, to fulfil our duty to God and man. The one who gives has it given unto him is an excellent principle of the universe." "Giving is one of our joyful privileges. Growth depends upon it." "Giving promotes deepened and heightened Christian life, makes the giver a partaker with God, gives him increased faith, interest in the good, sympathy, and prosperity." "Study the needs to create an atmosphere of giving." "Love is the great characteristic of the Divine. Love means giving freely. Give from knowledge blended with love." "Giving is one of the Christian graces." "Possibilities are limited by our weaknesses and not by God." "Ingredients for securing work are: Get right before God, ask for it, hustle."

A symposium was conducted by A. J. Brown, of Indianapolis, from which interest and practical good were derived.

The Junior session was full of interest and inspiration for the delegates. Their part of the program showed faithful work, and increased our hope for the future of Christian Endeavor.

Eliza C. Armstrong delivered a most excellent address, treating of our motto, "For Christ and the Church." She said that if Christian Endeavor means anything it means everything. To efficiently serve Christ, preparation must be made. This organization is a drilling ground. It is a high calling to be a member of the Church. Stay with it. Study the Word. Love of pleasure is perhaps the greatest hindrance to doing God's work.

Like at the marriage feast, the best of the wine seemed to be reserved for the closing session.

After a very blessed service, spent in song, prayer and praise, R. Anna Sanders took up the theme, "The Quiet Hour." From this paper we learned the importance of a fixed time and place of secret communion with God. People who hold no communion with God lose the music of life. Service for Him is needful to spiritual growth. All can do some service for Him. If God could use an old, dried-up rod, He can use you and me. Daily examination and correction is a necessity to Christian living.

Z. H. Doan ably treated the subject, "Hot and Cold in Christian Endeavor Work," in the absence of J. H. Tormohlen, of Watseka, Illinois, after which the Mizpah Benediction was given.

Among the resolutions presented to the convention were the following:

1. Resolved, That the tide of spiritual life has steadily increased as we have met from session to session, and be it further resolved, that we will try to make this prophetic.
2. Whereas, We as Christian Endeavorers, realize the vital importance of the Junior division of our Union, therefore, be it resolved, that we extend to the Juniors our hearty congratulations for their progress and our earnest appreciation of the work accomplished by the Junior superintendent.
3. Whereas, We see in the "Quiet Hour" movement the perpetuation of a practice which proved so helpful to our fathers and mothers in the Friends' Church; therefore, we recommend it heartily to all our people, urging that we turn aside daily for a little talk with Jesus, in which we not only talk to Him, but give Him a chance to talk to us.

O, Father, of Thy love we ask
For strength and grace to bravely bear
The weight of this day's fret and care;
For patience in the common task!

—Arthur Kelchum.

Married.

STANLEY—MUSSELWHITE.—At the home of the bride, near Wilson, in Ellsworth Co., Kansas, Asbury A. Stanley and Jessie Musselwhite, Seventh month 22d. The groom is a Friend. The bride is a member of the Evangelical church.

NEWBY—MITCHELL.—At the residence of Joseph Pearson, Seventh month 26th, 1899, Morton E. Newby to Mary Mitchell, both of Kennard, Indiana.

MARSHALL—FARLEY.—At the home of the bride's parents, in Herbst, Indiana, Seventh month 22d, 1899, Verlin Winslow Marshall, of Roseburgh, Indiana, to Anna Alberta Farley, of Herbst, Indiana, both members of Deer Creek Monthly Meeting.

NORRIS—SMITH.—At the residence of Thomas C. Rateliff, near Russiaville, Indiana, on the evening of the 25th of Seventh month, Charles H. Norris, of Thorntown, Indiana, to Flonda Smith, of Russiaville, Indiana.

Died.

DAY.—Sarah A. Day, wife of Samuel H. Day, died at her home, near Pearl, Nebraska, on Seventh month 22d. She was in her 57th year. Converted in her 15th year, she joined the Methodist church, in which she continued until near the close of 1890, when she joined Douglass Monthly Meeting of Friends, near Pearl. She was ever a faithful Christian, beloved by all who knew her. She will be much missed from her home meeting.

ELLIS.—Benjamin F. Ellis died Sixth month 4th, 1899, aged 44 years, 8 months and 28 days. He was the son of Thomas and Miriam Ellis (deceased). He was converted at the age of 18, under the ministry of Francis Jenkins, and was ever after a Christian and devoted Sabbath school worker. He was married to Rebecca R. Hedgecock, Fourth month 7th, 1881. To this union three sons and four daughters were born, four of whom preceded him to the better land.

GARRINGER.—William Garringer died Fourth month 2d, 1899, in the 31st year of his age. He was a member of Pike Preparative and Portland Monthly Meeting, Indiana.

HUTCHINS.—Jemima J. Hutchins died at her home in Chester, Ind., Sixth month 15th, 1899, aged 58 years, 10 months. She was a lifelong member of the Society of Friends. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss. She died in the triumphs of faith in which she had lived.

MARSHBURN.—Died, at his residence, in Alamance County, N. C., on the 10th of Sixth month, 1899, Obed Marshburn, a lifelong member of Cane Creek Monthly Meeting. His end was peaceful, and prospects of a happy immortality bright. His age was 77 years.

PERRY.—Died at the home of his father, William H. Perry, near Wakefield, Rhode Island, Sixth month 22d, 1899, Daniel Edward Perry, aged 35 years, 7 months and 21 days. An exemplary young man has gone to his home above.

News and Events.

The Mazet Assembly Committee of New York City, instituted for investigating the charges of municipal corruption under Tammany's present regime, after taking a vacation of six weeks has resumed its sittings. This committee has endeavored to ferret out the lawlessness, and to lay bare the system of extortion and spoils politics which mark Van Wyck's administration. The committee's counsel, Frank Moss, last week called as witnesses the firm of Horgan & Sattery, architects, to whom it is alleged contracts have been awarded with reckless favoritism. The testimony while somewhat incriminating, revealed no startling evidence. There seems no doubt, however, that it has been almost solely through influence with the administration that they have been awarded so much of the city's work. Tammany believes that all the offices and all the contracts belong to the club. This same firm has filed a petition in bankruptcy with unsecured liabilities of $191,392. Another department which the committee is about to investigate is that of the police force. Since Chief Devery became head of the police it is charged that robberies and crime have greatly increased, and that the efforts of officers of the law have been directed not so much to suppression of crime as to the concealment of the facts. All the police captains have been subpoenaed to appear and bring their "robbery books."

The true inwardness of the Tallulah lynching when five Sicilians were summarily killed by a Louisiana mob, seems to be as follows: In Madison Parish, Louisiana, there were only seven Italians altogether. In the small town of Tallulah, situated in Madison, resided five of these foreigners, three of whom, however, seem to have been naturalized. All these Italians were men, and were engaged in honest occupations. They were industrious and peaceable. One of the Sicilians (they were all from Cefalu, Sicily), was Frank De Fatta, who had a fruit store adjoining the residence of Dr. Hodge. The two had been on the best of terms, the physician having attended his neighbor who appreciated the kindness, and who afterwards refused to allow Dr. Hodge to pay for fruit bought at his store. De Fatta, however, kept some goats which annoyed Dr. Hodge by running up and down his porch at night. After several complaints that remained unnoticed, Dr. Hodge shot one of the goats, which greatly excited De Fatta. The matter was smoothed over. When, however, on July 20th, the doctor was returning home, as he was passing in front of the stores of Charles and Joe De Fatta, brothers of Frank, the former rushed upon him and grappled with him. Joe De Fatta seeing the fight got his gun. The doctor fired his pistol, and Joe then discharged his gun inflicting a not dangerous wound. The news of the shooting spread rapidly, and the white citizens were immediately in favor of lynching all the Italians. Only two escaped of the seven, all of whom were present at the disturbance. It is said the Italians fraternized with the negroes. This may partially account for, though it will not excuse the fierceness of the lynchers, since the whites have held law with a high hand. This they deem necessary, for out of a total population in Madison Parish of 16,000, there are only 160 white families.

The Yaqui Indians, a roving and lawless band, have been raiding and plundering in Mexico throughout the lower Yaqui river country. Mexicans and Americans have been killed, and fears are expressed for the safety of American prospectors who have been pouring into the Sierra Madre mountains during the past year. Signs of the present trouble became apparent July 22d, when Chief Tetabiate, always peacefully inclined, ordered the tribe to remain quiet, and had five of the offenders shot. The Indians fell upon their chief and beat him to death with clubs, and then a large band massacred fifty soldiers in the Bacum barracks, and then went down the river plundering and murdering. They are on the war path and trouble is awaited. Two thousand to five thousand braves are under arms. The Yaquis were subdued in May, 1897, by General Torres, who told them then that if they ever broke the treaty and caused more trouble, it would be a signal for the extermination of the tribe. During the two years of peace the Indians have been busy in collecting arms and ammunition, and they are said to be well equipped for a long and bloody campaign.

The rumor has been circulated that the Czar of Russia is preparing to abdicate his throne in favor of his brother, the Grand Duke Michael. The reason given is disappointment in the outcome of The Hague conference, and the absence of an heir. The story, as published, originated with M. de B'owitz, the brilliant, but not always reliable, Paris correspondent of the London "Times." M. De'casse has lately been sent on an unknown mission to St. Petersburg. Blowitz asserts that he has his information from a "source to which I am bound to attach importance," and he avers that Delcassee's visit is to endeavor to dissuade the Czar in his alleged plan to abdicate, forcing upon him the solemn engagement he has entered into with France, and to convince him of his duty in fulfilling this.

Colonel Hawkins, commander of the regiment, died on the voyage out from Yokohama.—On the 2d the "Relief" reached San Francisco from Manila with 320 invalid soldiers aboard.—During the month of July the War Department expended $19,000,000, or more than half a million dollars per day.

IRREVERENCE ONE OF OUR PERILS.

Vulgarity is Causing Us to Regard Few Things as Sacred.

"Mischievous is the irreverent and scornful use of the tongue that often vulgarizes the very temple of sweetness and purity," writes Newell Dwight Hillis, in the August "Ladies' Home Journal." "No person of refinement and culture can doubt that irreverence is one of the perils of our day. In former times men entered the cathedral, rich with colored glass, with marble and pictures and rare tapestries, to whitewash the frescoes, smash statues, and use the paintings and tapestries for doormats. But it has been reserved for our generation to enter the temple of reverence to destroy all ideals, to rob the noble names of their grandeur and the noblest places of their majesty. To-day vulgarity permits sanctity to attach to few objects or ideals. In 1896, when Athens revived the Olympian games and America sent its representatives, there journeyed to that ancient land a vender of patent medicines, who was discovered sticking an advertisement of his porous plaster upon the walls of the Pantheon!"

MORTAR ONCE USED

Cannot Bind Brick and Stone a Second Time.

In a recent article by Dr. David H. Reeder, Professor of Hygiene and Dietetics of the College of Medicine and Surgery, Chicago, he states: "A chemist may steep lime shell in a quantity of pure water so that a portion of the lime will be dissolved in the water. Let this water be taken into the stomach of the person to whom we desire to supply bone material. Will this lime now undergo a change such as will convert it into bone? No more than will mortar.

This is a good illustration of the reason for the failure to obtain results in rebuilding the body by administering certain minerals from the drug shop. Once the principals have been made into lime, potash, etc., they cannot be re-arranged into the human economy readily, but these elements or minerals are needed in very delicate particles for the rebuilding of certain structure in the human body. We should obtain them from the grains, for in that way Nature presents them with the molecules so delicately divided that the human system takes them up.

This is true of Grape-Nuts, the famous food made with the special intent of rebuilding the brain, solar plexus and nerve centres of the human body by offering the phosphate of potash in a natural way, which combines with albumen and does the work intended.

Grape-Nuts are delicious to the taste, made up in the form of small granules glistening with grape sugar, and form an ideal breakfast dish. Sold by all grocers at 15 cents per package.

SHORT PARAGRAPHS.

It seems that Tammany is not to own the Lakes of Killarney, as was recently rumored. News, however, has been received that the Muckross estates on which the Lakes are situated, have been bought by A. G. Peck, a wealthy American, now living in London, so there is no doubt that this beautiful region has been up for sale. It does not appear whether A. G. Peck made the purchase entirely on his own account, or whether he represented a body of individuals. At any rate the transaction seems to have been entirely satisfactory to every one concerned, and it is said that tourists will still be allowed the freedom they have hitherto enjoyed.

A community of Socialists, known as the Ruskin Colony, has for some time been established in the mountains of eastern Tennessee. Here with well-intentioned effort they have endeavored, three hundred strong, to put into practice certain social principles of John Ruskin, the English author and idealist. Unfortunately, these communists have become involved in financial difficulties, and the colony is now in a receiver's hands, but, nothing daunted, the chief promoters of the cause, believing that a new location near the sea will serve in a large measure to give them such opportunities as they need, have planned to come down from the mountains and settle on the Chuckatuck Creek, about twenty miles from Norfolk, Va. The colonists are said to be industrious, temperate and honest. History has no hopeful sign for their success, their own experience even being against them, and while it will be interesting to watch the later developments, there is little encouragement for their success.

An unusual experiment is being made in New Zealand. This is nothing more nor less than an attempt to provide for deserving aged persons by pensions. To get the benefit of this state pension one must have been in the country for twenty-five years, and must be at least sixty-five before applying for assistance. The amount deemed necessary to support a person is $5 a week, but as the pension has been limited to $90 a year, it is at once supposed that the legislators expected the pensioner to be in a measure independent with his own means. This part of the act is considered the most unsatisfactory, and when "The Old Age Pensions Act," as it is called, expires by limitations in 1900, it is generally thought it will be superseded by another statute which will insure to all aged citizens of the colony the full provision which is declared by the law itself to be equitable. There are, it appears, about seven thousand persons in New Zealand who are entitled to pensions, and it is calculated that about $1,200,000 a year will be required to insure to each of these the full income of $5 a week. Whatever opposition has existed against the measure is now disappearing, and the law seems destined to be a success.

The Klondike is said to have sent $11,000,000 in gold to this country this season.

According to Clara Barton, there are 50,000 destitute orphans on the island of Cuba.

The house in Washington where Abraham Lincoln died is being repaired, and will be used for the exhibition of Lincoln relics.

William Waldorf Astor, who is reputed to be worth two hundred million dollars, has expatriated himself and become a British subject.

The disproportion of the sexes is still very great in Australia. In West Australia, e. g., there were only 54,000 women in a population of 168,000.

Victoria, Australia, has cast 145,014 votes in favor of federation to 9,605 against it. Tasmania's vote was 13,800 in favor to 800 against Australian federation.

In twenty-five of thirty-seven Nebraska counties the mortgages discharged exceed those filed during the past six months by the sum of nearly $1,000,000.

The earnings of Rudyard Kipling from his pen are reported to amount to $60,000 per year, or $10,000 more than the salary of the President of the United States.

The conference of the powers at Brussels upon the African liquor traffic reached no beneficial results. A slight increase upon the duties levied upon imported spirits was agreed to.

The vital statistics of England show that the birth rate declined materially in the twenty-two years between 1876 and 1898. The causes assigned are deferred marriages, a smaller number of marriages, etc.

The July record of new incorporations involves a total capitalization of $335,000,000, which is close to the June record of $365,000,000. The Distilling Company of America alone contributed $125,000,000 to the July figures.

In commemoration of the thousandth anniversary in 1901 of King Alfred's death, it has been decided that a statue of him, together with a hall, to be used as a museum of early English history, shall be erected at Winchester, where he was buried.

"A few days ago in Paterson, N. J.," says "Electricity," "the X-ray was probably the means of saving the life of a fifteen-months-old child who had swallowed a nickel which had lodged in its throat. A scientific expedition which has recently returned from Alaska, discovered a large glacier had receded three miles in twenty years. For some reason the climate, apparently, has become warmer.

Eighty-four per cent. of the entire State of Idaho is still public land, amounting to more than 44,000,000 acres. Of this area it has been estimated by the Government Geological survey that 2,000,000 acres can be irrigated successfully.

Returns to the treasury department show 311,878 immigrants up to June 30th, against 229,299 for the previous year. The largest number of immigrants in any one year in the history of the United States was 788,992 in 1882. The next largest was in 1881, 669,431, and the next in 1892, 423,084.

Air brakes have been introduced on about 250 street cars in New York City, thus adding greatly to the safety of running the cars. Horse cars have finally disappeared from the metropolis, and with the introduction of cars run by compressed air, and with the rapidly increasing popularity of the automobile, the horse seems doomed to a precarious existence in our large cities.

A scale of wages has been agreed upon between the American Tin Plate Company and the Wage Committee of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, by which the employees of the former are granted a straight increase of 15 per cent.

An interesting bit of information is the fact that a plan is on foot to unite England and Ireland by a tunnel. The route proposed is twenty-five miles long; the water above the tunnel to be eighty-five fathoms deep, and the estimated cost $60,000,000. It is calculated that the existence of the tunnel will make possible a three days' voyage between the United States and Great Britain, and that an average of more than twelve hours could be saved in delivering mail in London. The project seems stupendous, but altogether possible, and its consummation is quite likely to come about within a few years.

USE FOR POPCORN.

A Natural and Healthful Proceeding.

Those who prefer good food and natural living as a means of health, rather than the drug habit, will be interested to know that many obstinate cases of constipation are greatly helped by eating a good quantity, (say a double handful) of popped corn.

It should be thoroughly masticated and eaten perhaps in place of the evening meal.

The effect is likely to be felt in the morning and generally produces results satisfactory to the user.

Then the far back cause of the trouble should be sought out and remedied.

Very often indeed the cause comes from a weakened condition of the delicate nerves and muscles of the intestines, and they are simply powerless to do their work.

Coffee is, in the majority of cases, the active cause of this weakened condition as will be plainly shown by a return to health and strength in these parts when coffee is left off for a month and Postum Cereal Food Coffee used. The latter furnishes the food elements needed to quickly rebuild the delicate gray substance in the minute nerve centers all over the human body, and abounding vigorous health is the result.

A UNIQUE TEST OF INSANITY.

In Washington a distinguished physician was examined as to his sanity. It was alleged that his mind was giving way from the excessive use of opium. He admitted that this was the case, but said that he was capable of treating himself. From his intelligent answers the judge was inclined to consider his case with favor. The doctor, however, wishing to heighten the good impression, asked permission to read an original poem. As he had recently received a cross from a friend he had dedicated to him the poem, which was entitled "The Holy Cross." The judge was willing to hear the poem, but when the doctor had finished reading twenty verses the judge committed him to an asylum for treatment. This has a jocose aspect, but it is often one of the most reliable tests of insanity. Many a lunatic can converse so as to deceive an expert for some time, but he cannot write a poem, and many instances have occurred in which the writing is perfect, and the conversation that of a lunatic. The writing of poetry in old age by those who never did it before is often the first indication of senile dementia. Whereas "spring poetry," like the chicken-pox, recurs in every generation, and though disagreeable while it lasts, is soon over.—"The Christian Advocate."

PUBLISHERS' NOTES.

The advantage of using our column of "Subscribers' Wants" as a bureau of information to keep Friends informed of suitable places to board in our large cities is well illustrated by the following letter which we have recently received, and which is a fair sample of others which are occasionally sent us: "I and my wife expect to spend one week in — the latter part of September. Can you refer me to a private home where we could get good accommodation at reasonable rates? We prefer to stop with Friends. Information on this line will be appreciated."

Sometimes in making a change of address our subscribers fail to inform us of the post-office where mail has been received up to the time of the change of location, and which it is necessary for us to have to make the proper entry on our mailing list. The omission is of course unintentional, but delay in receiving papers and the attending annoyance might be prevented by observing the following rule which appears in the paper regularly:

Change of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent two weeks before the change is to take effect.

All subscribers who have not yet responded to bills for subscriptions that are due will greatly favor the publishers by making early remittances. Kindly examine the label on paper or wrapper, as the date thereon indicates the time to which the subscription has been paid. If the date is previous to the present issue or even with the current week, then the subscription is due for another year.

In hardly any subject are educators interested more just now than in the adequate and satisfactory representation at the Paris Exposition of American education. The Director of Education and Social Economy for the United States, Mr. Howard J. There are several striking pictures with Mr. Rogers's article. ($3 a year. The Outlook Company, New York City.)

EDIBLE BIRDS' NESTS.

The nest of the little swift (a kind of swallow), gathered along the rocky cliffs with so much difficulty, and yet in such quantities on account of the Chinese demand, are formed of a salivary secretion which soon becomes firm on exposure to the air. They are a glutinous white substance with little red dots. They are clean, the nests being taken as soon as completed. The little swift, being repeatedly robbed, is at last compelled to eke out its waning supply of secretion with little sticks and grass, and is thus enabled to lay its eggs and hatch its young, as only nests free from foreign material are merchantable.—"Self-Culture."

In order that people may be happy in their work three things are needed: they must be fit for it, they must not do too much of it, and they must have a sense of success in it.—Ruskin.

THE FOLDED PAGE.

Up in the quaint old attic as the raindrops pattered down,
And I sat, idly turning a school book—dusty, brown—
I came to a leaf that was folded, and marked in a childish hand,
"The teacher says, to leave this now, 'tis hard to understand."

What was so hard—I wondered. I opened it with a smile, Only to read, at the problem's end: "We learned 'why' after while."

My tears fell thick as the raindrops then, up in the attic old,
As I thought of leaves that are "folded down" till the days of our lives are told.

One was folded there with a tender hand to the sound of summer rain;

When the dust of years lies thick above, will we open this page again?

And can we write with steady hand, and on our lips a smile;
"At last our Teacher told us 'why,' and 'we learned it—after-while!'"

FRIENDS WHO HAVE BEEN CONNECTED WITH THE ORIGIN OF FOUR UNIVERSITIES.

It is a remarkable fact that Friends, with a membership of only one hundred thousand in the United States, yet control and manage eight colleges, but it is a fact not so well known, that Friends have been directly or indirectly connected with the founding and development of four great American universities. The first Friend, our founder, believed that there should be institutions to teach "everything civil and useful in creation," and when he spoke those words he expressed clearly, tersely and broadly the scope of a modern university, and he took a position as sound and broad-based as ever any religious leader took. This idea has never been entirely lost in the ebbs and flows of our two and a half centuries of history, though unfortunately too few of our members have kept within sight of our broad-minded founder, and not seldom have our Friends of different periods proved timorous and fearful of the unrestrained search for truth. truth which is fundamental in our religious body—viz., that the Spirit of God is still leading men, and the living Christ is still acting upon all responsive hearts—should make us capable of taking a brave and valiant place in the front ranks to-day in the work of interpreting Christianity to our age, and in making modern thought constructive for the truth. So believed the men who helped lay the foundations of the higher institutions of learning of which we shall speak, though they all builded greater than they knew.

Brown University, first called "Rhode Island College," was the seventh American college in order of foundation, and began a precarious existence, with one student, at Warren, Rhode Island, in the year 1765.

In these early days the college was "for the most part friendless and moneyless, and therefore forlorn, insomuch that a college edifice was hardly to be thought of," but in the year 1770 a vigorous contention arose regarding the proper location of the college, almost as many cities claiming it as of old claimed the poet Homer after he was dead. The first suggestion of Providence for its home came from Moses Brown, who joined Friends that same year, and when he once conceived the idea he allowed no obstacle to block this purpose. He headed the movement of the citizens to raise the necessary funds to secure the college, while he and his three brothers took charge of building the necessary buildings and purchasing the land for the same. They decided upon the original home lot of Chad Brown, "the first Baptist elder in Providence." So that Moses Brown could write modestly and with truth to President Wayland, in 1833: "Thou may see that our family had an interest in promoting the institution, now Brown University, besides the purchase of the name by my worthy nephew, Nicholas!" This last remark refers to the donations of money and land made by Nicholas Brown, which secured the name

Brown University. It should be added that Stephen Hopkins, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a member of the Society of Friends until 1770, and an attender of Friends' meeting all his life, was chancellor of the corporation all through its early history, and two members of the Society of Friends have been kept on the board of trustees until the present time.

Cornell University, at Ithaca, New York, now one of the foremost seats of learning in this country, was founded by Ezra Cornell in 1868 and endowed munificently. Ezra Cornell's parents were both Friends, and he himself was a member at the time of his marriage, but as he "married out," he was required to make "an acknowledgment of regret," or to be formally excluded from membership. He felt that he could not honorably make the acknowledgment, and so he "continued in suspense" during the remainder of his life. He always attended Friends' meeting, however, and never gave allegiance to any other religious sect. He maintained throughout his life his love and sympathy for the Friends, and he always used the "plain language" with his parents and relatives. He suffered the loss of his membership through the enforcement of a rule which was perhaps the greatest blunder the Society of Friends ever made, and so, as a result, he was technically not a member when the university was founded; but he was nursed a Friend, and his life and character were formed amid Quaker customs and associations, so that Cornell distinctly has a Quaker pedigree, though it now is in the strictest sense undenominational.

Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, was founded and endowed by Johns Hopkins of that city in the year 1873, and opened in 1876. It soon became one of the leading universities in America for graduate work, and it probably has done as much as any other institution in our country for the introduction into our universities of European methods of research and study, and for the promotion of profound and exact scholarship.

Johns Hopkins, its founder, was born of consistent and devout Quaker parents, and grew to manhood in their faith. He early showed that he had a remarkable ability as a man of business, and he became one of the great merchants of his city. The overseers of his meeting felt that in a certain feature of his extensive business he violated the letter of the "Discipline," and he was disowned by the Monthly Meeting as a result. He, however, remained attached to the Society of Friends through the rest of his life, and was a constant attender of Baltimore Meeting, contributing regularly to the support of the meeting and for the erection of the meeting house, and he was buried according to Friends' custom. He was a great reader of good books, a close student of the Bible, which he read daily, and he was a great helper of young men, both in financial and many other ways. Ever since the founding of Johns Hopkins' University, Friends have been prominent in the management of it, Francis T. King, James Carey Thomas, Joseph P. Elliott and Francis White being members of the board of trustees. Strangely enough, the three men who were most prominently associated in the foundation of Brown, Cornell and Johns Hopkins' Universities, viz., Stephen Hopkins, Ezra Cornell and Johns Hopkins, were all disowned from membership with Friends, and yet they all three maintained their love, their loyalty and their interest in the Society of Friends in spite of its action toward them, and they were Friends at heart to the end of their lives.

The connection of Friends with Princeton University is much more indirect, and yet the historical association is an interesting one. In the year 1681 the Quakers came into control of New Jersey, and Robert Barclay, the Scotchman, the famous apologist for "the sect called Quakers," was appointed governor of the colony, though he never came over in person.

The appointment of Robert Barclay as governor, and the liberal policy of the government promised by the Quakers, with the assured stability of the colony under such management, went far toward determining the emigration to New Jersey of a large company of Scotch Presbyterians. In 1746 the Presbyterians in the colony founded the College of New Jersey, which was opened first at Elizabeth, afterwards moved to Newark, and finally located permanently at Princeton in 1756, where, under the name of Princeton University, for nearly a century and a half it has carried on its great work. We have no desire to overestimate the association of Friends with these four institutions, and we are aware that in the case of Princeton the connection is at the most remote and indirect, yet we believe that the facts which are here set forth should be generally known, and they show distinctly that Friends have helped to pass on the torch of truth, though they have not always held the staff in their own hands.

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

THERE is a great passage in Paul's first Corinthian letter in which he sets forth the various gifts that have been conferred upon individuals by the Head of the Church for the perfecting of believers and the upbuilding of the whole body. But after unrolling the long list of lesser gifts and greater gifts and their interrelation, he suddenly sees, with his heavenly vision, the supreme thing which makes a man a son of God, and which makes a church the bride of Christ, and without which even best gifts are unavailing, and he bursts forth with the words, "but I will show you a more excellent way." We all know, or should know, His more excellent way. It is better than tongues of men and of angels, it is greater than gifts of prophecy and all knowledge of mysteries, it surpasses even faith that could remove mountains, it outreaches the philanthropy that gives and sacrifices. It is the perfect which comes when the things that are "in part" are done away. It is the face to face life with God when the dark mirror, which gives only distorted reflections, has been given up. It is the completed thing which comes after the childish things have been put away. It is the last, best, highest, divinest, heavenliest fruit the soul ever wins and that toward which the whole divine purpose moves—love. "Follow after love," he says, and the other apostle of love says that this is the test of sonship—"he that loveth is born of God."

There can be no perfecting of saints without it, there can be no bride of Christ without it. It is easy to sprinkle with water, it is easy to eat the bread and drink the wine, it is easy to sing the psalm and chant the hymn, it is easy to wear the garb and say the phrase, it is easy to pray with the lips and to speak words; but the finished Christian is known by the love which suffereth long and is kind, which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things—and that is hard to attain. It comes not by an easy method. It comes not from the laying on of hands, it is not given as a prize for strict orthodoxy, nor for eagerness in pursuing what is new, it is no gift of priest or church.

It is the fruit of being born of God, it is the perfume which comes from a transformed life, it is the glorious sign that a human life has been changed until it has received the mark of the divine nature—love; for God is Love. It is not puffed up, it is not provoked, it vaunteth not itself, it seeketh not its own; it constructeth, it cements, it unifies, it vitalizes. Christians are told to love even as Christ loved! If they once fulfilled this command they would become an irresistible spiritual power, and the realm of the King would widen beyond all conception. This is "the more excellent way," and yet we try every other way instead!

EDITORIAL NOTE.

JOHN G. LANE, the Friend whose picture appears on our front cover this week, bequeathed in his will $100,000 to New York Yearly Meeting for educational purposes, as reported editorially in a former issue. We expect in the near future to present a sketch of his life.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The seventh general council of the "Alliance of the Reformed Churches throughout the World holding the Presbyterian system" will be held in Washington, D. C., Ninth month 27th to Tenth month 6th.

The Hawaiian foreign missionary board proposes to send missionaries to the Yap and Pelew islands, in the Philippine group, and especially to the island of Mindanao, where there is now no Protestant missionary.

A. C. Garner, a colored minister, has been refused admission to the summer school connected with the Columbian University, in Washington, on account of race prejudice. This institution is under the care of the Baptists.

The National Congregational Council will meet in Boston, Ninth month 20th to 28th. The topics to be discussed will cover the general grounds of theology, the Christian idea of the state, relations of other religions to Christian theology, the obligations and duties of Congregationalism in different lands, foreign missions, etc.

At the Wesleyan Conference, recently held in London, in the report of the Twentieth Century Fund, it was stated that of the million guineas asked for by that denomination as a memorial offering, £669,214 have been promised and £86,572 have been actually received. For a like fund the primitive Methodists of England have raised £50,000.

A caste war is in progress in India. The Shanars, a comparatively low caste, have for a long time been striving to secure recognition as a high caste from their claims to descent from the high caste of ancient Kshatriyas. These Shanars constitute less than ten per cent. of the population, and the majority are determined to keep them down. One village of 220 houses has been laid in ruins, and similar outrages are frequent.

The following information has been received in this country from Rome: "The Standing Council of Prelates has reported to the Pope, recommending the separation of the Latin churches in South America from the jurisdiction of the Spanish primate, the appointment of an American primate, the creation of Latin-American ecclesiastical tribunals, and the granting of a special constitution regulating the relations of all the South American bishops with the civil authorities. The report suggests other far-reaching changes."

EQUALITY.

BY ELIZA C. ARMSTRONG.

This ideal among us was thought to be fully realized in practice in that our women held a business meeting on nearly the same line of church affairs that her brothers did, and that one could come to no final conclusion on any matter without the consent of the other. We say nearly the same line of affairs, as in all the heavier matters of the church work that involved finances or business enterprises, as the erection of buildings and the establishing of schools, etc., men assumed the responsibility, even though some women were appointed on these committees. The report from such committees were invariably presented to men's meetings, then to the women's meeting, with the additional information of the disposition made of the report by the brethren, and, with exceptions so rare as to be phenomenal, the women "concurred in men's judgment," so that, practically, they as a meeting assumed no real responsibility anywhere in the affair. The time came when it was conceived that the Quaker theory of equality would be better realized if the separate session was discontinued, and all met as one meeting. This thought won its way slowly, but when it came to be fully understood that in our courts the records of men's meetings only would be accepted as the church's proceedings, except as testimony, it was finally accepted that no real sacrifice was being made. As it now is, women and men are co-ordinate members of the same denomination, whereas formerly women could hardly be accounted as members in the fullest sense of the term. Now from our subordinate meeting to our meetings of highest authority women are one with their brothers in the church, in opportunity and privilege, so far as any rule of organization is concerned. Over-lapping this change that established fully the co-ordination of the sexes in church relationship, the women were providentially called to organize themselves for foreign mission work.

There are so many things that cluster about this movement that has been set forth repeatedly, that furnished conclusive evidence that it was of the Lord, that a repetition of them here is needless. Suffice it to say, however, that because of it our theory of equality of the sexes in the church seems to be put to a new test. Our Women's Foreign Missionary Societies have done much to bring our people out of our long time, unwise seclusion. This agency has put Quaker women into a position in which it is possible for them to be recognized and used in the inter-denominational fellowship of the organized Christian womanhood of the world, which opens to us a field of enlarged usefulness and development, and for increased information far beyond that which the separate business session afforded. We could not possibly have these privileges and enjoy this providential opportunity only through a separate organization.

This much in brief for our invaluable opportunities outside our denominational limits. Inside of these lines, what has it done for us? We have studied mission problems, policies, fields, adaptability and fitness, and what constitutes a true call to missionary work, and other kindred points, with a sense of responsibility, and with an earnestness and in a business-like way that we should not have done had we been associated in a way with others that would naturally have relieved us of a certain weight of care, and so that these deepening, broadening phases of the work would not have appealed to us so directly and definitely.

Again, we founded a paper. It is owned, managed, edited and published, and its policy outlined by women. In this one thing we have a practical test of equality that is valuable, as other papers have from time to time been founded, owned, edited, published, and their policy outlined by men.

The question arises: Is not this a better expression of equality than if women had been made members of the various publishing associations of men? Is not our present opportunity the superior one? Has not a paper founded by women an equal claim upon the church membership with one founded by men? Equality is not compelled to express itself in one way only, and it certainly includes the privilege of either sex originating and developing work.

We can assert with much confidence that it never was the spirit of the women's society to assume the work of foreign missions for the church; but their purpose was to mass the women for their own good, and to make of them a more efficient helpmeet to the work of the church, in the great field of world evangelization.

In three of our yearly meetings the Women's Foreign Missionary Societies performed the double function of serving the yearly meeting as its committee on foreign missions, and also that of a Women's Foreign Missionary Society. This is so because the yearly meeting desired to have it this way, the women themselves recognizing that this is not the ideal way. There are other lines of church work that show symptoms of vanishing from the ideal. For instance, our schools that stand for co-ordinate education of the sexes. Earlham College, at Richmond, Ind., is under the management of a board of twelve trustees. At first these were equally divided between the sexes. Now there are nine men and three women. Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa, is managed by a board of sixteen trustees, fourteen men and two women.

We have no fear for the principle of co-ordination of the sexes in our religious denomination. But that this principle may find additional modes of expression is neither impossible nor undesirable.

AIMING AT PERFECTION.

It is only by trying to better our best that we can bring up our average. The head of the weather bureau does not expect the forecasts of his department to be always right, but he intends them to be always right. To lose sight of the ideal is to lower the real, and "good enough" is more than a step on the road to "too bad."—S. S. Times.

THE PRESENT DEMAND.

BY BEVAN BINFORD.

The Friends to-day are passing through one of the most interesting and decisive transitions of their history. For more than a century in the homes of temperate Quaker families were developed a sturdiness of manhood and strength of character which may justly be said to be without a peer. Then came the time, just as does in the individual, when these developed virtues could not be kept within ourselves but demanded expression to the world. The introduction of revival methods thirty years ago was the beginning of this self-expression and the entrance upon the larger mission for which the previous century had been preparing. The transition was fraught with all the birth-pangs of a new movement—difficulty, dissension, division—but its power was that of God, and unchecked. The past thirty years have been marvelous years of evangelization, both at home and abroad. Every year has been a repetition of the great revivals of 1867 until they have become so common we cease to marvel.

As already intimated, we are in the midst of another transition. Thanks to the larger, more tolerant, more Christ-like spirit of our times, it is not producing the dissensions and divisions which have been the outgrowth of almost every previous change in method of work, but it is no less important nor far-reaching in its results. In the first of the periods above referred to, the great emphasis was given to the development of upright character with little reference to the new birth. The period into which we were ushered by the revivals of 1867 has been one of great emphasis of the spiritual birth. And now our mission is growing yet larger. The past thirty years of revival have brought upon us a new epoch. Large numbers of our membership have not generations of temperate Quakerism and a babyhood of Quaker training back of them. They have come among us at the invitation of God. If we fulfill the new mission of our new day, new methods must again be adopted; not less attention given to evangelization but more to the everyday feeding of the flock, the development of Christian character, the union of the old and new teachings, the leading of men into Christian service.

That this change is actually going on, that the church has the vitality to change its method of work with the change of conditions, but adhere to its great principles and purposes, is one of the greatest evidences of its life and power. Resulting from this change of method there is arising a demand such as has not been before among Friends. It is a demand for men and women of broad culture and large sympathies, acquainted with the Word, filled with the Spirit, willing to give their every day lives to the care of the great work our evangelists have heaped upon us. That this demand is great and growing—this is my message to the young men and women of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

It may be true that there are able ministers within our borders whose gifts the church is permitting to die while the minister feeds his body, but the rule is beginning to be the other way. Men who are but half trained for such responsible places are being invited to the very strategic points in the lines of our advancement because no better can be had. At the same time, in looking over the list of ministers of Kansas Yearly Meeting I have found a very large proportion to be made up of those beyond middle age, and my disappointment has not been relieved by inquiry for those who are looking forward to the ministry.

In the face of these facts I write with an earnest prayer that young men and women who may feel that they may have a place in the ministry may recognize the grandeur of their calling and think no more to rush into it with untrained minds than with impure hearts. I write to say to every such person who may look about his country community and say, The church does not need me, if the galleries are full of ministers; or that it will not use me, if they are empty—I write to say to such as these: Be true to your innermost convictions. Prepare for the great work before you and the emergency into which the church is entering. As you throw your soul and life into such preparation you need not fear but that fields which ever seem to yourself too large will open before you and invite your efforts. The law is full; teachers clamor for position; multitudes of men are ready for every commercial opportunity; in most other churches there is a large supply of ministers. Aside from the mission field itself, I most devoutly believe that by the time our young men and women are ready for it—yea, even now—there is no field of service where there is a larger demand for the right kind of men than in the ministry of the Friends.

What, then, shall we do about it? What are you going to do about it, young man, whose lips are already burning with the coal of fire, whose heart has already been filled with a desire to speak a message to your generation? Some of the most pathetic lives I have ever met have been revealed to me in conversation with men almost in middle life who had felt the call of God to this work while in youth, but drifted along, hoping to drift into it. Then they suddenly have awakened to the fact that they are heavily bound down with earthly cares—a family, a farm—but they are not prepared for their life work. Their round of daily toil is drudgery, not joy, because they know they have been called to a different service. It is too late to enter school, other interests demand their energies. Not only has the church lost the much-needed service of a man called of God, they themselves have lost the sweetness of life and the precious consciousness that comes only to the man who knows he is filling his mission. Verily "That servant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes."

If God has His way, he always takes ample time to get a man ready for a great work. Although the chosen people were suffering under the matchless cruelty of Egyptian taskmasters, and every year meant heaped-up indignities, God had time to train a leader for forty years in the school and court of the most cultured city of his times, and keep him forty years in the deserts about Sinai, before sending him, at the age of 80, to give to this mass of slaves liberty and law, religion and national life. Although Paul was 37 years old at the time of his conversion, although he had had years of careful training under the greatest Jewish master of his time, although he had just had a most brilliant Christian experience and was on fire with a desire to tell of the love of the Christ, and although the world was dying without a knowledge of the Saviour, God had time to keep him three years in the deserts of Arabia, three years at his old home in Tarsus, and one year under the direction of other missionaries before sending him, at the age of 43, with a message which was to change the history of an empire and make new the peoples of a continent. Although there has come to you in your rural home a vision of a larger life of unselfish service, and your heart has been touched with a desire to tell the "old, old story" to men of this or other lands; the demand for men capable of mastering great problems and broad enough to come into sympathy with the multitudinous phases of to-day's life and "become all things to all men," the testimony of ministers and missionaries who have been forced into the work without mental training to enable them to meet the crises, the transcendent character of the vocation itself—all proclaim in words too plainly to be misunderstood and too loudly to be disregarded, that God demands of the man or woman who enters these fields of service to-day, the stalwart mental calibre which comes only from years of conscientious training. And loudly for such men as these who are also filled with His Spirit is the Lord of the harvest calling.

Ye who know the Lord's will, will ye prepare yourselves to do it? If not, ye shall be beaten with many stripes, producing narrowness and disappointment and hunger and leanness to your souls. If ye do, and humbly give your days to His leading and your lives to His service, larger and yet larger opportunities shall open to you, and you shall be amazed at the wonderful goodness of the blessed Father.

ABOVE ALL THINGS—THE HOLY SPIRIT.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

There are times when God's people are fenced in, and cannot move a step without God's interposing power. The children of Israel reach the shore of the Red Sea, and cannot advance one rod until He parts the waves before them. The land of Israel is parched with drought, and Elijah summons God by prayer to send the indispensable showers. Peter is locked up in a dungeon awaiting death on the morrow, and the praying band in John Mark's house realize that a divine arm only can unloose the prison-doors.

These cases illustrate the condition in which our churches find themselves to-day. The wheels seem to drag; the conversions are few; the question that many pastors and people are asking is—what shall we do? For one, I can see no other deliverance except by a descent of the power from on high! Our churches are fenced right up to this fact—we must have the Holy Spirit, or all our machinery is at a standstill. The most powerful sermons that a McLaren or a Meyer or a Moody can deliver cannot move a single sinner one inch towards the cross without the agency of the Holy Spirit. The New Testament teaches us that the two agents that are to bring sin smitten souls to Christ are the Christian Church and the Holy Spirit. The Church without the Spirit is as powerless to move itself, or to draw others Christward, as a locomotive is to propel a railway-train until a fire is kindled under its boiler. Here is the secret of the failure of a vast amount of elaborate sermonizing, and a vast amount of church-going, and of a vast number of prayer-meetings. The Holy Spirit is not in the Sabbath assembly; the propelling and penetrating power of the Spirit is not behind the sermons, and the prayer-meetings are not converged to the vital point of pleading for the power from on high. Long, formal, stereotyped petitions are repeated in the meetings, and people go home well nigh as empty as they came.

In a certain church in Philadelphia the pastor and his half dozen church-officers met together every evening for a week, confessed their sins and their weakness, and besought the gift of the Holy Spirit. A fire was kindled in that church that resulted in the conversion of a large number of souls. The pastor and his staff did not send for any human aid; they went right up to heaven for help. And I don't believe that any Christian or any body of Christians ever undertook any great work for the glory of God, and sent for the Holy Spirit and were turned empty away. The trouble in too many cases is that Christians are now resisting the Divine Spirit and grieving Him away! How can they expect any blessing?

Of all the promises in the Bible none is so explicit as the promise of the Holy Spirit. This is the gift of gifts. God is more ready to bestow this immeasurably precious gift than an earthly parent to feed a hungry child. But Christians have got to hunger for the Spirit, and be ready to work for the Spirit and with the Spirit, or else He will not come. With Him everything; without Him nothing! Unless He descend with His enlightening, warming, melting, purifying, and life giving power, all preaching, praying, and working will be as useless as to attempt to light a lamp in a vacuum, or to heat up an ice-cold room without fire. A blessing is held out by a living God to every church in this land which is willing to confess its sins, and co-operate with the Holy Spirit. Above all things—the Holy Spirit.

God wants iron saints; and since there is no way of imparting iron to the moral nature other than by letting his people suffer, He lets them suffer. . . . The iron crown of suffering precedes the golden crown of glory.—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

THE CHEROKEE ALPHABET.

W. T. Whitaker, president of the Orphan Home at Pryor Creek, I. T., gives some interesting facts regarding the discovery and discoverer of the Cherokee alphabet, which has enabled this tribe of Indians to become by far the wealthiest and most intelligent of all the civilized tribes. Of 756 different languages or dialects spoken by as many nations of Indians from the time when there was not a white man on the American continent until the present, only one nation—that of the Cherokees—has a written or printed language. It requires twenty-six letters or characters to write or express the English language, while that of the Cherokees runs to eighty-seven, many of them being formed exactly like ours.

Mr. Whitaker, who is a Cherokee himself, says that when his people occupied a large part of North Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee, there was in the tribe one buck who was regarded as especially dull and lazy. His name was Se-qua-yah, and he took no pleasure in the chase for game, seldom had his bow and arrow, the war-whoop had no fascination for him, and he refused to take part in the dances which thrilled the hearts of the braves. Se-qua-yah was good-natured and kind, but always wore the look of one burdened with some deep and hidden sorrow, preferring at all times to be alone in the woods when not assisting his squaw around the wigwam, something Indians are not often found doing. The peculiar actions of the Indian could not be understood by his fellows, and finally he came to be regarded as mentally off balance—as an Indian would say, “head heap go round.”

By-and-bye there came to Se-qua-yah's wild home a little girl babe, and there shone a new light in the queer Indian's eyes upon her advent. The little one was named Oo-he-chae, which means “has arrived, or been given.” As the child grew, the father became more and more devoted and would spend hours with her in the woods, returning to the wigwam only when the face of the Great Spirit, as they called the sun, had gone down behind the mountains now called the Blue Ridge, perhaps the most beautifully picturesque mountain range in the Southern States. Se-qua-yah was not idle while spending his days in the woods. While listening to the prattle of his child, the notes of the feathered songsters and the barking of the squirrels as they scurried from limb to limb and tree to tree, the mind of the Indian was solving a problem taught to make the characters, she would send one in Years rolled by, and still Se-qua-yah was in the woods, cutting queer-looking characters on pieces of bark stripped from poplar trees. As each character was finished, he would sit down and teach Oo-he-chae, who had grown to an Indian maiden of perhaps fourteen years, how to pronounce it. She was an apt pupil and took great pleasure in the work her father was prosecuting. When eighty-seven characters had been cut on as many different pieces of bark, Se-qua-yah declared his work finished, and told Oo-he-chae that they would talk “with mouth open.” It was not long

by cutting the characters on large pices of bark, and of bark, which she would read, and, having been a large rock many miles away from Oo-he-chae, a doubting Indian would carry messages cut on a piece and which was to lift them from ignorance to intelligence. Se-qua-yah told the braves what he could do. This they doubted, and when Se-qua-yah would sit on which none of his people had ever been able to solve. reply. For many moons, hundred of Indians gathered to see the wonderful work, and the father and daughter were at first regarded as spirits who had been sent to break up the peace and happiness of the red man.

This idea, or belief, however, finally died out, and other Indians were taught to “read and write.” When it became common, Se-qua-yah conceived the idea of publishing a newspaper, which he eventually did, calling it the “Oo-lah-hee San-Nah-hee, meaning in English the Cherokee Phoenix—reviving or taking a new start. Like a majority of newspaper enterprises, this one proved a failure, and publication was suspended, probably from lack of advertising patronage and subscriptions' non-payment. However, after the Cherokees were tramped over the dirt road to their present nation, the paper was revived under the name of the “Cherokee Advocate,” a seven-column, four-page paper, which was at first printed all Cherokee, but which now comes out half English. Mr. Whitaker says the paper has a splendid circulation, and is often called Se-qua-yah's paper.

“These facts cannot be disputed” said Mr. Whitaker, “and there are hundreds of Cherokees living to-day who remembered old man Se-qua-yah, whose English name was Guess. This was his given name, for an Indian full-blood has no surname. When Se-qua-yah settled in the present Cherokee nation, he built him a log hut in a district, which is called Se-qua-yah in his honor. This same rude log cabin stands to-day eight miles from Mulroe, and the Indians point it out as a place of historical interest and at one time the home of perhaps the greatest man of their nation. The inventor of the Cherokee alphabet received a liberal annual pension until he died, which occurred while he was on a visit to Mexico, and the widow received the pension until her death.”—Washington Letter New York “Sun.”

Loving those who love us is all well in its way. Sometimes it is easier to do this than not to do it. But there is no special merit in such a course on our part. The true test of Christlikeness is loving the unloving and the unlovely. That is the test we ought to judge ourselves by. “If ye love them that love you,” says Jesus, “what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?” We ought certainly to be above the average heathen if we consider ourselves followers of Christ, our spirit will show itself in the likeness of Christ's spirit.—S. THIRD QUARTER.

Eighth Month 27 1899

RETURNING FROM CAPTIVITY.

Ezra 1: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad Psa. 126: 3.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 21.—Returning from captivity. Ezra 1.
Third-day, Eighth mo. 22.—Returning captives. Ezra 2: 1 and 64-70.
Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 23.—The Word of Jeremiah. Jer. 29: 10-14.
Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 24.—Prophecy of return. Isa. 44: 21-28.
Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 25.—Proclamation of liberty. Isa. 61.
Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 26.—Joy of redemption. Isa. 51: 9-16.
First-day, Eighth mo. 27.—Praise for deliverance. Psa. 107: 1-15.

The books of Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah form one continuous narrative (compare 2 Chron. 36: 22-23, with Ezra 1: 1-3). The books of Ezra and Nehemiah were originally one book. It was not until 1625 A.D. that the division appears in Hebrew Bibles. The first time that mention is made of two books among Christian writers is by Origen in the third century; and by all early Christian authors they are spoken of as one book with two parts—called first and second Ezra. In English Bibles these titles are preserved, as late as 1551; and even in the Bishop's Bible of 1568 the title appears, "The seconde booke of Ezras, otherwise called the booke Nehemiah."

The history related in these books covers about one hundred years (538 B.C. to 432 B.C.), though the lists of names in Nehemiah (12: 10-22) mention persons who lived in the third century. The book is, for the most part, written in Hebrew, but Ezra 4: 7-6: 18, and 7: 12-26, are written in Aramaic. As these portions consist chiefly of documents and letters, it seems likely that they are copies or summaries of the original documents which would naturally be issued in the common language of the country.

It seems to be likely that the books, as they now stand, were not written by Ezra or Nehemiah, but that they are the work of some compiler living near the middle of the 4th century B.C., who used books written by Ezra and Nehemiah, incorporating their language in his work as seemed appropriate. Such passages are Ezra 7: 10 and Nehemiah 1: 1-7: 5.

The narrative of the books is rather a selection of incidents than a continuous history. The object of the writer appears to be, in the main, to illustrate the beginnings of the new life of the Jews after the return from the captivity.

The prominence given to the priests and Levites and to the Temple, as well as the descriptions of religious festivals and observances, reminds the reader of Chronicles.

Ezra himself was a scribe, a Levite; he lived in Babylon, and nearly eighty years after the return of the Jews described in the present lesson, he was commissioned by the King of Persia, Artaxerxes Longimanus, to visit Jerusalem and examine into the condition of affairs. This visit is described in Ezra, chapters 7 and following. This journey was begun in the year 458 B.C. Ezra did not take part in the return described in the lesson.

1. "First year of Cyrus." After the capture of Babylon, 538 B.C., "The word of the Lord," etc.

See Jeremiah 25: 12-13 and 29: 10. "Fulfilled." "Accomplished." Revised Version. "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." How this was done is not stated. It may have been by various means—perhaps by the Spirit alone.

2. "The Lord God of heaven," etc. It used to be thought that Cyrus was a believer in the God of the Jews, but his inscriptions show that he worshiped the Babylonish deities to the last. It is likely therefore that in this decree he used the name of his own supreme being, and that this was translated by the Jews into Jehovah. "The acknowledgment that all earthly sway is derived from heavenly authority proves the basis of the decree." "Build him an house." see Isa. 44: 28; 45: 1-13.

3. "Let him go up," etc. Those going up were to be volunteers. Cyrus appears, soon after his capture of Babylon, to have given permission to the captives he found there to return to their homes; others as well as Jews were included, and all were to carry their gods with them. In this way he would gain supporters of his rule. As the Jews had no images he gave them their sacred utensils, and bestowed on them, it would seem, special privileges. One of the cylinders of Cyrus, which has been discovered, has these words, "The gods, whose sanctuaries from old had lain in ruins I brought back to their dwelling places . . . All of the citizens of these lands I assembled, and I restored them again to their homes." The acts of Cyrus were probably prompted by politic motives, so far as he himself understood his own actions. "He is the God." "He is God." Revised Version. These words are probably the addition of the author of the book.

4. "Remaineth," etc. This verse is not clear, but it seems to mean: "In any place where survivors of the Jewish captivity are found sojourning, there let the men of the place (non-Israelites) render him all assistance."

6. "They that were about them." Their heathen neighbors, and their Jewish neighbors who did not wish to return. "Besides all that was willingly offered." Over and above the free will offerings.

7. "Also Cyrus the King," etc. See 2 Kings 24: 13; 2 Chron. 36: 7.

8. "Sheshbazzar." Although it is not so stated, it is probable that Sheshbazzar is another name for Zerubbabel (chap. 3: 2; 4: 3; 5: 2).

9. "Chargers." It is not certain what the word in the original means; and so with the word translated "knives."

11. This total does not agree with the statements in the preceding verses. The discrepancy cannot be explained, but is likely due to some error in the text made by some copyist. According to chapter 2: 64-65, the company which returned numbered in all about 50,000. Some think that Psalm 126 expresses the feelings of the returning exiles.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. God is the controller of events.
2. The promises of God are sure.
3. "Whosoever will may come."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR EIGHTH MONTH 27th, 1899.

GREEN PASTURES: THE CHRISTIAN'S PLEASURES.

Ps 23: 1-6.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 21.—Ways of pleasantness. Prov. 3: 13-18.

Third-day, Eighth mo. 22.—Delight in God's law. Ps. 1: 1-3; 119: 161-168.

Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 23.—Pleasures of obedience. Ps. 119: 1-16.

Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 24.—Pleasures of service. Luke 15: 3-7; Rev. 22: 1-5.

Sixth-day, Eighth mo. 25.—The river of God's pleasures. Ps. 36: 1-12.

Seventh-day, Eighth mo. 26.—Pleasures forevermore. Ps. 16: 1-11.

What are Christian pleasures and what are not, is one of the most perplexing problems for young Christian life. That relaxation and recreation are necessary by the very laws of our being is more readily admitted on all sides than once it was, but what are the principles which should govern our choice of such recreation? If we can ascertain them and yield full obedience to them it will be a great help to many who read these columns. Some of them are as follows: Wisely chosen pleasures are recreative, not destructive. Pleasures should be avoided which tend to lead us into evil associations for their gratification. Pleasures should be avoided when their indulgence infringes upon duty. Pleasures should be avoided when by their excitement or absorption, indulgence is likely to become a mastering passion. Pleasures are to be avoided when our indulgence becomes really a stumbling block to others, or an occasion to fall.

But the psalm chosen for our lesson goes infinitely deeper into this question than the merely negative rules above stated. The real safeguard of a Christian against all questionable pleasures is by what Chalmers called "the expulsive power of a new affection." A Christian's pleasure is in the "green pastures," where the Lord makes us to lie down. The picture is one of perfect satisfaction. The sheep has yielded perfectly to the shepherd. He has been led to the still waters, and his thirst is quenched; he has eaten to the full, he has no fear of danger; he lies down to rest. One hour of pleasure in Christ like that is more satisfying than all the world ever can give. In Bushnell's famous sermon on the "Hunger of the Soul," he tells us how many people are so restlessly trying to fill themselves with swine husks in order to hush the cravings of their spiritual nature; that the restlessness of the worldling is because he does not have the real bread of the Father's house. That makes clear to us the insane passion for amusement characteristic of so many.

Every verse of this precious psalm is a statement of the Christian's pleasure. In the third is the real recreation, for He restoreth my soul. If true pleasure be recreative, what can be richer pleasure than the divine recreations of our inner life. He who knows the wear and tear of life loves to draw the soul unto himself, and by His divine touch impart to it new strength and vigor.

Verse four is the pleasure of the Christian in his sorest trials. There is a new revelation of the presence of God. Who that really knows God has not found this to be true. Promises that never meant much to us beyond a general expression of God's goodness, now become radiant with meaning. They are the very garments of God, whose rustling betokens His immediate presence.

Verse five is the Christian's pleasure in the hour of certain victory over all his foes. They are brought in chains to his tent, while he sits down to feast on God's bounty toward him.

Verse six shows the shepherd's watchdogs to be not merely affliction and trial, but goodness and mercy, and the consummation of all is an unchanging habitation in the very presence chamber of the Lord. A life like that has no end of pleasure. Its perfect satisfaction with Christ renders the tawdry pleasures of the world superfluous.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

The Representative Meeting of North Carolina Yearly Meeting convened at High Point, N. C., on Eighth month 8th, 1899, Joseph Potts, clerk.

Owing to heavy rainfall only a few more than a quorum were present. Nothing but routine work was transacted, except the appointment of a committee to investigate the status of the enforcement of military training in the State Agricultural and Mechanical College at Raleigh, with a view to memorializing the state authorities against such enforcement if necessary.

In the afternoon the meeting on Ministry and Oversight convened, with Lorena Reynolds, Clerk, and Robert Parker appointed Assistant Clerk.

The session was one of deep concern and manifest power. Prayer was offered by James R. Jones, David E. Sampson, Mary C. Woody and others. The prayers were for the presence and power of the Spirit, that North Carolina Yearly Meeting may get so into the fountain of power and cleansing as to be used more effectively by the Master because being in Him.

James R. Jones seemed to give the key note of the meeting in referring to the disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration, where they saw Jesus only, and not forms or the absence of forms—but Jesus only.

Mary C. Woody would have us sow to the Spirit, so if one is overtaken in a fault he may be restored in the Spirit of meekness.

Amos Davis, minister, of Iowa, spoke of the work of righteousness which shall be peace, etc.

Joseph Stanley wanted us to keep our eye fixed on the important work, and God will give us great variety in much harmony.

Abigail Blair read parts of the 27th psalm with evident appropriateness.

Sarah E. W. Winslow desired that prayer be offered for the ministers of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, that they may be at their best, then there would not be so much need of asking the Lord to send the right minister from elsewhere. Let us go to the source of strength, the teacher of teachers, and not to some great theologian or great preacher.

James R. Jones gave a deliberate, clear-connected and very interesting account of his year's visit and extended service in Europe, in response to which many friends expressed much appreciation.

On Fourth-day the 9th inst., at 8.30 a.m., the meeting on Ministry and Oversight met according to adjournment, and heard David Sampson deliver in a weighty manner a living concern to strengthen, build up and perpetuate the Society of Friends in North Carolina. Slack not in evangelistic work, but look more to the indoctrinating of the membership. Further deliberation is expected on the subject.

This exposition of the history of the Yearly Meeting for twenty-five years, with its needs at present and for the future, were so outlined as to get the close attention of the meeting, and the appointment of a committee to formulate something for the consideration and action of a later session.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting at large opened at 10 a.m., with L. L. Hobbs and Priscilla B. Hackney, clerks, and Jasper Thompson and Mary E. Cartland, assistant clerks. After silence, Joseph Stanley offered prayer. Abram Fisher desired that the transactions of the church be done decently and in order.

Rufus P. King quoted "Look upon Zion the City of our Solemnities," and further of Isaiah 33: 20 and 21, and made extended remarks.

Nereus M. Barker prayed for the unity of all our membership in the Lord.

The following ministers presented credentials, and were cordially received: Sarah W. Newlin, of Maine; Joseph Stanley, of Indiana; Amos Davis, Iowa; and Parintha C. Macy, of Indiana, an elder.

Sarah W. Newlin offered fervent prayer.

Joseph Stanley, an octogenarian, exhorted us to let no time be lost in getting right with God.

The representatives are instructed to propose a nominating committee whose business it shall be to submit names for all regular committees.

The London general epistle was read, followed by expressed appreciation. The epistle was directed printed with the minutes of the Yearly Meeting, and 500 additional copies printed separately for distribution.

Meeting for worship was held in the afternoon. Vocal prayer was offered. David E. Sampson spoke of the great importance of a willing offering.

Sarah W. Newlin spoke of the need of intimate acquaintance with Jesus. She illustrated by relating personal experiences of her own and otherwise. The sermon was blessed in warning, reproving and comforting the hearers. Gurney Lee sang a hymn. Amos Davis testified that the sermon had been edifying to him, and himself sang alone a hymn which at its close had the response of many amens. Edward W. Hughes, of Ohio, sang a stanza, added some words of thanksgiving and exhortation, and followed with vocal prayer.

The meeting met in joint session at 10 o'clock on Fifth-day morning.

The same Clerks: L. Lyndon Hobbs, and Priscilla B. Hackney, with Jasper Thompson and Mary E. Cartland, assistant clerks, and Albert Peele as announcing clerk were appointed. The credentials of Edward W. Hughes, a minister of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, and his wife, a member in good standing as companion, were read.

Excellent epistles were read from all the Yearly Meetings with which we correspond, except from Wilmington and Oregon, which had not come to hand. As usual, some said, "I think these are the best epistles we have ever received." The epistles surely give an encouraging outlook of the work of Friends, both in England and America. James R. Jones rehearsed the account of his labor in Europe. A strong endorsement was given it, and a full and appreciative minute thereof was recorded.

Afternoon.—Some letters were read from individual Friends of other Yearly Meetings. The evangelistic report showed commendable activity, with 187 professions of conversions, 117 additions to the meetings, with the expenditure of something over $700.

The work is continued under the care of the committee as now constituted, with a voluntary subscription for the prosecution of the work.

It may be noted that some Friends wanted the Yearly Meeting to make an appropriation to aid the work, others preferred that a voluntary subscription be taken, so it was decided to take the subscription, and thus seek to bring the matter directly to the members of the Quarterly and Monthly Meetings.

Amos Sanders illustrated "The Jews in Prophecy and History" by a large chart which he has just constructed, and thus made clearer the teaching he gave on that subject.

Robert W. Douglas, Luke Woodard, Elkanah Beard, Lindley A. Wells, Mary A. Nicolls, Esther Cook, Amos Cook, Enos Harvey, Charles E. Hiatt, John C. Griffin, Ella J. Davis, William G. Hubbard, and many other ministers were present, as also was President James B. Unthank, of Wilmington College.

There were ten full days besides the opening session and the Sabbath. The sessions were held at 9 and 10 a.m. and 2 and 3 p.m., with five-minute intermissions, and at 8 p.m., making a total of fifty-one sessions besides the meeting on First-day evening. Devotional meetings were also held both morning and evening. This left ample time for rest and recreation, and made a happy combination of rest and recreation and advancement in knowledge.

It is gratefully believed that the permanent establishment of the institute, at least for a few years to come, will greatly benefit Friends. There is but one opinion among those who attended, and that is, that its blessing is so apparent, it must be continued. Wilmington Yearly Meeting will be asked to join in next year, and the three thus find Earlham a convenient center at which to gather to stimulate our members in Bible study. The prayer of the church is that all her members may avail themselves of their opportunities to acquaint themselves with the truth of the Lord as given forth in the Scriptures.

Prof. Cyrus W. Hodgin gave an excellent lecture on "A Social Duty of the Church."

Albert J. Brown, pastor at Indianapolis, was president of the institute.

Elwood O. Ellis gave a paper on the "Leadings of the Spirit as Based on Scriptural Teachings and Examples." He also conducted a parliament under title of "Suggestions for Practice," which drew forth many suggestions of practical value on the part of those in attendance.

Prof. Elbert Russell gave twenty lessons on Bible study, and none were more appreciated. He has arranged to give a series of lectures on the Bible, six or ten in a series, or single lectures, at places where the people desire them. He has also arranged to give correspondence courses. It is hoped this opportunity will prove fruitful of much good, and many are expecting to arrange for classes. He and his wife left on the last day of the institute for Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., to take a well-earned rest.

John Henry Douglas gave a lecture on "Why I am a Friend," which added to the profit of the institute.

News from the Field.

Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, is spending a few weeks at Chautauqua, N. Y.

John Wilhelm Rowntree has contributed a splendid list of books on Biblical subjects to Earlham College.

The Biblical Institute at Earlham, was a great success this year, and proved very satisfactory. It sent a beautiful message of fellowship and sympathy to the editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

John H. Dillingham, editor of the "Philadelphia Friend," is spending the summer at West Falmouth, Mass.

The stenographer of the Providence Educational Conference, has been so slow in preparing his report that publication of it has been long delayed. The delay is solely due to the fact that the stenographer's reports could not be obtained. It will, however, not be much longer postponed.

We have received the following encouraging letter from a Friend who has been successfully engaged in evangelistic work in a Western Yearly Meeting:

"Dear Friend: I feel as though I must send you a word expressing my warm and sincere sympathy with you in your position as editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. I happen to know it is no light or easy task that you have, and adverse criticisms often fly about your head.

"I want to say I have been particularly helped by your editorials since I became a subscriber. I feel that you are striving to present the truths most vital to American Quakerism. May God continue to richly bless, strengthen and guide you. I am one with you!

"Your sincere friend and fellow-worker."

Edward G. Wood, who is now at Hartland, Maine, writes as follows in reference to a booklet which he has prepared:

"My health is fast improving, and I hope, if it be the Lord's will, to start out in the service in a very few weeks.

"The Last Apostolic Commission or The Highest Phase of Christian Truth," is a booklet showing Paul's mission to the Gentiles in freeing them from ordinances.

"Orders will be received and filled from 197 Hartland, Maine. Price 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; $3.00 per hundred.

E. G. WOOD.

William L. Pearson and wife are taking a two weeks' rest at Denver, Colorado.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting opens at Wilmington, Ohio, on the 17th—the date of this issue. We trust that rich blessings from the Lord may rest upon all its sessions, and that renewed life and power may come upon its membership as a result.

We are informed that John Price and his wife and Rufus Garratt, who are engaged in missionary work in South America, have been baptized and have joined the Methodists.

Ohio Yearly Meeting begins at Mount Pleasant, Ohio, on the 24th. Our wish for Wilmington extends also to Ohio.

Cordoba, Argentine Republic, South America,
Sixth month 19th, 1899.

AMERICAN FRIEND: I was so pleased to receive several numbers of the AMERICAN FRIEND yesterday, being the first papers from any publishing house in North America to reach me since arriving here—a real treat.

There is no church better adapted to this country than Friends' Church. Idolatry in some form, plays a prominent part of church rites in even the Protestant organizations, and the Roman church seems wholly given to idolatry as Athens was in the days of Paul. Acts 17: 16.

Yesterday a woman came along asking alms for an image which she carried in her arms. My friend asked what the image was. She said it was the child God. They carry saints of all descriptions and crosses with images nailed on them, and the priests do not allow them to have Bibles. Friends should have a mission here. We cannot afford to let the opportunity go by unoccupied. I have been strongly solicited to open work, but being the only Friend in this part of South America and out of means, do not see how I can. Truly, in much love,

WILLIAM MARSHALL.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Marshalltown, Iowa.—An interesting and rather unique little incident occurred just the other day. Penn students in Marshall county and counties adjoining, their families, their friends, graduates, and the friends of Penn College, by previous arrangement, met in the picturesque little grove on the banks of the Iowa River, at the Soldiers' Home, and held an all-day picnic. The exercises, though quite informal, were very pleasing. Two of the professors of the College—E. H. Gifford and Stephen M. Hadley—were among the speakers, adding grace and dignity to the occasion. Two others, former students, are now ministers of the gospel. All, whether present or past students, gladly witnessed that the college, and their connection with it, had been a means through which they had been enriched in intellectual and spiritual life. The recital of reminiscences of student life could but give inspiration to those having aspirations for higher education.

E. B. MENDENHALL.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Our recent quarterly meeting, held here at Pasadena, although not as large as sometimes, was full of interest and blessing.

The only minister outside our limits was Stewart Noble, who had great liberty in the Spirit, and was the channel of great blessing to those who were favored to hear him.

The report of the work of our Alaska missionaries was of thrilling interest. The Lord seems to be giving signal success to these consecrated young people who have dedicated their lives to His service in this "Land of the Midnight Sun."

The letters received, and the presence and testimony of delegates from Whittier Quarterly Meeting, added to the life and power of the meeting.

The C. E. held a very interesting session, and were entertained and blessed by the report of Esther Smith, who has been engaged in City Mission work in San Francisco among the neglected classes.

The quarterly meeting adjourned to meet at El Modena in Tenth month.

J. R. TOWNSEND.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Friends desiring to attend Western Yearly Meeting will be assisted in finding boarding places by addressing Louis Robbins, Elijah J. Shaw, or Rebecca M. Vestal, Plainfield, Hendricks Co., Indiana.

NOTES FROM EARLHAM BIBLE INSTITUTE.

The attendance was double that of last year.

Spontaneous testimonies were freely heard, in which all took part, that the Institute was of great blessing to those who attended.

Indianapolis was well represented, there being eighteen from that meeting. Many other meetings were also largely represented.

Elwood Scott was present, and his friends were glad to learn that his health has greatly improved.

Esther T. Pritchard was in attendance, but, with the exception of one day, was confined to her room in Earlham Hall, on account of illness. At the close of the Institute her condition was improving.

Prof. William G. Moorehead, of Xenia, Ohio, gave such excellent satisfaction in Bible exposition that the committee in charge engaged him for next year.

Mrs. Lamoreaux, of Chicago, was greatly appreciated, because of the excellent primary work she gave. She also gave a model lesson, using the next Sabbath's lesson, to a class of thirty children taken from the city, and in spite of a thunder storm raging at the time, demonstrated her ability in holding their close attention.

Abijah J. Weaver gave an address on "The Relation Between the Older and Younger Members of the Church."

Jane Addams, of Hull House, Chicago, drew the largest audiences of any of the speakers. She gave two addresses, both of which were excellent, but that on "The Social Theories of Count Tolstoi" was a masterpiece of English, and demonstrated her ability to attract people to hear her. Her simplicity is a worthy example to all ministers of the gospel.

Bible studies were conducted under the following topics: "The Land and the Religion of the Prophets," "Lessons from the Gospel of John," "Baal Worship and the Prophets," "The Jews in Prophecy and History," "The World of Isaiah," "Isaiah and Ahaz," "The Fall of the Northern Kingdom," "The Book of Romans," "Sennacherib's Invasion of Judah," "The Scythians as the Scourge of God," "From the Fall of Nineveh to the Fall of Jerusalem," "The Exile and its Prophets," "The Atonement," "The Prophetic Estimate of Cyrus the Deliverer," "The Parables of the Kingdom," "God's Estimate of His Word," "Ecclesiastes," "Philippians," "The Book of Acts," "The Book of Job." On these twenty topics, thirty-five lessons of one hour each were given.

Notes were taken in great profusion, and if this is prophetic of study of the Bible in the year to come, the members of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings will advance much in Scriptural knowledge.

John Henry Douglas was in constant attendance, and conducted most of the morning devotional meetings at 8.15 o'clock. He also preached at South Eighth Street on First-day morning. He greatly enjoyed the institute, and was valued for his work done during its continuance. It is gratifying to know that his health is much better than it was, and he is able to do much more service than a few years ago.

Allen Jay was constantly present as a member of the committee in charge, and while he took no part on program except to conduct the first Christian Endeavor meeting and the closing praise meeting, yet all felt that to his wise counsel and holy influence is in no small degree due the success of the institute. Though he realizes keenly the loss of his beloved wife, yet he bears it as a good example to others, and is in constant religious service.

David Hadley gave two valuable addresses on "Pastoral and Evangelistic Work" and "Church Extension."

Lewis E. Stout gave a report of the Atlanta Sunday School Convention, and an address on the "Open Door," both of which were relished well and gave valuable instruction.

Thomas C. Brown, in addition to two lectures on "The Atonement," preached at East Main Street on First-day morning.

The institute sermon, given on First-day evening by Levi Mills, was adapted to the conditions, and rendered the other instruction given of deepened importance and value.

P. W. Raidabaugh gave four lessons with his characteristic earnestness and vigor, in spite of protracted illness, from which he seems to be recovering.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Spring Valley, Ohio.—Leonidas Speer, pastor of White Water Friends' Meeting, of Richmond, Ind., preached two very able and eloquent sermons in the meeting at Spring Valley, Ohio, Sabbath, the 6th, to a very large and attentive audience, both morning and evening. In one he answered the theory of Darwin, and explained how man was made in the image of God. In the other, "The Immutability of God's Law." Our young brother is a profound Bible student and an able expounder.

Married.

BINFORD—SCHNEIDER.—Sixth month 14th, 1899, at Friends' meeting house at South Eighth Street, Richmond, Ind., Gurney Binford, son of Josiah and Margaret F. Binford of Haviland, Kansas, to Elizabeth J. Schneider, daughter of Philip and Kate C. Schneider of Richmond, Ind. The marriage was solemnized according to Friends' discipline. About 350 friends of the bride and groom were present at the specially appointed meeting for the marriage.

DIED.

FURNAS.—Robert Furnas died at his home in Marion County, Ind., Sixth month 2d, 1899, in his 87th year. He was the son of Robert and Hannah (Wilson) Furnas. He was a member and elder of Beech Grove Monthly Meeting of Friends.

UNDERHILL.—Joshua B. Underhill, an esteemed member of New York Particular Meeting, fell asleep in Jesus Sixth month 27th, 1899, in the 63d year of his age. He died suddenly of apoplexy, at the home of his sister and husband, Wm. and Hannah M. Isaac, Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, where he had gone to spend a portion of the summer. This exceptionally good man, possessed a rare combination of many virtues. Seldom have we ever witnessed such an exemplification of the Christ-like character embodied in one person. During a long period of invalidism he was never known to complain or murmur. He was a diligent reader of the Bible, and rejoiced in its precious truths. The work of the church, and the salvation of souls were very precious to him, and while not able physically to attend meetings, also being very deaf, yet he lost none of his interest, and was never so happy as when he felt that he was leading a soul to Christ, or talking of his precious love. He leaves a widow and three children.

News and Events.

A hurricane of unusual velocity swept the Island of Porto Rico on the 8th, and carrying destruction and death in its path wrought fearful damage. The island was devastated from end to end, several towns were demolished, hundreds of persons were killed, and about 100,000 lost all their possessions. Famine is threatened, and relief is required promptly. General Davis has requested assistance, and an appeal for help has been made by the War Department to the mayor of every large city in the United States. The islands of Guadeloupe, St. Thomas and St. Croix were also visited by the storm, where similar damage was done. The visitations exceeded in severity the memorable storm of September, 1898, which laid waste portions of the West Indies.

The British parliament was prorogued on the 9th, after listening to a brief speech from the Queen. The speech was, as usual, mostly devoid of interest, colorless, perfunctory, and non-committal. One paragraph, however, struck a note which appeals to all who are interested in the South African situation. In this she referred to the petition which she had received from her subjects in the Transvaal "praying my assistance to obtain a removal of grievances and disabilities of which they complain," closing with the significant words: "The position of my subjects in the South African Republic is inconsistent with the promise of equal treatment wherein my grant of internal independence to that republic was founded, and the unrest caused thereby is a constant source of danger to the peace and prosperity of my dominions in South Africa." It may reasonably be said that neither Kruger nor the Queen wish for war, but the signs of a conflict are ominous, and the situation is greatly strained, so that there seems no doubt that unless President Kruger and his Volkraad decide unreservedly to grant substantially the reforms demanded by Great Britain for the relief of the Outlanders there will be war. England is busy mobilizing her troops, and the Transvaal threatens to do its worst in the event of a conflict, in the way of destroying property in the mines and other British possessions.

It is said that when the British parliament again convenes it will have to consider a government scheme to provide a pension for persons who are sixty-five years or over, and who are deserving, but not self-supporting. The suggestion of such a provision was made on the eve of adjournment of parliament, but was not pressed. The question is being warmly discussed, and much opposition has developed against the suggested measure. It is urged that England is already taxed almost, if not quite, to her utmost limit of endurance, and that a pension tax for aged defectives would be unbearable. The curious feature of the situation is that the proposition came from the Conservatives, who represent mainly the tax-paying classes. It is interesting to observe that the pension plan has already been adopted by Germany and Denmark, and in these countries the aged are well cared for by the state. New Zealand has also had several months' experiment of old age pensions.

Since the occupation of Cuba by the United States, sanitary reform has progressed with wonderful rapidity. Cities that during the Spanish régime were unmentionably filthy, have been completely transformed. Great credit has deservedly been given Generals Wood, Wilson, and Ludlow, since it has been largely due to their efficient administration that the island has improved so rapidly. The city of Havana, formerly the pest hole and source of yellow fever contagion, has been fitted with sewers, and has been thoroughly cleansed of filth. Over 3,000 cesspools have been closed and many wells have been filled in. Refuse is no longer dumped in the harbor, but as much as possible is burned in the new cremation plant, and the rest towed out to sea. Yellow fever is likely to be almost completely stamped out in a short time. Thus far during the present year not a single soldier has contracted the disease.

The retrial of Captain Alfred Dreyfus before a court martial at Rennes, opened on the 7th inst. The first day's session was open to the public, and from then on to the 12th, the proceedings were conducted behind closed doors. On the 12th open sessions began again. Dreyfus, it is said, appears much worn with his long incarceration, but thoroughly determined, and ready to meet the present ordeal, which promises to result in his acquittal and freedom. He passionately proclaimed his innocence at the first hearing, and won much sympathy by his evident sincerity. During the week the secret dossier was examined. It will be remembered that Esterhazy confessed to the authorship of the bordereau, the document upon the evidence of which, ostensibly, at the first trial Dreyfus was convicted. Evidence seems to be at hand, in fact, to prove that Dreyfus was the scapegoat of Esterhazy and Henry. There is, indeed, little doubt now that Esterhazy and Henry were the arch conspirators. On the 12th, General Mercier and Casimir-Perier gave their testimony. The former is bitterly opposed to Dreyfus, and his evidence was full of rancorous hatred. He left the court room hissed by Dreyfusites and anti-Dreyfusites alike. The testimony of Casimir-Perier was straightforward and direct, and tended to strengthen the position of the prisoner.

CENTURY CO.

The most striking feature of The Century for September, which will be a Salt-Water Number, is the first instalment of Captain Joshua Slocum's "Sailing Alone Around the World." This is the narrative of a daring voyage of circumnavigation, undertaken by the author in 1895, in a forty-foot sloop built by himself in Buzzard's Bay, and taken back and forth across the Atlantic and thence around Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope, without assistance or companionship. The distance traversed was 46,000 miles, and the accuracy of the navigator's landfalls throughout was a thing to marvel at, his chronometer for most of the time being a little tin clock of the cheapest kind. Captain Slocum was a thoroughly seasoned sailor when he started on his adventurous single-handed cruise, but his unique achievement was not without difficulties and perils that taxed to the utmost his strength, endurance and ingenuity. Other contents of this number of The Century are "The Way of a Ship," by Frank T. Bullen, author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot"; "The Atlantic Speedway," by H. Phelps Whitmarsh, author of "The World's Rough Hand"; and "Salvage," by Morgan Robertson, author of the forthcoming volume of sea tales "Where Angels Fear to Tread."

A HIGH COMPLIMENT.

"Frederick Douglas told me," says a writer in "Harper's Magazine," "that in spite of his long experience, he could never entirely rid himself of stage-fright. 'During the first fifteen minutes when I face an audience,' he said, 'my knees will knock together.'"

When he got fairly into his subject, however, this nervousness, which all speakers have sometimes felt, passed away. He put his points well in any argument, and his eloquence was of a high order. His tribute, in one sentence, to Abraham Lincoln is an unsurpassed compliment.

"Mr. Lincoln," he said, "is the only white man into whose presence I was ever ushered who did not make me feel that I was a negro."

INSTINCT.

Taste is Frequently a Valuable Guide in Selecting Food.

A little child's taste is often a reliable guide to palatable and desirable food, and it is worth one's while to observe how the little folks take to Grape-Nuts the famous new food made by the Postum Co. at Battle Creek, Mich.

They eat it freely without addition of sugar, for it has the peculiar, mild but satisfying sweet of grape-sugar; and the natural taste either child or adult recognizes at once of a food that will agree with and richly nourish the system.

They are generally unable to explain why, but instinct seems to tell the unerring truth when Grape-Nuts are tasted, and a few days' use will show strength and health as the result of food that not only has the delicious flavor, but is made of those parts of the food supply furnished by the Creator that tend to easy absorption by the system.

A SIMOON IN THE DESERT.

So this yellow, sunburned life drags its yellow weight across the endless plains, says Elizabeth Washburn in the July "Atlantic." A fatelike, awful march; no hope, no halt for man or beast; but on, on, over the spreading billows of biting sands, of glowing, shifting, sinking sands, with overhead the hot sky, blue and hard, and blazing in its midst the scorching eye that burns and blisters with its sight.

In agony the camels stumble on, beat at the dense hot wall. Desperately the coolies hide their faces in the hot, swaying hunches before them; but through their stupor there beats a wave of consciousness. A shudder brings them to a knowledge of a something awful. Through the sun-steeped, sun-bleached minds there cuts a keener stab. They are awake to what?

Into the coarse camel hair they dig their fists; tighter they press to the living things beneath them; they look not to one another; words they have not. In the presence of this heat they dare not breathe. Convulsively they cling to the stumbling beasts; and in low, dry sobs the anguish of body breaks forth. Between the two, the brute and man, there strikes a flash of mutual pain and torment. An instant, and down the camel line there breaks the brutes' shrill, soul-like cry. In it they voice their all, the pent-up spirit of the bitter yellow beasts, burdened and tortured for life. In it comes a question for the shrinking wretches lying on their humps. The bitter sounds fall on the parched tense air and die away.

Far and away comes a gasp—a hot vicious pant. Again it comes—a breath of fire that touched and is gone. The great line halts as one. A blank, dead moment; in it the bosom of the desert heaves, and a breath rolls toward the waiting line. With broken moans the creatures bend their knees and wait the coming of the storm. Another scorching breath—a timeless wait.

Far to the east it starts, across the sands it whirls in circling hoops that form at last a wall. On it curls swiftly, silently; with a hot, fierce lurch it falls upon the crouching backs, stinging with fangs of fire, pelting, blinding the gasping, panting creatures; with its dry lash whipping out the lives of men and beasts. Faster, thicker, hotter, fall the sands, crushing and burying with a merciless weight,—an ocean of burning fire, pouring wrath and strength upon these wretches as it hurls its mad force across the desert. The billows toss and heave, and break at last to sweep on,—on for other prey.

Said the famous general to his chief of staff: "Are the correspondents ready?"

"They are, sir!"

"Have they been informed that I have my new uniform on?"

"Yes, general."

"Have the photographers done their duty?"

"They have, sir."

"Then let the battle be called off."

BIRTH RATE IN EUROPE.

Signor Bodis, a well-known Italian statistician, has published tables showing the order in which the countries of Europe are classed in decreased series according to their mean birth rate: 1, Russia in Europe; 2, Hungary; 3, Serbia; 4, Roumania; 5, Austria; 6, German Empire; 7 Italy; 8, Spain; 9, Finland; 10, Portugal; 11, Holland; 12, England and Wales; 13, Scotland; 14, Denmark; 15, Norway; 16, Belgium; 17, Sweden; 18, Switzerland; 19, Greece; 20, France; 21, Ireland. It will thus be observed that Russia has the largest percentage of births, and France and Ireland have the smallest.—"Medical Record."

FOOTFALLS ON THE STAIRS.

BY LLOYD MIFFLIN.

When morning from the clouds of roseate red
Comes with her dewy and delicious airs,
I rise and leave my solitary bed,
And stepping softly, hear the muffled tread
Of footfalls on the stairs.

When through the lonely house at noon I go, Wrapped in deep thought, and troubled with my cares,
Pacing the floors in silence to and fro,
I hear those feathery sounds, so soft and low—
The footfalls on the stairs.

At twilight, when the lamps make solemn cheer,
When each loved portrait recognition wears—
Pictures of lost ones beyond measure dear—
As through the halls I pass, I pause, and hear Faint footfalls on the stairs.

At midnight, when I mount up to my room,
And shadows from my glimmering light that flares
Walk with me, and above me darkly loom,
I listen, for I hear from out the gloom
The footfalls on the stairs.

After the heart is stript and desolate;
After the losses, sorrows, sobs, and prayers;
After the loneliness of life's long wait,—
Oh, may I hear within the Golden Gate
Those footfalls on the stairs!
—From "The Slopes of Helicon, and Other Poems."

A KEEN RETORT.

Cardinal Manning's keen wit was often used to drive home a moral warning.

"What are you going to do in life?" he asked a flippant undergraduate at Oxford.

"Oh, I'm going to take Holy Orders," was the airy reply.

"Take care you get them, my son."

SOUTHERN SUMMER RESORTS.

To one who has seen the mountain region of North Carolina it seems incredible that so many thousands of people, in quest of pure air, magnificent scenery and healthful surroundings, should annually flock to the Adirondacks of New York and the White Mountains of New Hampshire. These latter resorts do not compare in any respect with the North Carolina country. Their so-called mountains are dwarfed by those of the "Old North State," while, as for lakes, trout streams, hunting grounds and landscapes at once gracious and majestic, there is no approach to a comparison.

Yet, year after year, our people journey in regiments to New York and New Hampshire, spending vast sums of money for mountain cottages and summer fare, while within eighteen hours of Washington is a region infinitely more attractive in every way—better for health, for bodily comfort, for outdoor sports, and for gratification of the artistic senses. Everybody knows or has heard of Asheville. Thousands have enjoyed its wonderful scenery and have been restored to health by the life-giving atmosphere and the balsamic zephyrs wafted from the mountain sides. But how few know or even guess that there are a hundred possible Ashevilles in that sapphire land—some on the Piedmont plateau, others higher up—and that magnificent lakes and clear streams filled with trout abound on every side. There is a district larger than the State of Massachusetts, easily accessible by rail, well provided with excellent inns and the most picturesque driving roads, and with room for tens of thousands of summer homes in the most beautiful locations imaginable. The area is as large as that of Switzerland; the climate is more equable and wholesome.

Northern people have begun to recognize the Southern State as refuges from their killing climate during February, March and April, and beautiful residences are springing up in Aiken, Thomasville and such points in the interior, while all along the coasts of Florida and the Gulf, as far west as New Orleans, splendid and luxurious hotels are to be found in great numbers. But for the heated period the tide of travel turns ever northward, with its concurrent stream of money, notwithstanding the fact that in western North Carolina there are loftier mountains, more gracious valleys, greater opportunities for fishing, hunting and open-air recreations, and the most bracing and beautiful climate in the world. This can be accounted for upon only one hypothesis—that the people generally know nothing of the unparalleled beauties and resources of North Carolina.

Virginia has fared much better in respect of having her attractions made notorious. For generations past such resorts as the Old Sweet, the Greenbrier White Sulphur, Capon, Orkney, Rock Enon and others of like fame and character have enjoyed a national reputation, while of later years such magnificent sanitariums as the Bath County Hot Springs have taken rank with Carlsbad and Aix-les-Bains. For more than half a century the Greenbrier White Sulphur establishment has been a center and a common meeting ground for the old Southern aristocracy, and there the best society of that section has been always typified and represented. The field of Virginia health resorts may be said to be completely occupied. In North Carolina, with the exception of Asheville, which has no summer season, we have simply a magnificent territory as yet practically unexplored.—Editorial from the Washington Post, July 9, 1899.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

On March 19th, 1895, the Christian League was organized, with the following objects in view:

1.—To organize and carry forward with vigor and enlarged power, in the City of Philadelphia, the great work committed in common to all Christians, co-operating therein with other Societies wherever practicable.

2.—To confer and act in concert with the Civil Authorities in all matters which may promote the moral and physical welfare of the people, especially in the suppression of vice and immorality, in public and in private.

3.—To provide increased facilities, and to secure Christian Workers for carrying on the work of the League in those parts of the City where the need is the greatest and laborers are few.

4.—To provide proper homes, especially in the country, for Children surrounded in the City by the most depraving influences.

5.—To devise ways and means to assist in the preservation and observance of the Sabbath, or the Lord's Day; to discourage the liquor traffic; to prevent the publication and sale of impure literature, and the exhibition of demoralizing pictures; and generally to promote such measures as will make and keep Philadelphia a Christian City in name and in fact.

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE has accomplished a wonderful work in the City of Philadelphia, during the past three years, in the enforcement of law, the improvement of neighborhoods and conditions, the removal of temptations from the pathway of the young, and spread of Gospel influences in dark places.

To an unusual degree we have the co-operation of the Civil Authorities, who frequently solicit our aid in matters involving the reformation of the unfortunate.

The Christian League's Mission School, at 929 Race Street, has exerted a saving and restraining influence in "Chinatown."

The Chinese Y. M. C. A. now numbers about 180 members. The Gospel is preached in their native tongue, while the school teaches them our own language.

To continue and enlarge the general and Chinese work, we are trying to raise ten thousand dollars this year. Will you kindly help us? Your contribution sent to our Treasurer, Mr. John H. Converse, 500 North Broad Street, will be appreciated. A prominent clergyman recently stated in public that a friend who contributes to the Christian League said it was his "best investment." To further quote his words "It does solid, splendid work."

If there is anything wrong in your neighborhood, requiring the attention of the Authorities—either police or health—send word to the office of The Christian League.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES.

The arbitration treaty proposed by the Peace Conference at The Hague has been signed by sixteen powers.

In reporting upon the condition of affairs in Samoa, the Samoan Commission say: "We take this opportunity of recording our opinion that the only natural and normal plan of government for these islands, and the only system which can assure permanent prosperity and tranquillity, is a government by one power."

It is estimated that this season's wheat yield in Europe will be 160,000,000 bushels less than it was last year.

Colonel DuPaty de Clam, who has been regarded as one of the arch conspirators against Dreyfus, has been liberated from prison in Paris.

The famine in Russia continues and typhoid fever in its worst form, as well as scurvy, is devastating the land.

It has been rumored that Wm. Waldorf Astor, who lately became a British citizen would soon be raised to the peerage. This is impossible, for according to an English law of the time of William III. the crown is deprived of the power to confer the rank of peer upon naturalized aliens.

Contract labor is pouring into Hawaii from Japan at the rate of about 1,500 men a month.

Yellow fever at Hampton has been checked, and the fear of a spread of the disease has subsided.

The only Jewish cadet, at West Point, after being ostracized by his class and brutally treated, was recently forced to resign.

Andrew Carnegie has given $50,000 to found a public library at Keighley, England. He has also given $50,000 to found a library in San Diego, Cal., and an equal sum to Fort Worth, Texas.

Aguinaldo has appealed to the powers for recognition of "Filipino Independence" in a document dated from Tarlac, July 27th.

M. de Siers, the Russian Minister at Pekin, has addressed a note to the Tsung Li Yamen, warning that body that the conclusion of an alliance with Japan would give great offence to Russia, and that the consequences to China would be most serious.

An increase in the salaries of about 180 employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington, has been made by order of Assistant Secretary Vanderlip.

Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Ambassador at Washington, has been raised to the peerage, and assumes the title of Lord Pauncefote.

CIVILIZED THE ESKIMOS.

A missionary, Mr. W. T. Lopp, led the Eskimos who, during the winter of 1897, drove a herd of reindeer seven hundred miles to provide food for sailors whose ships had been imprisoned in the ice at Point Barrow, Alaska. The fact prompts Dr. Sheldon Jackson, general agent of education in Alaska, to these pithy remarks on "the influence of the mission schools in making the Arctic regions safe for the transit of white men."

In 1890, when the Congregational Mission was established at Cape Prince of Wales, no whaler had dared drop anchor in the neighborhood of that village for ten years, and the placing of missionaries there was considered by the captains of the whalers a foolhardy undertaking. The missionaries were placed there, and now ships can anchor and their crews go on shore with safety.

When, in 1881-83, Lieutenant Ray, U. S. A., was placed in charge of the international polar expedition at Point Barrow, a turret was built at one corner of his house and armed with cannon to protect his party from the natives. Now the Presbyterian Mission has so civilized the natives that no fortified habitation is necessary.

Under the influence of the Presbyterian missionary the Point Barrow natives not only provided the shipwrecked sailors with food from their own scanty supply, but also with necessary fur clothing. The influence of the missions made it possible for Lieutenant Jarvis to make, unarmed, his heroic trip of two thousand miles through the desolation of an Arctic wilderness, in midwinter, over an unknown wilderness, and among many wild tribes.

FROM AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

"The object of this book has been to get the truth to the people in plain language, and to do it with dispatch, for the time is short, and men are being saved or damned with electric speed. The buzzard and the vulture will find food if they look for it, but with them we are not concerned. We are, however, terribly in earnest to help hungry souls to a place of blessing and power."

DOROTHY DREW.

Dorothy Drew, Gladstone's famous grandchild, whose loving companionship added so much to the happiness of his later years, is the subject of a very interesting sketch in "The Young Woman." We learn from it that before her fourth year her political views had become decidedly radical; to her mind the House of Lords was a most reprehensible institution, and the House of Commons the mainstay of the nation. When the House of Lords was spoken of in her presence as the "Upper House," she would retort: "You mean the House of Commons!" She visited the latter during her third year, and for a time thought herself in church. The frequent rising and sitting of the members soon undecieved her, however, and from these movements and the oratorical gesticulations of the speakers, she fancied herself in a gymnasium—an impression derived from a previous visit to such a place. For some time after this, the Commons was "the place where grandad goes to do his 'nastics,'" or, on occasions, "the place where grandad goes to do his lessons."

Her visit to Queen Victoria was a momentous episode in her young life, and from the article above mentioned we quote the narrative of her delightful experiences:

Dorothy relates how she went down the very long corridor to put on her new white frock and her silk gloves, and how a grand servant all dressed in red came to say that the queen was waiting.

"The Indian man whom the queen likes very much," was at the door, and the next moment Dorothy stood before the great queen whom her grandpapa had served for sixty years. But Dorothy thought nothing of the vastness of the empire, or of the length of the reign which all the world was celebrating. It was nothing to her that the kindly gray-haired lady before her was mistress of one-quarter of the whole human race.

To Dorothy she was just another woman like grandmamma, with a white cap on her head; and Dorothy courtesied and kissed her, and told her her name was "Dorsie," that she called Mr. Gladstone "grand-papa," that they all had pet names at the castle, and so on and so on; and many interesting pet names were revealed on both sides.

"The queen put on her glasses and asked me to go to the other side of the room, so that she could see me better," Dorothy explains, "and then she took a little jewel-case and said, 'This is for you.'"

"I opened it and saw a darling little brooch, with a diamond V and a diamond R and a turquoise I, and a little crown at the top made of red enamel. I courtesied and kissed her hand and said, 'Thank you very much.' She looked very nice and kind, and I liked her very much."

Then the queen kissed the little debutante again, and Dorothy and her mother returned to town.

Kipling, who is numbered among the celebrities who have sought Dorothy's acquaintance, tells an amusing story of their meeting. They had been in the grounds surrounding Hawarden for some time together, when Dorothy's mother appeared, saying:

"Now, Dorothy, I hope you have not been wearying Mr. Kipling."

"Oh, no; not a bit," was the frankly unconventional reply. "Mr. Kipling has been wearying me!"

Western Yearly Meeting Rates.

A round trip rate of one fare has been made for all attending Western Yearly Meeting, from the states of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and parts of Pennsylvania. Ask your local agent for this rate a few days before you wish to use it, so that if he has not heard of it, he may find it out in time to sell the tickets. Good crops and half rates should bring a large attendance.

USE OF THE ZEBRA.

A little boy, writing a composition on the zebra, was requested to describe the animal and to mention what it is useful for. After deep reflection, he wrote: "The zebra is like a horse, only striped. It is chiefly used to illustrate the letter Z."

THE PRISONER OF THE VATICAN.

Leo XIII. has not been out of Rome since his coronation as pope twenty-one years ago. He has been a prisoner in his own little realm, living in the Vatican palace, attending a few services every year at St. Peter's, and either driving or walking every day in the gardens. In hot weather, when the royal court takes refuge in the mountains, and when Rome is deserted by the rich as an unhealthy and uncomfortable city, the pope lives largely out-of-doors in the Vatican gardens.

The prisoner of the Vatican was born among the mountains nearly ninety years ago. He has the broad-shouldered frame and long arms and legs of an Italian mountaineer, and his eyes, when he was in the prime of manhood, were like those of a hawk. He must often have sighed, during his long period of confinement in Rome, for his native hills!

While the pope is a prisoner from choice, he is in touch with all the courts of Europe, and with dignitaries of the Roman Church from every part of the world. He receives every morning the cardinal secretary of state, who confers with him on all questions of papal policy. When his health will allow him to do so, he has granted audiences to cardinals, bishops and men of distinction. No prelate ever enters or leaves Rome without paying a visit to the pope. By personal intercourse, as well as by correspondence, he learns what is going on in every quarter of Christendom.

The pope has always been industrious and orderly. An early riser, he lives frugally, and requires but little sleep. The expenses of the Vatican are under his close supervision. He is a careful economist, a cautious man, who deliberates over every important question submitted to him, and never acts hastily.

He has won his respect by his kindly spirit, and especially by his good sense in dealing with some of the civil and industrial questions of the day. Conciliation has marked his decisions, and his views have generally been in harmony with modern progress. Yet there never has been a Roman pontiff truer to the traditions and the assumptions of the Roman Church, or more inflexible in his belief that the Church of Rome, and above all, the man who sits in the papal chair, should have supreme temporal and spiritual authority in the affairs of individuals and of nations.—"Youth's Companion."

TRUE EDUCATION.

Those who are connected with institutions of learning must labor to make them centers of power as well as of light, and we may trust with confidence that when educational institutions perform their true functions for the church they will receive the loyal support of the church. In any case the fact remains that the church cannot increase in influence unless its youth are trained and prepared for the widest possible life and service, and our own institutions must aim to be feeding places for the growing life of our young members.

Whatever may be the condition of our public schools, our professedly religious institutions of learning must not neglect the culture of the heart. They must present ideals of life as well as ideals of scholarship and they must think no less of what will feed the spiritual nature, in its broadest sense, than of how to make the mind skillful in its grasp of problems of thought. Character is the eternal thing and a teacher who is not a skillful master of the mysteries of character building is not a true educator.

Earlham College, RICHMOND, INDIANA...

LINDLEY HALL.

Earlham ranks as next to the largest Protestant denominational college in Indiana. It had 206 students of college standing last year, exclusive of preparatory, music and special Bible students. The total enrollment in all departments was 301. The Earlham Faculty is composed of fifteen professors, not counting assistants.

The religious influences at Earlham are strong and healthful. Student life is eminently enthusiastic and enterprising. College spirit is hearty and progressive. Public sentiment is constant and potent for the promotion of sound scholarship in connection with a high standard of morals and deportment.

Earlham College has five buildings. Its lecture halls, laboratories, museum, libraries, class rooms, society halls, auditorium and other quarters for college work (exclusive of the Boarding Department in Earlham Hall) make in all thirty-six spacious and well-appointed rooms.

Earlham College has well-equipped Chemical, Biological and Physical laboratories, an Astronomical Observatory, and a Museum of 14,000 specimens. Libraries available to students aggregate 30,000 volumes.

Earlham College offers courses of study in the following departments: Greek, Latin, Hebrew, German, French, Anglo-Saxon, English, History and Economics, Philosophy, Mathematics, Civil Engineering, Physics, Chemistry, Biology, Geology, Zoology, Astronomy, an extended course in the English Bible, and Music.

EARLHAM HALL.

Earlham College, RICHMOND, INDIANA...

PARRY HALL.

GYMNASIUM.

Students who can only attend college for a year or two at most, or who desire to make special preparation for professions or business vocations without becoming candidates for degrees, are admitted to special courses of study according to their advancement, needs, and the time at their command.

The requirements for graduation at Earlham College are fully equivalent to those leading to the Bachelor's degree in most of the leading universities of America, and are so recognized by such universities.

The Expenses at Earlham College are as low as those at any other college in this country offering equal advantages. To students who reside in Earlham Hall the total cost for board and tuition is decidedly below the average at colleges of like standing in the West.

For catalogue and beautiful book of views of the college and its surroundings, address EARLHAM COLLEGE, Richmond, Ind.

Nearly all these men live within or close to the College buildings, and come in contact with the students in many ways.

The Library now contains nearly 40,000 books and pamphlets, completely catalogued, and is rapidly increasing. An addition to the building, costing nearly $20,000, has just been erected, and adds greatly to its facilities. The Library is accessible all day to students.

An excellent Astronomical Observatory, well-equipped Laboratories in Chemistry, Biology, and Physics, and a Machine Shop and Drawing Room for Engineering Students, afford large facilities for the study of Science.

Haverford has had a struggling existence financially. It has, however, recently received additional bequests and donations, bringing its aggregate endowment, exclusive of its buildings and the land surrounding them, to a million dollars or more. This will enable it to offer in equipment and teaching force every advantage to its students. It does not have any preparatory students, and of late years it has discouraged the attendance of graduate students. It is, therefore, able to concentrate its large resources of men and means upon the four undergraduate classes. It is pretty certain that these resources will now become greater with each succeeding year.

In standard of advancement it ranks with the best colleges of its vicinity—Princeton, for example. Finding that the general prevalence of examinations in lieu of certificates in other institutions was likely to have a prejudicial effect on the kind of students seeking admission to Haverford, it has decided to receive no more certificates from schools, and to examine all candidates not coming from other colleges.

The grounds around the College buildings embrace 215 acres in one of the healthiest and prettiest suburbs of Philadelphia. About 50 acres were planted in choice trees sixty years ago, and there are few finer lawns in America. Among these trees there are excellent cricket, football and golf grounds, while a pond for skating gives a chance for exercise and recreation in the winter months. No more healthy or pleasant college home can be found. About one-half the students are members of the Society of Friends, and perhaps one-half the remainder are closely associated with it. A definite but quiet religious feeling pervades the College. The Young Men's Christian Association, which for several years has embraced a majority of the students, has a strong and positive influence for good. Probably no college has sent a delegation so large, in proportion to its size, to the Northfield Meetings for several summers as Haverford. The various religious influences and the careful and refined homes from which the students usually come, maintain an excellent moral and social atmosphere in the College.

A new College Dormitory is now in process of erection, and will be used the coming year.

Bryn Mawr College, BRYN MAWR, PENNA. . . .

Organization. The College has been organized with special reference to giving both undergraduate and graduate, or university teaching, and offers full graduate and undergraduate instruction in Greek, Latin, English, German, French, Italian and Spanish, History, Political Science, Philosophy, Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry, and Biology, and graduate and elective courses in Sanskrit and Indo-European Philology, Old French, Gothic, Teutonic Philology, Old Norse, Old High German, Middle High German, Old Saxon, Anglo-Saxon, Celtic and Slavonic Languages, Hebrew, Aramaic, Assyrian, Biblical Literature, Pedagogy, History of Art, Physical Chemistry, Geology, Mineralogy, Palaeontology, and Physiological Chemistry.

Library. The Library, containing twenty-nine thousand volumes and seven thousand pamphlets, includes the Classical Library of Professor Sauppe, the Semitic Library of Professor Amiaud, and excellent collections in the Norse, Swedish and Spanish Languages. Two hundred and fifty-four literary and philological periodicals and reviews in the English, German, French, Italian, Norse, and Swedish Languages are taken by the Library.

Fellowships, Scholarships, and Expenses.

The College offers eleven resident fellowships, of the value of five hundred and twenty-five dollars each, awarded annually—one in Greek, one in Latin, one in English, one in German and Teutonic Philology, one in Romance Languages, one in History or Political Science, one in Philosophy, one in Mathematics, one in Physics, one in Chemistry, and one in Biology. These fellowships are awarded as an honor in recognition of previous attainments. They are open to graduates of Bryn Mawr College, or of any other college of good standing.

It also offers three European fellowships of the value of five hundred dollars each, and five resident graduate scholarships.

Eight competitive undergraduate scholarships—four of the value of $300 and four of the value of $200—are offered annually to candidates presenting themselves for the Spring matriculation examinations of Bryn Mawr College, a first scholarship of the value of $300 and a second of the value of $200 being open to candidates from each of the following districts:—(a) The New England States; (b) New York, New Jersey, and Delaware; (c) Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and the States west of the Mississippi River; (d) Pennsylvania, and all places not included in (a), (b), and (c). These scholarships, which are to be held for one year only, are awarded in each of the above-named districts on the basis of the sum total of marks obtained by the candidate.

Eight scholarships of $125 each, renewable for four consecutive years, are open to candidates who have received all their preparation for the matriculation examination of Bryn Mawr College in the High School for Girls, Philadelphia. One scholarship of $125 is open to candidates who have received preparation for the matriculation examination in the Lower Merion High School.

One scholarship of the value of $200 is open annually for competition to members of the Society of Friends, and two additional scholarships of the value of $200 each are open for competition to graduate students who are members of the Society of Friends and need financial assistance.

Two scholarships of the value of $250, and one scholarship of the value of $200, are open to students pursuing courses in the College.

The lowest charge for tuition, board, and residence in one of the College Halls is $400 a year.

THE YOUNG MAN OR WOMAN who starts out in life depending upon luck or good fortune for the development of opportunities makes the work of life a mere matter of chance, and does not deserve success. Education is a preparation to do the best work of the worlds, and while there must be Industry, Courage, Application, and High Moral Purpose back of it in order to command the confidence and respect of the world, yet education has a tendency to develop and strengthen these very qualities, and thus, in a great measure, command Success.

As the world advances it gets more exacting in its varied demands. The business talent that was necessary to conduct a business successfully fifty years ago would not meet requirements of the colossal systems of to-day. The rewards are greater now than they were then, but greater efforts must be put forth to secure them.

In times past a man could let his business educate him, now he must educate for his business; for experience is too dear and slow a teacher to be allowed to handicap him in his race for the goal of Success. Practical education means an education that prepares one to successfully conduct the practical affairs of life. With this equipment the battle is half won; without it a human life is certain to be constantly shrouded in the shadows of Failure. The choice between Success and Failure must be made in youth. Educate for life's work.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL,

Providence, R. I.

FOR BOTH SEXES.

FOUNDED
IN 1784.

The late George William Curtis, speaking of the FRIENDS' SCHOOL, of Providence, Rhode Island, said : "The school is famous for the excellence of its instruction and the serene influence of its discipline." The school is situated in a beautiful grove, upon an eminence in the city, one hundred and eighty-two feet above tide-water. For more than a century development has been steady and progress marked. Such is its high standing among institutions of a like character that many universities and colleges receive students from it on certificates alone.

The educational force of an institution of this character is not limited to school hours ; it is constant. Truthfulness and integrity are made the foundation ; after that, sound scholarship, culture, love of the beautiful in nature and art. The daily life and deportment of pupils out of school hours receive special attention. This is a distinguished element of success. There is no obtrusive surveillance, but conscientious, thoughtful, regard for true character, which outlasts everything else. The moral and social training of the institution, an important matter in education, reaches individual responsibility, and obedience to personal conviction of right and duty. The end to be attained is that the child shall stand safely and firmly when the fostering influence of school and home are withdrawn.

The School has twenty experienced teachers, and as far as practicable, they are specialists, limited to their several departments. It is of very great importance to pupils and to the institution that the School regards with special care thorough common English education, and that its preparation for college is according to the very best educational standards of the times. Anything less than this is in either case a violation of a sacred obligation and trust, sure to come into condemnation in after years. Care is taken to educate also for business and every-day practical life.

The school has approved teachers of French and German, both English and native. Vocal and instrumental music is taught by distinguished teachers. It has a modern and complete chemical laboratory thoroughly equipped, a very rich mineral cabinet, an astronomical observatory, and a fine modern library of more than seven thousand volumes. Its art studio and nature and art work, including mechanical drawing from nature and painting, attract attention. It obtained an award of a Medal and Diploma at the World's Columbian Exposition for excellence in wood carving. The rooms are lighted with electricity. The heating and ventilation have been brought to great perfection recently. The air is now changed in the rooms every eight minutes.

The school is intended to be thorough and to be an excellent home. It is for its patrons to determine whether it succeeds in these important directions. Whittier said of the School :

" Not vainly the gift of its founder was made,
Not prayerless the stones of its corner were laid ;
The blessing of Him whom in secret they sought
Has owned the good work which the fathers have wrought."

Penn College

AFFORDS A BROAD AND CAREFUL TRAINING

The Curriculum

Breadth, thoroughness and impartial research have characterized all the departments of instruction. The most important elements of undergraduate education have been arranged in four complete courses of four years each—Classical, Scientific, Philosophic and Biblical—leading to their appropriate Bachelor's degree.

The Preparatory Course covers three full years beyond the common school branches, fully preparing students for college entrance.

THE FACULTY. All members of the Faculty are specialists in their respective lines.

MATERIAL EQUIPMENT. The Chemical, Biological and Physical Laboratories are supplied with modern appointments. Good beginnings have been made in working libraries and museums.

LECTURES. A Union Lecture Course, consisting of eight choice numbers, was offered last year. Six high-grade lectures have already been secured for next year.

ATHLETICS. A committee from the Faculty co-operate with the Christian Association in the management of the Athletics, thus securing a wise direction and wholesome restraint.

CHRISTIAN CULTURE. Live Christian Associations, a large Mission Circle, Prayer Meetings, Bible Classes, and other means of grace, afford ample opportunity for Christian culture. According to the official report, in many respects Penn was the Banner College of Iowa in Christian work.

THE STUDENTS. Wide-awake, self-reliant and courageous, the Penn students are proving worthy in every field they enter. The atmosphere of unselfishness about the College makes student life home-like from the day of entrance.

AIMS. To be a first-class college. To offer the best opportunities at a minimum cost. To fit students for faithful and skillful performance of life's substantial work. To fill them with right ideas of Christian life and character.

ADVANTAGES. Expenses reasonable for good accommodations. A wholesome College atmosphere. Graduate Scholarships at Haverford and Bryn Mawr. Excellent moral and Christian influences.

Fall term opens September 19th, 1899.

Winter term opens January 2d, 1900.

Spring term opens March 27th, 1900.

Enrollment last year, 401.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND belongs among the Educational Institutions of Friends in America. Its influence reaches seven thousand homes, distributed through every Yearly Meeting and in nearly every state of the Union. It gives in its fifty-two issues each year a collection of articles from the best writers in our denomination, and many valuable papers from Christian thinkers of other branches of the Church. It treats in a broad and liberal spirit the great questions now before the Church, and it stands for every great moral reform which would make man freer and more permanently happy. It is not controversial, but illuminative and constructive. It is an exponent of applied Christianity. Christian Endeavorers cannot afford to miss its valuable department for this branch of the Church. Bible Classes will find much profit from its study of the International Lesson. It is also a newspaper, giving a general view of the home and foreign mission work, accounts of special meetings and the movement of workers, as well as full reports of all Yearly Meetings.

Friends are urged everywhere to assist in giving it a wider circulation. Sample copies will be forwarded to any who will use them in extending its sphere or influence. Address,

Three Interesting Friends' Books.

PENELVE;

OR, AMONG THE QUAKERS.

An American Story by Richard H. Thomas, M.D., author of "Echoes and Pictures," "A History of the Society of Friends in America," etc. Preface by W. C. Braithwaite, B.A., LL.B. Five original full-page illustrations. This is a cool, refreshing, and in every way pleasing story.

It has much of the simplicity, purity and charm of Quaker life, and while imaginary in outline and detail, is understood to be true in substance, as it is certainly written with full knowledge and sympathy as to what constitute the essentials of Quaker life. The grand passion asserts itself, as everywhere else, among these simple scenes, and warms the story with a thread of pleasing and rather idyllic loving. The serious point of the story, beyond the portrayal of home life among the Friends, is to show its higher and better influence by tracing its effect upon a serious-minded agnostic who is brought into the story from New York and represents in his way the worldly side of modern life.—The Independent.

360 pages, 8vo. Handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.25, postage paid.

THE LIFE and LETTERS OF

ELIZABETH L. COMSTOCK

Compiled by her sister, C. HARE. With portrait.

This interesting book consists largely of extracts from letters written and received by Elizabeth L. Comstock during her long sojourn in America. Her experiences in visiting prisons, asylums, hospitals, etc., during the time of the American War, are most graphically described, and form interesting reading. Her visits to England and Ireland form part of the concluding chapters. 12mo. Cloth. 580 pages. With portrait, $1.50, postpaid.

QUAKER POEMS.

A Collection of Verse relating to the Society of Friends, gathered from all sources, and edited with Introduction and Notes by Charles Francis Jenkins.

About sixty poems on a great variety of subjects from about fifty authors, illustrative of the principles of the Society—its history, personnel, associations, customs, etc.

FORTY ILLUSTRATIONS, made expressly for this book, some of which are original drawings, others are from paintings, photographs and prints selected from the largest and best collections. Portrait of George Fox, from the painting by Sir Peter Lely; also portraits of Wm. Penn, Whittier, John Bright, Jos. John Gurney, and of other well-known Friends to whom poems refer. Also pictures of many places of historical interest referred to in the text.

Nearly 300 pages, large 12mo, well-printed on good paper, neatly bound in cloth, gold side lettering and design, $1.50. Will be sent postpaid on receipt of price. Sample pages sent on application.

THE LIFE'S AIM.

*If there be good in what I wrought,
Thy hand compelled it, Master, Thine;
Where I have failed to meet Thy thought
I know, through Thee, the blame is mine.
One instant's toil to thee denied
Stands all Eternity's offense,
Of that I did with thee to guide
To Thee, through Thee, be excellence.
The depth and dream of my desire,
The bitter paths wherein I stray,
Thou knowest who has made the fire,
Thou knowest who has made the clay.
One stone the more swings to her place
In that dread Temple of Thy Worth—
It is enough that through Thy grace
I SAW NAUGHT COMMON ON THY EARTH.*

USES OF THE BIBLE.

THERE is many a man who never shows a genuine heart's love to his wife, who treats her almost with indifference, who is cold, hard, unsympathetic, and sparing of words and deeds of intimate affection; though he would under no condition allow anyone else to speak slightly or harshly of his life-companion. Many Christians do much the same thing with their Bibles. They cry out against those who seem to them to dishonor it, but they treat it much worse themselves, since they never make an honest effort to find out what is really in the Bible, or what its true use is. In fact, the Pharisees so worshiped the letter of Scripture that they failed altogether to recognize Him of whom the Scriptures testified, when He stood before them in person. This is an extreme case of what the Bible suffers at the hands of its friends.

We need to be honest with ourselves in our treatment of this book, and before we throw stones at those whose conclusions on it do not suit us, let us be sure that we honor it rightly ourselves, and study it in spirit and in truth, and realize its use and purpose. What is the Bible for? It is not a substitute for an absent God; it is not to take His place. It is not a holy shrine to be blindly worshiped. It is not a magical volume which works miracles for the man who says he believes it. It is given to us to teach us how to find the living God, who is not absent, but who speaks to us Himself as soon as we learn to know His voice. It tells us about His nature, His thought, His ways of working, His purposes, His love, His dealing with men and with nations, His patience, His mercy, His grace, His judgments, His incarnation, His method of drawing men to Himself, and of changing sinners to sons. Instead of being a "substitute" for Him, it shows us how to come ourselves into intimate fellowship with Him. Instead of speaking for Him, its purpose is to bring us to Him who speaks for Himself. He who uses his Bible as an end in itself, and not as a means to an end, does not use it rightly. Jacob's ladder, though angels ascended and descended upon it, was not heaven; it was only a means for climbing to heaven. The Bible is not God; it is a book which tells about God, how to receive His speech into the heart, and it proves its value only to those who use it for what it was given. The best way to defend the Bible is to use it.

Those who use a guide-book in traveling know whether it is a valuable one or not by the way in which it enables them to understand the countries they visit, and if they never consult it at all, they show thus that they do not value it, no matter how much they praise it with their lips. There are many of us who declare with loud voice that we believe every word of the Bible, and yet we could not possibly tell what the Book of Ezekiel is about, or how the Gospel of John agrees with the Gospel of Luke, or why Paul wrote as he did to the Galatians. This is doubtful loyalty to the Bible. The way to prove our loyalty to it is to understand its message, and those who think (falsely) that the Bible is being undermined by research, ought to be made to see that the only thing which really discredits the Bible is the fact that those who profess to love it so much take little or no pains to understand its message, or to use it as a means of learning about God and of coming into fellowship with Him. When Christians show by their use of it that the Bible everywhere reveals the Divine will and purpose, and that they see Him here revealed, and that through this revelation they come into close union and life with the living God, they then need not fear all the scholarship and research on the globe. This practical test furnishes the insuperable proof of the genuineness and divine origin of the Bible.

MOODY'S POSITION.

D. L. MOODY has given us in recent years, many illustrations of the largeness of his heart and the breadth of his mind, as well as of the greatness of his spiritual power. His letter, written last month to Lord Overtoun, of Scotland, is an admirable illustration of his wisdom as well as of his spiritual perception, and it takes the true position and attitude toward the Bible. Lord Overtoun, in the name of many Scotch Christians, invited Moody to make a religious visit to Glasgow, and to hold evangelistic meetings there this winter. In declining the invitation, Moody took occasion to analyze the religious situation in this country in the following words:

"The work in my own country has never been as promising as it is now. Destructive theology on the one side, and the no less evil spirit of intolerance on the other side have wrought wide dissensions in many communities in America. Instead of fighting error by the emphasis of truth, there has been too much splitting of hairs, and only too often an unchristian spirit of bitterness. This has frequently resulted in depleted churches, and has opened the way for still greater errors. Under these conditions the question of the authorship of the individual books of the Bible has become of less immediate importance than a knowledge of the teaching of the Bible itself; the question of two Isaiahs is less urgent than a familiarity with the prophecy itself."

This will be recognized as being very much in line with our preceding editorial, though that was written without any thought of this quotation. The great evangelist goes on to say that the recognition of these facts is resulting in the preaching of the Gospel as never before, and he expresses the belief that the coming year in America is going to see a widespread evangelistic movement, in which thousands will be reached by the churches. We believe that he is right, and we are confident that the multitude will respond at once to a vital proclamation of the Gospel of salvation. Let the minister who wishes to help men use the Bible, not as a subject of debate and controversy, but as a means of illumination. The way to help people to believe it an inspired book, is to interpret it so that it enables them to see God more clearly, and the reality of spiritual things and the meaning of life. The greatest evangelist of this century is going to work this winter on this line and in this method, and there will surely be results to prove the wisdom of the course. This is precisely the way to buttress the Bible and to establish its power.

So profoundly is Moody convinced of this fact, that he was not afraid—even against the advice of some of his friends—to invite to Northfield, as one of the speakers this summer, George Adam Smith, one of the greatest preachers of Christ in Scotland, but at the same time one of the foremost Biblical scholars in Europe, and of the so-called higher critic school.

DEATH OF WILLIAM JONES.

WE regret exceedingly to hear of the sudden death of William Jones, of Sunderland, England. He was known personally to many Friends in this country, and he was one of the English delegation at the Richmond Conference twelve years ago. He was everywhere recognized as one of the ablest and most persuasive advocates of peace in our branch of the church. He has for many years been ardently devoted to the work of spreading peace sentiment at home and abroad, and his life was marked by its wide service to this and other noble causes. Not long before his death he published an interesting and valuable autobiographical book, entitled, "Quaker Campaigns in Peace and War," which is a graphic narrative of his work in Russia, and during the Franco-Prussian war. We shall later give an extended review of this book, as it is one which American Friends should know.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE publish this week a most interesting and valuable list of the names of those who visited New England Yearly Meeting in the ministry in the early years of its history. This list is an important one for the historian and biographer, and its publication here will preserve it for future use. Some of the names, it will be noticed, are those of martyrs who joyously gave their lives for the truth which their lips proclaimed. "Here martyred and hereafter glorified!"

FUNDS are needed at once to meet the expense of publishing the proceedings of the Educational Conference held at Providence. It is hoped that Friends who are interested in promoting the cause of education, and who believe in maintaining these Five Year Conferences, will feel like contributing means to enable the committee to go forward with the publication of this report. About $300 should be raised, and it should be in the treasurer's hands at the earliest moment possible. Those wishing to assist in this matter should send their contributions to the Treasurer, James Wood, Mt. Kisco, New York.

CHURCH NOTES.

The Mormon Church is said to be in sore need of money. It has lately been bonded for a debt of $1,000,000.

The statistical reports of the Presbyterian church in England show an increase during the year of 1,805 communicants, the entire present number being 73,249.

Religious riots occurred at Londonderry, Ireland, on the 14th. An Irish party wrecked a Methodist Church, and in retaliation their opponents stoned a Roman Catholic Chapel.

The closing sessions of the Third Zionist Conference were held at Basle, Switzerland, on the 21st. More than 300 delegates were present during the Conference, representing the Jews in every part of the world.

The seventh annual conference of the Brotherhood of the Kingdom took place at Marlborough on the Hudson, July 31st and August 4th. The assembly has been highly commended for the deeply religious spirit in which it sought to handle social questions.

There are at present throughout the world fifty-six Methodist deaconess institutions, comprising over eight hundred deaconesses and probationers. Commenting on the character of the work thus accomplished, an exchange says, "With characteristic energy the Methodists have definitely caught and carried out the conviction that the world wants 'mothering.'"

Recent statistics for the Jewish race published by the Berlin "Institutum Judaicum" show that there are over 8,800,000 Jews in the world. Russia leads with 4,500,000; Austria with 1,100,000; while the United States is third with 930,000. Of this last figure, 350,000 reside in New York. In the United States there were only 1,000 Jews in 1812, and of the present number 530,000 have been added within the last decade. It is shown that the growth in English-speaking countries is parallel with a diminution in the older settlements of Eastern Europe.

CORRECTION.

IN making up the paper last week, a part of the report of the "Earlham Biblical Institute" was put on to the end of the opening account of "North Carolina Yearly Meeting." The Earlham report begins at the second paragraph from the bottom in the first column of page 780.

Let us be only patient, patient; and let God our Father teach His own lesson His own way. Let us try to learn it well, and learn it quickly; but do not let us fancy that He will ring the school bell, and send us to play before our lesson is learned.—Charles Kingsley.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WILLIAM PENN AND ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

BY AUGUSTINE JONES.

New books are produced with such facility and distributed so abundantly, that we seem to be in danger of neglecting the earlier and sometimes more edifying literature of the Society of Friends, which appeared in the seventeenth century. Emerson and other distinguished literary men have, indeed, given the general advice to read none but old books. We cannot assent to that course, but we do recommend cleaving closely and tenderly to old and tried friends, while we put new ones upon probation.

The writer has been much impressed recently by two letters of Robert Louis Stevenson, written in 1881 to Horatio F. Brown, from Davos-Platz, in Switzerland. This gifted poet, essayist and novelist, one of the great masters of language of our time, was possessed like Shakespeare, Scott and others, with the power of penetrating to the very fountains of human thought and action, laying all things open and distinct before the eyes of less inspired mortals.

A Scotchman seeking health, an exile, wandering in the streets of San Francisco in 1879, he discovered in a second-hand bookstore a classic. It was "Some Fruits of Solitude in Reflections and Maxims relating to Conduct of Human Life," by William Penn.

We to whom Penn and his maxims are household names and words, never realized such emotions from his works as came to Stevenson like a flood, as appears in these letters. But read the maxims again under the inspiration of this poetic soul, and they have a richness of meaning and expression never seen before, by some of us. The terse, beautiful style of them is admirable. How his wonderful diction stands out when compared in strength and attractiveness with the wearisome manner of expression of most of his contemporaries:

Davos.

"My dear Brown: Here it is, with the mark of a San Francisco bouquiniste. (Keeper of a book-stall). And if ever in all my 'human conduct' I have done a better thing to any fellow-creature than handing on to you this sweet, dignified, and wholesome book, I know I shall hear of it on the last day. To write a book like this were impossible; at least one can hand it on—with a wrench—one to another. My wife cries out and my own heart misgives me, but still here it is. I could scarcely better prove myself yours affectionately,

R. L. STEVENSON.

Davos.

"My dear Brown: I hope, if you get thus far, you will know what an invaluable present I have made you. Even the copy was dear to me, printed in the colony that Penn established, and carried in my pocket all about the San Francisco streets, read in street cars and ferry-boats, when I was sick unto death, and found in all times and places a peaceful and sweet companion. But I hope, when you shall have reached this note, my gift will not have been in vain; for while just now we are so busy and intelligent, there is not the man living—no, nor recently dead—that could have put with so lovely a spirit so much honest, kind wisdom into words.

SUBMISSION AND REST.

The camel, at the close of day,
Kneels down upon the sandy plain
To have his burden lifted off,
And rest to gain.

My soul, thou, too, shouldst to thy knees,
When daylight draweth to a close,
And let thy Master lift thy load,
And grant repose.

Else, how canst thou to-morrow meet,
With all to-morrow's work to do,
If thou thy burden all the night
Dost carry through?

The camel kneels at break of day
To have his lord replace his load,
Then rises up anew to take
The desert road.

And thou shouldst kneel at morning's dawn,
That God may give thee daily care,
Assured that He no load too great
Will make thee bear.

The Disciples, or Disciples of Christ, the fourth largest religious body in the United States, are preparing to celebrate the jubilee of their organized missionary work, in Cincinnati, Ohio, from Tenth month 13th to 20th.

SPIRITUAL BEAUTY.

"That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express," said Lord Bacon in one of his quaint little essays. Further on, however, he felt it safe to add: "Not but I think a painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity . . . and not by rule." He was speaking of physical comeliness, yet we may apply his observations to spiritual beauty as well, of which no set picture can speak the inmost sacred charm. A delineation of ideal goodness, as an embodiment, may surpass anything real that we have seen, merely as a form; but always it will lack the ray from within, personal, authentic, the spontaneous light and warmth of a divine mode of motion.

Indeed, movement is beauty, as every artist knows. Motion is life. Good deeds are the perfect expression of spiritual beauty, the inevitable crystallization of beautiful thoughts. No picture on canvas, or on the poet's glowing page, can present that flash from heart to face which registers the last refinement of human righteousness and sympathy as irradiated from an act of absolute kindness. The inner felicity of which this spiritual illumination is born cannot be assumed at will; it is the distinguishing trait of the heaven-bred soul. The hypocrite can make a better formal show of righteousness than ever attended a really great deed of love; but the convincing and mastering power of sincerity goes with the beautiful, unpremeditated, inevitable movement.

The way, the truth, and the life,—these are one in supreme beauty; they inform every act of charity, every impulse of sympathy, in the whole realm of spiritual experience. He who coldly examines the law and keeps the forms of its commandments may do righteousness by rote, and great good may come of it; but the spirit that has received the illumination of the law and irradiates it as the light of its smiles and the heat of its love works the miracles of life through the power of that higher beauty which no painter can limn, no poet describe. The lily of the field arrays itself unconsciously, yet by force of an imperious law, in a glory above that of Solomon. Beauty comes that way. The law of Christ makes it a natural growth, a bloom of the soul. First the way, then the truth, then the life. The way is the form of beauty, the truth is the law of beauty, the life is the application of beauty. Nothing is beautiful that is not good; nothing is good until it shows good results. Spiritual beauty is a mode of spiritual motion towards the supreme good, a movement that uncovers blessings with every throb.—The Independent.

Look within. Within is the fountain of good; and it will ever bubble up, if thou wilt ever dig.—Marcus Aurelius.

Our great national leaders, and indeed all the world's greatest statesmen, have been Christians. Should not He who made the world, best teach men to govern it?

MEMORIAL OF A. H. PICKERING, AN ELDER OF CHICAGO MONTHLY MEETING.

"They that are planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God." Ps. 92: 13.

By the sudden ending of the life of Aquila H. Pickering, Chicago Meeting of Friends has lost one of its best loved and most active members, and Western Yearly Meeting one who served it with devotion, and was interested in every line of its work. He was born in the State of Ohio on the 11th of Twelfth month, 1820, and received his education in part, in Mt. Pleasant Boarding School of Friends. He removed to Salem, Iowa, in 1842, and four years later was united in marriage with Ruth M. Dorland. She died in 1878, leaving six children, all of whom are living at this time. In 1865 they came to Chicago, where the intense activity of business life was particularly congenial to one of his energetic temperament.

Although in the practice of attending the meetings of the church, and interested in its progress, he was not converted until about forty years of age. He often alluded to this event, which made a great change in his life. He had a peculiarly hopeful spirit, and desired that Friends should occupy an important place in this great city.

He was active in organizing Chicago meeting, and gave freely of his time and money to secure a suitable place of worship. The influence of his spirit of earnest devotion, combined with great kindness of manner, made his presence everywhere most helpful.

In 1880 he married Hannah N. T. Bufkin, who survives him. Our dear Friend had passed into advanced age; he was characterized by a humility and tenderness that was made more impressive by his great height and commanding presence. It was his custom to give the hand and a kindly greeting at the door to every one who attended our meetings. He had great affection and sympathy for the young, and belonged to the Young Peoples' Society of Christian Endeavor, occasionally attending their meetings. Only once when in California did he miss attending his own yearly meeting, and he had visited nearly, if not quite, every yearly meeting on this continent. His enjoyment of meetings was great, especially those where he could give his testimony to the faithfulness and love of his heavenly Father. From the life of the great Apostle Paul, inspired by the Holy Spirit, we have these blessed words, "And now abideth faith, hope, and love, these three, but the greatest of these is love." How beautifully was this trait of love manifested in the life of our dearly beloved friend; it was so a part of him, that you could not come in contact with him without being inspired by it.

His great, loving, heart reached out to the whole world in a longing desire that all might know Jesus and his love. His love and zeal for the little church in Chicago was intense, and we well remember his untiring efforts for a new and better building in which to worship, and his joy and gratitude on the day of its dedication. May his example in this respect live before us for perpetual imitation. This providence in the removal of our brother speaks to us all; it says to the older ones in our midst, "What thy hand findeth to do, do it speedily, for the night cometh," and to the young who will come forward and say, "Here am I, let me take his place, only so it may please God that I have also His reward."

"And I heard a voice saying blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

A Friend in Lynn, Mass., writes further of A. H. Pickering:

"I well remember the first time that he was at our meeting in Lynn, several years ago—how when he took his seat I thought we had before us a man of unusual power, and yet when he knelt in prayer his utterances had all the sweet simplicity of a little child; and I came to the conclusion that he had mastered the lesson that so many of our strong men of affairs are slow to learn, that "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye cannot see the kingdom of heaven." It will always be sweet to remember his last visit among us, and his farewell testimony in our meeting; and while the manner of his going seems terrible, can we not say of him, as was said of Enoch, that "he walketh with God and was not, for God took him."

IN MEMORIAM OF ANN M. HAINES.

Ann M. Haines, aged 81 years, widow of the late Emmor Haines, of Buffalo, N. Y., on the 14th of Seventh month, 1899, ended her sojourn on earth and entered into her heavenly inheritance. She was the daughter of Lindley M. Moore, of Rochester, N. Y., a member and esteemed elder of Collins (N. Y.) Meeting of Friends, through whose liberality and that of her husband the meeting-house and minister's residence at Collins were largely built, and she has ever generously helped Friends' work there, and in other parts of New York.

Of none can it be more truly said that she was a "Mother in Israel."

"None knew her but to love her;
None named her, but to praise."

She retained her clear, mental faculties to the last, and took a deep interest and was ever active in all departments of our church work, and was an active organizer, supporter, and for several years president, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends. Home and foreign missions were ever in her heart and mind, and every effort to aid the poor and needy found in her a sympathetic and generous helper. And workers in the cause of Christ always found in our departed mother a wise counsellor and sympathizing friend.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

The voice of the soul is not to be silenced.—Felix Adler.

Lesson X.

Ninth month 3, 1899

REBUILDING THE TEMPLE.

Ezra. 3: 10 to 4: 5.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The temple of God is holy which temple ye are. 1 Cor. 3: 17.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 28.—Daily offerings. Ezra 3: 1-7.

Third-day, Eighth mo. 29.—Rebuilding the Temple. Ezra 3: 8-13.

Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 30.—Rebuilding the Temple. Ezra 4: 1-6.

Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 31.—Enemies prevail. Ezra 4: 11-24.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 1.—Charge of the Levites. 1 Chron. 33: 24-32.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 2.—Enduring mercy. Psalm 136.

First-day, Ninth mo. 3.—God's Temple. 1 Cor. 3: 6-17.

The verses intervening between the present lesson and the last should be read, omitting the lists of names, which, however, should be glanced over.

The time of the return was probably about the spring of 536 B.C.; the altar was set up in the "seventh month" (chap. 3: 1), October, and the foundations of the temple begun in the "second month" "in the second year of their coming" (3: 8), or May, 535 B.C.

The march to Jerusalem would probably take at least four months (compare Ezra 7: 9); the distance was about six hundred miles.

The land which the returned exiles controlled must have been of quite small extent, as the list of towns does not include any south of Bethlehem, nor any north of the tribe of Benjamin. Some scholars think that the first body of returning exiles was much less in number than has been generally supposed; the lists in Ezra do not state distinctly when those named returned, and various other data seem to show that the lists include those of a later period. The words and attitude of the prophets, Haggai and Zechariah, rather support this view. This view also explains the long period of fifteen or sixteen years before the temple was begun to be raised on the foundations laid in 535.

10. "The builders." It is not quite clear whether this word refers to the workmen or to the directors of the work, Jeshua and Zerubbabel, but taking into consideration the whole connection, the former seems better; the verse would then read as in margin of Revised Version: "and when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord the priests stood in their apparel," etc. The apparel was rich (compare Ex. 31: 10; 37: 27; 2 Chron. 5: 12). "Trumpets." (Compare Numb. 10: 8). The trumpet was used to call the people together. "Cymbals." (Compare 1 Chron. 25: 1).

11. "By course." "Sang one to another." Revised Version. That is responsively. (Ex. 15: 20, 21; Neh. 12: 24). "For he is good," etc. Revised Version. At first sight it would seem that these words are quoted from Psalm 136, but it is likely that such is not the case. The words are probably a liturgical response in common use. (Compare 1 Chron. 16: 34; 2 Chron. 5: 13; compare also Jer. 33: 10, 11).

12. "Chief of the fathers." "Heads of fathers' houses." Revised Version. "First house." Solomon's temple was destroyed in 587 or 586 B.C., fifty-one years before. There were some of the old men still living sixteen years later (520) in the time of Haggai (Hag. 2: 3). "Wept." This was doubtless because of their remembrance of the old days, the disasters which had befallen them and their people. It could hardly be in relation to the temple, for only the foundations were being laid, and these were larger than those of Solomon's temple; it is possible that they were almost hopeless as to the outcome of the effort to rebuild.

4: 1. "Adversaries." The mixed race known as the Samaritans. "Judah and Benjamin." The great majority of those who returned belonged to these tribes. "A temple unto the Lord, the God of Israel." Revised Version.

2. "Seek." Worship. Esarhaddon succeeded Sennacherib, and reigned over Assyria (Assur), 680-668 B.C. Their claim is that as they worshiped God they should be allowed to help in rebuilding the temple. For the character of the people see 2 Kings 17: 24-41. There is reason to think, however, that there were others who were more like the Jews, at least during the early days of the captivity (see Jer. 41: 5; also Lam. 5: 19-22). In the days of Hezekiah also, there were those who claimed to be Israelites. (See 2 Chron. 30: 1, 11, etc.)

3. "As King Cyrus," etc. The refusal was technically based upon the edict of Cyrus, which was addressed to the captives, and not to the dwellers in Palestine. Under the circumstances this appears to have been the best course to pursue. As to the apparent ungraciousness of the Jews, it may be said: (1) the offer was of doubtful sincerity; (2) acceptance might have forfeited the privileges given by Cyrus; (3) and most conclusive of all, those who offered help were semi-idolaters, and contact with such might have not only compromised the Jews, but also have seriously injured their own religious faith—they were not even to touch the unclean thing.

4. This and the following verse seem to justify the action of the Jews in declining aid.

5. "Counsellors," etc. They paid officials to make unfavorable reports. "Until the reign of Darius," 522 B.C. In 520 the building of the temple was again begun.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Build on a solid foundation. (1 Cor. 3: 13-17).
2. Keep clear of entangling alliances which may draw away from the truth.
3. 1 Cor. 3: 11.

Personal integrity is a first fruit of patriotism. For the sake of the nation all her sons should be true men.

Men every day measure Christ by themselves. How much better if we measured ourselves by the Christ.—Lew Wallace.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR NINTH MONTH 3d, 1899.

HOLDING UP THE PASTOR'S HANDS. WHAT CAN WE DO TO HELP OUR PASTOR?

Ex. 17: 1-13.

Second-day, Eighth mo. 28.—By our prayers. 2 Thess. 3: 1-5.
Third-day, Eighth mo. 29.—By our sympathy. Phil. 4: 10-20.
Fourth-day, Eighth mo. 30.—By our friendship. 1 Thess. 5: 12-18.
Fifth-day, Eighth mo. 31.—By withholding criticism. Num. 12: 1-16.
Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 1.—By doing church work. 1 Cor. 12: 4-11.
Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 2.—By avoiding contention. Phil. 1: 14-16; 1 Cor. 3: 1-9.

There are congregations smaller than that of the children of Israel, and much more modern, that have been known to manifest some of the same traits of character shown in the first seven verses of our lesson. These people thought Moses could do it all, and were quick to blame him with any lack that might occur. There is a danger among Friends of to-day in the adoption of the pastoral system that renders a warning not out of place in this connection. It is a fallacy to suppose that a pastoral system can remedy all, or even many of the deficiencies of our congregations. No pastor can do much with a congregation that is a "mixed multitude," longing for "the flesh pots of Egypt," except to be to them a faithful prophet of the Lord. He may possess the greatest ingenuity in devising new methods, and in setting everybody to "doing something," but it all amounts to little. A congregation less spiritual than the pastor will always limit his service. There should be no difference between pastor and people in the quality of their spirituality, zeal, and consecration to the service of God; the only difference is one of gifts. The latter part of the lesson is in bright contrast with the earlier verses. Joshua is seen as a warrior in active service. Aaron and he are not fighting, but they are helping just as much. A Christian Endeavorer is doing much who always holds up his pastor's hands by prayer, by expressed sympathy, by constant presence at all services, by loyal support in every way. An Endeavorer can do much by giving full confidence to his pastor. Among the most sacred things in life are the heart confidences between a pastor and his young people. Some of them have taught the writer the deepest lessons of his life, and when most drawn upon by others for help, he has received most help in return.

Endeavorers can help their pastor by hearty co-operation in such plans for work as may be adopted. Even when such plans do not wholly commend themselves to our own judgment, we can do our best to further them, and by such earnest effort be in a position to help to make better plans another time.

Draw as largely as you can upon your pastor for help in training for Christian work. All our meetings need more trained workers; there is a large field for Christian service outside of the ministry of the Word. There is personal work to be done, at once the most delicate, yet most important of all service. Learn how to do it Scripturally, tactfully, prayerfully. The prayer life of Endeavorers needs as careful training as any part of their service. Who of us does not know more than one good, earnest soul who learned how to pray in some stilted, unnatural tone, with certain set phrases, and for a certain length of time; all of which are wrong. Prayer is the most thoughtful service of the Christian life, and needs most instruction. You can help your pastor immeasurably by getting him to help you to understand the truth in regard to these, and many other phases of life.

If he is such a man as he ought to be, or such a woman—as the case may be—do not be afraid to state your difficulties to him freely. There is often a morbid sensitiveness which makes us think our case is so unlike every other one, that we are afraid to tell any one about it. As a matter of fact, it is just like thousands of others, and we shall find it out by confession to a man of wider experience and sympathy. We can help our pastor by helping others to know him, and to come in touch with him. The writer remembers with gratitude to this day, an old Mexican shoemaker, poverty stricken, afflicted with disease, who could not preach himself, but he rarely came to the preaching service without bringing some one with him to hear the Gospel.

If all our congregations could be induced to do two things: first, to do their utmost to bring others in reach of the Gospel; and, secondly, to constantly do personal work themselves for the salvation of souls, what a marvelous change would take place.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

The yearly meeting convened at 10 o'clock on Fifth-day, Eighth month 10th, 1899, and after some financial reports on evangelistic work and the income of the Tripp estate for education, the condition of the Society was brought under review by reading and answering the queries.

The report showed about the same state of affairs as usual—little increase in the total of membership, which is something over 5,000, with 51 ministers, making 100 members to each minister. There are 21 meetings without any minister. Some liquor drinking in all the quarters, except New Garden, was reported. Something like 1,800 members are reported as using, cultivating or dealing in tobacco. The need of preaching the Gospel to every creature came so upon the meeting that the subscription to the Evangelistic Committee was reopened, and more money was gotten than was subscribed the day before.

Afternoon.—Interesting remarks were made by Eunice Darden, teacher of the school at Augusta Academy, in Davie County, where James R. Jones, David Sampson and others had held series of meetings, resulting in the opening of a Friends' meeting and the school in a large and fairly well furnished building. There are forty odd members in the meeting. It is the only Friends' meeting in Davie County, and there is the only temperance meeting in the county.

The teaching in the school is supplemented by teaching the girls to keep house and look after domestic affairs. This domestic training is done by Susan S. Robeson, late of Philadelphia, a member of New Garden Monthly Meeting at Guilford College.

Sixth-day morning, Eighth month 8th, 1899.—Meeting on Ministry and Oversight. We were exhorted to individual faithfulness.

A visiting Friend gave a searching X-ray exposition of sin among professing Christians, even among those in high places, outwardly in the church, in which he showed that the Devil goes about not only as a roaring lion, but as a twining, insinuating serpent. We were earnestly entreated to give ourselves unreservedly to God.

Lorena Reynolds and Alice R. King were reappointed as clerk and assistant clerk for the ensuing year.

The report of the Blue Ridge Mission shows continued success after twelve years of interesting history. There are 120 pupils in the school. Samuel R. Pickett and wife are placed in charge of the school, to be aided by Lorena Reynolds.

The meeting, after considering the report, acceded to the recommendation of the committee and of David Sampson and appointed a new committee, putting Augusta Academy in the care of the Blue Ridge Committee, and appropriated $100 for the committee, and also took a subscription and a collection in addition for the same work.

Friends' Foreign Missionary Board made an interesting report. Annie V. Edgerton, believing herself called of the Lord to missionary work in India, was set apart by the Board and sailed in last First month, and reached her destination at Nowgong in safety and good health, in which condition she has remained ever since, and writes that she is as happy in her work as she ever was in her school at Brannon's school house in North Carolina. The report showed that over $900 has been raised for Annie Edgerton's sending out and support to date. The meeting entered into a subscription, which was animated and creditable, evincing self-denial and devotion to the missionary cause. The fact that Annie V. Edgerton has left us for this very distant, and, humanly speaking, difficult field, and that North Carolina Friends, in their limited financial condition, have been enabled to do this when it seemed they were doing all possible before for them to do, is marvelous. Though Annie Edgerton has been there so short a time, she endures the intense heat better than workers from further north who have been there longer.

Seventh-day morning, the 12th.—Meeting on Ministry and Oversight. The subject previously introduced by David E. Sampson and left to a committee was continued. It is said there is much neglect among ministers, elders and overseers in caring for the membership, so the committee recommended revising, and, if necessary, reorganizing of the ministry and eldership and the appointment of a committee to hold meetings of the members, elders and overseers in different places throughout the yearly meeting, made especially in the sections where meetings have been established more recently. The subject went forward to the yearly meeting at large that such a committee be appointed, and their necessary expenses be paid while in the prosecution of the service.

Seventh-day, 10 o'clock a.m.—The opening minute was read in joint session. The representatives report the apportionment of yearly stock to be raised in different quarters and the reappointment of W. T. Parker as treasurer.

The seventh report of the Orphanage makes a good showing. Forty-two have been received, and homes have been found for twenty-three, leaving nineteen still in the Orphanage. The report was accepted, and the recommendation that $300 be appropriated to the work next year was made, and a considerable addition was made by a subscription taken in the face of the meeting, amounting to $226.78. The Orphanage is the one thing in which all more nearly unite in giving than in anything else.

Afternoon.—Joint session. Report on education shows an increasing interest in secondary education. Six hundred pupils have attended these schools; 228 are Friends; $438 have been used to aid these schools; 100 Friends' children have been aided; 20 of these pupils are preparing for Guilford College.

This work is encouraged and continued. A most interesting and encouraging letter was read from Joseph Moore, alluding happily to his eight years' labor and love in this yearly meeting along the lines of religious and educational work, and urged the importance of Guilford College upon the prayerful attention of the yearly meeting. Loving appreciation of the letter and its writer was expressed, and it was promptly directed to be printed with the minutes.

Returning ministers were read for those visiting. An epistle of advice was read and directed published in the minutes. An epistle to other yearly meetings was read and directed to be signed and forwarded.

The reports of the different departments of Guilford College—the literary, farm, financial and all—showed enlargement and good improvement. Water works and other conveniences have been added to the buildings, and the girls in the cottages are much better provided for without any additional cost.

Mary M. Hollis made an appeal for funds for girls' aid, and succeeded in getting $186 subscribed.

The will of Tamar Hill bequeaths $1,000 for the education of girls of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, and it might be added here also $500 to aid the missionary work of North Carolina Yearly Meeting. Tamar Hill was a native of Randolph County, North Carolina.

Second-day morning.—Report of Committee on Indian Affairs shows the usual condition of affairs. Mary Woody, who had recently visited some of the Indians, reports that while many of the Indians are wealthy, they rent their landed possessions, still live in poverty and wretchedness, and some of them have used all due them for four years hence.

The Bible School report showed increase in total enrollment; three schools fewer; more adults have been enrolled; half the attenders at the schools are not Friends. The number of teachers not Friends has increased since last year. On First-day—yesterday morning—a meeting was held for more than an hour in the meeting house and addressed by Mead A. Kelsey, F. S. Blair, General Superintendent of Bible Schools, and Joseph Potts.

Second-day afternoon.—It is agreed and directed in the interest of good order that the railroads be requested not to run excursions or give special rates for First-day of yearly meeting hereafter.

A committee was appointed to consider and report their judgment next year on a plan for appropriations and subscriptions of money to the various objects and purposes of the yearly meeting.

Report of Committee for the Development of the Ministry showed progress in the work. The further recommendation is made that when persons show a call to public service for the Master the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight should recommend the person to the monthly meeting, which may recognize the gift, encourage the person to seek divine qualification and allow the exercise of his gift within the limits of the quarterly meeting, and if such person seem to develop sufficiently the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight should bring forward the name of the individual to the quarterly meeting, which may recognize the gift and set apart the Friend for service within the yearly meeting, and when further development is attained the matter should come to the yearly meeting, where such person should be recorded a minister of the gospel.

The subject of the ordinances being under consideration, it was agreed to minute a reaffirmation of our views as given in our Discipline.

Report on the suppression of the liquor traffic showed continued effort and progress on this subject, with less drinking among Friends. The report noted that the State president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union is Mary E. Cartland, one of the clerks of the yearly meeting. She is a minister of the gospel; and that other Friends have official and prominent places in the organizations, and it was reported that these women had been instrumental in securing the denial of liquor license in five or six counties of North Carolina by the Boards of County Commissioners.

James R. Jones, superintendent of this work, is continued in charge of a committee to prosecute the work next year.

The minutes of the Representative Meeting were read and approved. Joseph Potts, a minister, of Mt. Airy, N. C., is the clerk.

The yearly meeting's Society of Christian Endeavor held a very interesting meeting on Seventh-day evening and made a good report.

The yearly meeting sent a letter of Christian salutation and encouragement to what is styled "The Friends' Church in Havana," with a copy each of our Discipline and of this year's minutes of this yearly meeting.

There have been regular Gospel meetings each morning at 8.30 o'clock, and each evening at 8 o'clock, the whole week. In these meetings home and visiting ministers have handed forth the bread of life.

On First-day large audiences in forenoon and afternoon were engaged in worship and hearing the Gospel in the meeting house, under a tent, and at a stand in the grove.

There seemed to be a more blessed harmony in the yearly meeting this year than usual—a marked spirit of condescension and graceful, loving submission one to another, and a general and decided spirit to see Jesus only; a prayerful, earnest, wrestling desire to have our membership more thoroughly baptized of the Spirit, indoctrinated in the essentially distinguishing features of our branch of the church, toward the accomplishment of which very much is expected under the blessing of God by the committee set apart to labor throughout the yearly meeting.

The meeting closed late in the afternoon in much love and Divine overshadowing.

News from the Field.

Cordoba, Argentine Republic, S. A., Seventh month 10th, 1899.
Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Dear Friend:—There are eight of us here, looking toward Bolivia, but the revolution in that republic has kept us back, and since the overthrow of the government army the armed bands of Indians have been robbing and murdering all foreigners in many places, so life has been very unsafe and still is, though I made one attempt to go and a snowstorm blockaded the pass in the mountain and stopped me. Then I learned that my wife was taken down with lung fever on Third month 15th, and so low that life was despaired of for two weeks; then she rallied a little so she could sit up a part of the time, and there was hope for a return to strength; but a late letter from my children—Sixth month 6th—John H. and Mattie M. Hadley, informs me that she is still lingering and they fear she is not going to regain her health, so I have decided to return to the United States as soon as I can, for a time at least. My interest in this dark south land has not abated in the least, but rather increased, so I will leave Cordoba on the 18th inst. and try to return if possible in three months.

I think of trying to take the Royal Mail Steamer that sails on the 21st and intercepts the Hatton, at Rio de Janeiro, of the Lamport and Holt Line, for New York, that sails about Seventh month 27th to Eighth month 2d.

WILLIAM MARSHALL.

DOWN IN GEORGIA.

It has been a year of scarcity down South this year. The cold killed our fruits, except grapes and apples, and the drouth ruined a majority of our early gardens, but the summer ("latter") rains set in, and many corn-fields are an average yield and the cotton is white with bloom—white to-day to turn pink on the morrow. But speaking of the blossoms: No one has seen the precious morning glory at its best unless he has been South in mid-summer. It shades our piazza, covers the garden wall, hides the storm-wrecked cedar stumps. It is in the corn, it is in the cotton, it clammers over the weeds and grass in field and lane—the sweetest, prettiest, reddest, pinkest, most royal purple of any flower that eye ever beheld. "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." True, it vanishes with the morning dew, but it is here to greet one on the following morning—so beautiful and sweet that it is strange that we of the Southland are still so sinful, so very much "lower than the angels." C. S.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting, Mich., was held Eighth month 5th and 6th, 1899. Visiting ministers present were Charles L. Jessup and his wife, Hannah Pratt Jessup, of Western Yearly Meeting.

On Seventh-day morning Charles Jessup read our Saviour's prayer in the 17th chapter of John's Gospel, and preached from the last clause of the 21st verse: "That the world may believe that thou hast sent me," urging the church to live so as to prove to the world the reality of the Christian religion, and that our Christ was truly the sent of the Father.

On First-day morning Hannah P. Jessup preached to the unsaved and to those who had shallow experience as Christians, illustrating in a forcible manner the incongruity of living on in uncertainty as to whether we are the Lord's or not.

She was followed by her husband from the words, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and a powerful plea was made for the Bible and our holy Christian religion. In the afternoon he gave his lecture entitled, "Quakers, Slavery and Temperance," which was very interesting and instructive.

MARY C. WOOD.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Orlando Tomlinson, pastor of Friends' church at Smithfield, O., closed a very successful tent meeting at one of the missions of the First Friends' Church, Cleveland, O. Our brother preached the Word in the power and demonstration of the Spirit, and souls were saved and believers strengthened. He was assisted by Arthur Chilson and others.

Alum Creek Quarterly Meeting, held Eighth month 5th and 6th, report a very precious time. The Quarterly Meeting Christian Endeavor appointed George Weir, of Berlinville, Quarterly Meeting Christian Endeavor President.

ARTHUR CHILSON.

Richwood, Ohio.—Charles D. W. Hiatt and Robert L. Carter, of Fairmount, Ind., held a very successful tent meeting at this place. The Gospel was preached with clearness and power. Charles D. W. Hiatt came here from Byhalia, O., where he had a good meeting with much success, assisted by the pastor of the Friends' Church.

EZRA PEARSON.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Lynnville, Iowa.—Lynn Grove Quarterly Meeting was held at Lynnville, Jasper County, Iowa, Eighth month 12th and 13th. The new house not being completed the meetings were held in the beautiful grove surrounding the building. Large audiences listened to the preaching of the Gospel on First-day morning, afternoon and evening. Zenas L. Martin, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was with us, and preached on Seventh-day, and Henry C. Pemberton and wife throughout all the sessions. The Endeavorers held their Union rally on Seventh-day evening. We truly feel that Lynn Grove Quarterly Meeting is on the upgrade in spiritual as well as other things. We thank God for the clear, plain, forcible truth declared.

Through the efforts of E. Howard Brown, pastor of Lynnville Meeting, a new meeting house, valued at $2,000, is just about completed. Although the meeting desires that Howard Brown remain with them another year, he and his wife, Ruth E. Brown, will enter the evangelistic work this fall. Josiah Hockett was also granted a minute for evangelistic work in Michigan and Wisconsin. B. G. Nevill, who is located at Kellogg, is closing up his second year's work. Robert Lincoln, who has been located at Oak Grove Meeting, is talking of taking pastoral work in other fields.

A two-weeks' tabernacle meeting was held at Ackworth, Iowa, conducted by Edwin Loft, of New Sharon, assisted by James B. Pickard, of Pleasant Plain. The weather was fine all the time, and God wonderfully blessed the preaching of His Word. Thirty souls came to the Lord during the two-weeks' meeting. Eight were converted, seven renewed, fifteen sanctified, and the whole country stirred, for which we praise the Lord.

EDWIN LOFT.

Springdale Quarterly Meeting, held at Springdale, Iowa, from Eighth month 4th to 6th, was attended by David Tatum, of Denver, and Oliver M. Frazer and wife, of North Loop Valley, Neb. The Gospel labors of all of them were edifying and well received. A contribution of six dollars was taken for missionary work in Cuba, provided there is an opening for it in six months, and if not, the fund is to go into the Church Extension Fund of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

During the Quarterly Meeting the Christian Endeavor Society raised seven dollars for missionary work in Jamaica. The report of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society showed faithful and progressive work.

David Tatum gave interesting and instructive addresses on temperance at Springdale and West Branch. He has lectured on temperance and preached the Gospel in every State and Territory, except Alaska, in the United States, and also in the Dominion of Canada, and in England and Ireland. One of the many whom the Lord has blessed during his twenty-nine years of preaching and lecturing was D. B. Updegraff, who was led into the experience of sanctification by David Tatum.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

On the 6th of Eighth month a very interesting meeting was held in the ancient Friends' meeting house in Uxbridge, Mass. This house is of brick, built in 1770, and is often visited by people who are interested in the relics of early days.

The Preparative Meeting was laid down many years ago, but occasional meetings are held during the year. On the 6th a meeting was held by a large number of Christian Endeavorers, members coming from Woonsocket and Slatersville, R. I., and Blackstone, Mass. There were also a great number in attendance from Uxbridge village, which is two and a half miles from the meeting house, the latter being in the southern part of the town.

The meeting was gathered by the invitation of Leander Fisher, a Friend of Woonsocket Meeting. He is the president of nine Christian Endeavor Societies. The 16th chapter of Acts was read, and Brother Fisher called our attention to the three kinds of conversions described in that chapter. First, that of Lydia, which was a prayer meeting conversion. Then the case of the girl possessed by a spirit of divination, from whom the evil spirit was driven out by a rebuke. Lastly, the jailer and his household were converted by the prayer and praise of Paul and Silas at midnight, followed by the earthquake.

Interesting testimonies followed, and there were witnesses to the soul-saving influences of the prayer meeting and the faithful rebuke.

Many more would doubtless have spoken could we have had more time. May the Lord bless all who attended and cheered our hearts by their presence and efforts.

ADELINE L. F. DANIELS.

Smithfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Bolton, Mass., Fifth-day, Eighth month 10th. The day before the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight was held in the afternoon, and in the evening the Bible School Conference. "Uncle" Nathan Douglas, of Maine, and Charles H. Jones, of Amesbury, Mass., were in attendance. The latter is our Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Gospel Work. He remarked that it was under the Gospel ministry of Nathan Douglas that he first yielded himself to be a preacher of the Gospel, and at this time it was pleasant to sit beside him, engaged in the same service.

The day of Quarterly Meeting was exceedingly rainy, yet there was a good attendance, with many young people and babies present, which is always a marked feature of Bolton Quarterly Meeting, and one to be commended.

After the Gospel meeting Friends adjourned to a nearby home, where a bountiful dinner was served to all; then back to the meeting house for business meeting, which was small, but very interesting.

A Gospel committee for the Quarterly Meeting was appointed to unite with the Yearly Meeting Gospel Committee, and other necessary business transacted.

We had helpful advice from Nathan Douglas, who is nearly eighty-eight years of age, and Charles H. Jones, and the meeting closed in harmony.

We felt glad to have been there in spite of the wet day. We were kindly cared for. Umbrellas and wraps were in great demand, likewise all vehicles to ride in.

Anything from a barge to a milk-wagon was very acceptable to keep us out of the rain.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Marion, Ind.—We have a flourishing meeting at the First Church, with a large Sabbath school and a deeply spiritual Christian Endeavor. All lines of church work are being carried forward with the help of God in the light of the Holy Spirit.

During the past two years more than sixty members have been received into the church, and about twenty-five active members in the Christian Endeavor. But the best of all, we have a strong working force of young and middle-aged persons whose lives are dedicated to the Master's service, and who are filled with the Holy Spirit. A few weeks ago at our meeting on First-day night these consecrated workers led a lost soul back to Christ, one who had been wandering away from the fold for a number of years. Such is our work. We are seeking the lost ones all the year round.

Oscar Moon and Mary A. Overman, both of them members of our Meeting and Christian Endeavor, were united in marriage at the First Friends' Church, Marion, Ind., Eighth month 10th, by the Friends' ceremony. It was such a novel sight in this vicinity that people came from miles around to witness the ceremony. There had not been a wedding in this Quarterly Meeting for more than twenty years in which this simple, impressive ceremony had been used. The large house was packed and all standing room taken several minutes before time for the meeting to begin. The ceremony took place at the regular mid-week meeting.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Grand River Quarterly Meeting.—This Quarterly Meeting, embracing nearly all the mission stations under the care of the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs, and Lowell Monthly Meeting in Southeast Kansas, was held on the 4th and 5th instants at Lowell, Kan. The principal business of the meeting was the preparation of the annual reports for the coming Yearly Meeting. Two Monthly Meetings in Oklahoma presented a request for the establishment of a new Quarterly Meeting, to be composed of the meetings in the eastern part of that Territory. The meeting approved of the request, and passed it on to the Yearly Meeting, which will probably grant it. This will leave our membership more compact, and two or three hundred less in number.

John B. Bishop, one of the missionaries, who has been working on Pryor Creek among the Cherokees for several years, has during the past year emigrated, I think, to Oregon, and taken most of the members of his mission with him. The number of members reported in 1896 was: Indians, 51; whites, 52; total, 103. Now only 6 members are reported as left, the care of whom has been turned over by the Executive Indian Committee to this Quarterly Meeting. To partially account for an exodus of this kind it is only necessary to remember that the whites in this Territory are only renters on the Indian lands, and are ready at any time to change their location when anything seemingly better is presented.

The Quarterly Meeting was favored with the company of Lydia Chase, from Kansas City, and also of Minnie Bassett, evangelist, and her companion, Nellie Thomas, from Cleveland, Ohio. The "labors of love" of these dear friends added much to the interest of the meeting. Minnie Bassett's ministry, "quick and powerful," was mainly directed to inducing Christians to seek a closer walk with God, to avail themselves to the fullest extent of their privileges in the Gospel, to dwell in the serene atmosphere of a higher life.

The Board of Directors of the Lowell Academy made an interesting report. The school has been under the management of Charles E. Cosand and wife the past year, with two or three assistants. The total enrollment was reported at 141 and the net enrollment at 75. Quite a number of young people in the Territories are very desirous of attending the Academy, but are not able for the lack of means. This is certainly a needy field, and deserves the active sympathy of those who have more of the Lord's money in their hands than they need for their own support.

Charles C. Haworth, son of Wm. Perry Haworth, the worthy missionary among the Ottawas, a recent graduate of Penn College, has been employed as Principal of the Academy for the next year. He has employed as his first assistant Florence Hanson, the daughter of our well-known minister of Iowa, Frederic Hanson, now on a visit to his native land Norway. She is also a graduate of Penn College. Other teachers will be employed as needed. The Board feel that with these efficient teachers, who have had considerable experience in schools for secondary instruction, the prospect for thorough work is very favorable.

I believe that there were no Indian members present at the Quarterly Meeting this time.

WM. B. MORGAN.

Married.

ONG—COOKSTON.—At the residence of John Hussey, Columbus, Ohio, Joseph P. Ong and Sarah A. Cookston, on Sixth month 21st, 1899.

KIRK—MEYERS.—At Denver, Colorado, Seventh month 29th, 1899, Mahlon Z. Kirk to Linnie K. Meyers. Their home will be University Park, Denver, Col.

Died.

CATT.—Richard A. Catt, died at the home of his brother, south of Greenfield, Eighth month 3d, 1899. He said he was ready to go, and that God had forgiven him all his sins. He was only twenty years old. A mother and three brothers had gone before.

COBBS.—At his home near Hutton Valley, Mo., Seventh month 14th, Timothy Cobbs, a beloved brother and worker for Christ. The deceased was past 72 years of age, and a birthright member of Friends' church. For several years he has been interested in home mission work in Missouri. His remains were brought back to New Sharon, Iowa, his old home, for interment, where a large and impressive funeral service was held on the 18th.

MORRIS.—Joseph Morris, of Indianapolis, aged 86 years, died Seventh month 22d, 1899. He was born in North Carolina, Ninth month 22d, 1813. Most of his life was spent in and near Indianapolis. He served his yearly meeting as treasurer very acceptably for a number of years. His home was always open to the servants of the Lord who were needing his hospitality. He gave full assurance that the Lord was with him in the hour of death.

NICHOLSON.—At Pasadena, Cal., on the 11th of Seventh month, 1899, Sarah A. Nicholson, wife of Dr. William Nicholson, in her 81st year. She had for many years been an invalid, and for many months almost helpless and scarcely able to speak so as to be understood. She had been the faithful wife and helper of her husband during his years of fruitful service, and in death they were not long divided.

PAINTER.—At Pasadena, Cal., on the 20th of Seventh month, 1899, Edith Painter, aged 77 years, 11 months and 15 days. Her life was a life of faithfulness in home and church. After many months of helplessness she passed quietly out from her suffering, we doubt not to a sure reward.

PIDGEEON.—Charles Pidgeon died at the home of his son, in Greene County, Ohio, in his 94th year. He had lived a strong and consistent Christian life.

POTTER.—Fifth month 11th, 1899, Martha Potter, aged 82 years. This beloved Friend was a member of Batavia meeting in New York Yearly Meeting. For several years feeble health prevented her from attending meetings, yet she retained a faithful interest in the work of the church, and even after the mental faculties were somewhat clouded by disease she loved the word of prayer and praise, and her Saviour's name was precious to her.

News and Events.

Another endeavor to seek the North Pole has been crowned with failure. On the 17th the Wellman expedition, led by Walter Wellman, arrived at Tromsø, Norway, on the steamer Capella, after being out since June, 1898. Intense hardships were endured by the party while in the polar region, even though precautions were taken to meet every contingency likely to arise. Wellman himself had his leg severely injured and is probably crippled for life. One member of the expedition died. During an ice-quake many dogs were crushed to death, and sledges destroyed, the members of the expedition barely escaping with their lives. While failing in the main object of the exploration, much valuable information was gained. New lands were discovered north of Freedom Island, the exploration of Franz Josef Land accomplished, and other exceedingly valuable work performed. There is, in fact, much more in Arctic exploration than merely seeking the North Pole.

The administration is negotiating a treaty with the Mohamadan Sultan of the Sulu archipelago in the Philippine group. The treaty or agreement with this nominal subject of the United States is said to be based upon the treaty formerly subsisting between Spain and the Sultan, by which the United States guarantees absolute non-interference with the internal affairs of the Sulus, the customs of the people, or with their religion. Certain points are to be occupied as military posts, and the Sultan is to fly the American flag in token of American sovereignty. He will receive a pension, it is said, of $2,400 a year from this government, which, it is hoped, will help to preserve his loyalty to this country. Slavery is practiced in the islands, and the United States has simply requested that slaves be given the right to buy their freedom. Thus we shall have the anomalous condition of seeing the flag float over a slave-ridden people. The Moslems would undoubtedly be a difficult people to coerce, but it does seem that the compromise which is being effected, if reports be true, is a highly questionable step. Mindanao, another and much larger island, is also populated by Mussulmen.

The death of the President of San Domingo was the signal for revolt. President Figuero, who is now chief executive, is threatened in his tenure of office by a party of discontented people who are urging the forcible seating as President of Juan Isidro Jimenez, an adventurer and agitator. In a battle, last week, which amounted almost to a massacre, the insurgents are reported to have been completely routed by the government forces. This was a damaging blow to the rebels, but tranquility is not yet assured, since much dissatisfaction still exists against the government. It is thought that the arrival of Jimenez, who has been absent, will renew the insurrection with increased bloodshed. Jimenez was arrested on board a steamer at Cienfuegos the latter part of last week by a United States officer, but was later released. He was charged with disregarding our neutrality laws.

The world was deeply stirred and shocked last week when the news was received of an attempt to assassinate Maitre Labori, the brilliant counsel of Dreyfus. While not mortally wounded, the shot, which took effect in Labori's back, has kept him from the trial during a most important part of the proceedings. The attack was a most dastardly one, and there is considerable conjecture that it was instigated by Dreyfus' enemies. He is improving, and it is now hoped that he can soon rejoin his fellow counsel, Demange, who has been conducting Dreyfus' defence in Labori's absence. The conviction appears to be growing that Dreyfus will not be acquitted. No solid testimony has been offered against the prisoner, but several members of the court martial, including Jouaust, the presiding judge, are almost openly unfriendly to Dreyfus, and they are ready listeners to the empty forensic displays of such men as Mercier, Bois-deffre, and others, bitter enemies of the accused. Picquart's testimony, last week, strengthened the position of Dreyfus, and at almost every point the defence has the advantage, from the standpoint at least of outsiders, but in France prejudice and a false honor rule the majority of Frenchmen, and they are not open to reason.

France is undoubtedly resting uneasily on a volcano of discord, which threatens at any moment to burst and overwhelm the republic with internecine strife. Week before last over twenty anti-Semites, including M. Paul Deroulede, were arrested on a charge of inciting a plot to overthrow the republic. M. Guérin, president of the anti-Semite league, escaped arrest and barricaded himself in his home. He is still there, closely watched by the police, who hesitate to force an arrest, desiring to avoid bloodshed. Guérin has threatened to pour burning oil on any one who attempts to arrest him. Wild anarchistic outbreaks, participated in, unfortunately, by Dreyfus sympathizers, took place on the 20th. Mob violence prevailed in some quarters, a church was pillaged, and over three hundred persons injured. One hundred and fifty arrests were made.

VATICAN AND QUIRINAL.

A generation ago schoolboys used to find in the centre of the map of Italy a section entitled "States of the Church." Since 1870, when the Italian troops marched into Rome and took possession of it as the national capital, this title of the pope's temporal dominion has disappeared from the atlas; but the pope has not renounced his claim to be the rightful sovereign of the mediæval States of the Church.

When the Italian kingdoms and principalities were united by Cavour's diplomacy, King Victor Emanuel's campaigns and Garibaldi's valor, Rome was the only possible national capital. Cavour decreed that there should be a free church in a free state, and the Italian Parliament has resolutely refused to recognize the rights of temporal sovereignty once exercised by the popes. Rome in the course of thirty years has doubled its population and become one of the great capitals of Europe.

The Vatican has been helpless in this conflict with the state. Its Swiss guard could not offer resistance to the national army, but could only perform police duty at the Vatican and the Lateran—where the old-time papal privileges are reserved by law. The Vatican, however, has clung tenaciously to the traditions of its ancient rights, and refused to make any compromise with the state. Pious IX. and Leo XIII. have taken the same position on this question, and charged the state with usurping what once belonged to the Latin Church exclusively.

This is a brief statement of what is known in Italy as the conflict between church and state. It is a bitter quarrel between the Vatican and the Quirinal, and there is no immediate prospect of any settlement of the questions at issue.

If the Vatican were willing to be reconciled with the Quirinal, its position would be altered in Europe and its resources of power would be greatly diminished. If peace were made, the pope would be regarded at the Austrian, German and other courts as the chaplain of the king of Italy.—"Youth's Companion."

COOK CAN'T SPOIL.

Grape-Nuts Need No Cooking and the Flavor is Assured.

People want food that has a palatable, toothsome taste, and one that will recall a pleasant taste whenever the name is mentioned. That feature is a strong one in Grape-Nuts, the new breakfast food, made by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

No cooking is required, hence the taste is not dependent upon the cook, but is just what the makers intended it to be.

It is served cold and dry with a bit of rich cream in part of the saucer.

If one wants a hot dish, a little hot milk can be poured over some Grape-Nuts and there you are—a most fetching dish, furnishing the high nutritive value of grape-sugar.

BETWEEN THE LIGHTS.

A little pause in life while daylight lingers
Between the sunset and the pale moon-rise,

When daily labor slips from weary fingers,
And soft gray shadows veil the aching eyes.

Old perfumes wander back from fields of clover,
Seen in the light of suns that long have set;

Beloved ones whose earthly toil is over
Draw near, as if they lived among us yet.

Old voices call me through the dusk returning;
I hear the echoes of departed feet;

And then I ask, with vain and troubled yearning,
What is the charm that makes old things so sweet?

Must the old joys be evermore withholden?
Even their memories keep me pure and true;

And yet from out Jerusalem the golden God speaketh, saying, "I make all things new."

"Father," I cry, "the old must still be nearer:
Stifle my love, or give me back the past!

Give me the fair old earth, whose paths are dearer Than all Thy shining streets and mansions vast."

Peace, peace! the Lord of earth and heaven knoweth
The human soul in all its heat and strife;

Out of His throne no stream of Lethe floweth,
But the dear river of eternal life.

He giveth life, aye, life in all its sweetness;
Old loves, old sunny scenes will He restore;

Only the curse of sin and incompleteness
Shall taint thine earth and vex thine heart no more.

Serve Him in daily work and earnest living,
And faith shall lift thee to His sunlit heights;

Then shall a psalm of gladness and thanksgiving
Fill the calm hour that comes between the lights.

—Sarah Doudney.

A HAND-CLASP.

Jesus "took him by the hand!" This was one of the wonderful secrets of the Redeemer's power over human hearts. Touch—a personal touch, symbol of heart sympathy—is a key that unlocks many an imprisoned life. A sweet example of it was seen in the Earl of Shaftesbury as he went on his ministry of love among London criminals. One who was reformed dated his uplift to his intercourse with the earl.

"What did he say to you?" asked one.
"Oh, it was not so much what he said as what he did. He took my hand and said, 'Jack, we'll make a man of you yet.' It was the touch that did it."

Daniel Webster went from his country home to Boston to study law. He entered without invitation the office of Christopher Gore, then at the head of the Massachusetts bar. He was regarded as an intruder and nobody paid him any attention. One day Rufus King saw the solitary student, and shook him warmly by the hand and said:

"I knew your father well. Be studious, and you will win. If you want any assistance or advice, come to me."

Webster said when he was sixty years old that he still felt the warm pressure of that hand.

When Peter took the lame man "by the right hand and lifted him up," "immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength. And he, leaping up, stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God." Acts 3: 7, 8.

It is an easy thing to take a man by the hand, and if the hand has a heart behind it, and the clasp is of heart as well as hand, what wonder if by it men are uplifted and helped and saved?

Professor Dewar, whose recent success in liquefying hydrogen astonishes the world, expects that it will produce remarkable results. A company has been formed, with a capital of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to ascertain whether steel can be cast in a vacuum. If the plan is successful the air bubbles that now cause flaws and weakness will not occur, and a metal such as the world has never seen, and which may revolutionize the steel trade, will result. Professor Dewar is sanguine, and is preparing tests for the practicability of the scheme.—"The Christian Advocate."

IN POMPEII.

The world began to advertise early in its civilized history, and disinterred Pompeii among its ashes gives many examples. The existence and locality of a school was denoted by a pleasing sign representing a boy undergoing a thrashing, a goat stood for the sign of a dairy, and a millstone or sheaf of wheat for that of a baker. The symbols were made of stone or terra cotta set in plasters at the sides of the buildings, and more explicit announcements were given in tablets affixed to pillars. In Rome the physician proclaimed himself by putting a cupping glass outside his door, the poulterer by a coop of owls and the tavern-keeper by a bush, which, from its omission by certain self-sufficient vintners, gave existence to the proverb, "Good wine needs no bush."—"Printer's Ink."

"THE AMERICAN FRIEND" has a list of readers that are appreciated by the best advertisers in the country. During recent months over one hundred and forty successful firms have used our columns. We shall be glad to communicate with any of our readers who have anything to advertise, and will furnish rate card and descriptive pamphlet on application.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch Street, PHILADELPHIA.

Cleveland Bible Training School.

CONDUCTED BY

J. Walter Malone and Emma B. Malone.

This institution was not designed to be, nor does it aspire to be, a theological seminary. Such a purpose would be contrary to the spirit of Quakerism. It is intended to meet the needs of a large and increasing class of persons who are clearly called to Christian work, and who feel the need of a more thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, of acquaintance with the various forms of soul-saving effort, and of association with experienced workers.

The School has enthusiastic classes in Consecutive Bible Study and in Scripture Doctrine. It finds for its students abundant opportunities for service in connection with the Friends' Missions, the city rescue missions, visiting the sick and the needy, conducting children's meetings, mothers' meetings, Bible classes, etc.

It has classes in English and in Elocution for the cultivation of proper expression.
Also, classes in Ancient History, Church History, and Bible Geography; and short courses in Psychology, Ethics, and Christian Evidences.

It keeps constantly in view, as necessary for effectual service:

I. A clean, pure, fully-justified life. II. Complete consecration to God, including both submission and dedication. III. The baptism with the Holy Spirit for perfection of character and service, and for the proper understanding of the Scriptures. IV. An ever widening and deepening knowledge of the Scriptures. V. Earnest Desire and effort for the salvation of others.

One thought pervades the entire work, viz.: That it is for God, and that His own Spirit must direct it.

The expense of attendance, including tuition, board, washing, heat, and light, is $3.00 per week, or $100 for the school year.

Probably the longest beard in the world is that of a metal worker at Vandene, near Nievre, France. The man is seventy-four years old, and in perfect health. When fourteen years old, he had a beard six inches long. It grew from year to year, and now his hirsute attachment when unrolled has reached the respectable length of ten feet and ten inches. When this man goes out walking he carries his beard rolled up in a big skein under his arm, as the old Roman senators carried their togas.
In winter time he winds his beard several times around the neck, using it as a boa.
Since the man is rather small in size, measuring but five feet three inches, the beard is more than twice the man's height.

SUSPICIOUSLY SOOTHING.

The Very Rev. A. K. H. Boyd, recently deceased, in his book, "Last Years at St.
Andrews," tells the following amusing little stories. Referring to a letter from an exile in this country, telling how its writer went to his room each Sunday morning and read aloud one of Doctor Boyd's sermons, the reverend gentleman said, as one greatly needing help, he was thankful if it helped him, but he recalled what a dear old sufferer in his Edinburgh congregation told him with the kindest intention:

"When I can't sleep at night," said she,
"I say to my husband, 'Oh, read me one of my dear minister's sermons!' And he has not read five minutes when I am sound asleep!"

The "dear minister" said, of course, that he was delighted to hear it, although it was not wholly for that purpose the sermons were published.

Dr. Lindsay Alexander of Edinburgh had a similar compliment paid him, Doctor Boyd goes on to relate. He went to visit a restless sufferer, a good woman, and her friends asked him to read a chapter of the Bible to her. This he proceeded to do. In a few minutes she was sound asleep.

"Ah," said one of her friends, "see the soothing power of the Word!"—"Youth's Companion."

GREEN PASTURES.

And is there not in every day—
Earth's beauty and sweet love's caress,
In health, in books, in childhood's play—
More than enough for happiness?

And, though our petty plans fall through,
All noble deeds that have been done,
All noble deeds that we may do,
Shall help the triumph to be won.

And if, in nobleness of heart,
We trust and labor in earth's strife,
That grand life, of which we are part,
Shall keep us to eternal life.

Here, then, whatever is gained or lost,
Is strong assurance of the best;
For all who struggle, tempest-tost,
E'en in the tempest there is rest.

Our Shepherd watches where we lie;
He guards us if we wake or sleep;
Green pastures spread before our eye;
Still waters in the sunshine sleep.

We thought the century question had run its course. But it seems to be popping up again; at least a correspondent writes us inquiring if the present century does not end on December 31st next. As to which we beg to commend to the consideration of all concerned the fact that ever since and before Moses learned the higher mathematics at Heliopolis University a century has constituted one hundred years, and that consequently a new century has not begun until the old century of one hundred years has run its full course. Keeping that in mind, the answer to the century question becomes one of nursery mathematics. In other words, does December next 31st mark the completion of one hundred, or of only ninety-nine years?—"Christian Work."

"Christian Work" quotes very pertinently from the "Lutheran Observer," and comments as follows: "The 'Lutheran Observer' prints the names of a number of 'cheap' religious papers which have died and are now sleeping in the religious newspaper cemetery. It also mentions a contemporary that reduced its regular price in the hope of largely increasing the number of its subscribers, but the result did not meet expectations, and it recently announced that the reduction was a mistake, and it will doubtless return to its former price. If anyone wants a little fun in the shape of a new experience, let him try starting a 'cheap' religious newspaper, and pay all printing expenses, salaries of editors, paper bills, and so on through the year. He will be richer in experience when the year is out, but his bank account—well, the least said of that the better."

THE SAPPHIRE COUNTRY.

The eulogies of the mountain country of western North Carolina, poetically known as "The Land of the Sky," are never burdened with over-praise for those who know the region. They are ever ready to declare that nowhere else are to be found such wide-sweeping and beautiful mountain scenery, so many clear and picturesque streams, waterfalls and lakes, with air so light and pure that breathing seems a new-found joy; and over all a canopy of stabain blue. The sunny southern slopes and table-lands of this region, planned by nature for man's health and joy, roll three thousand feet above the sea, overshadowed by the loftiest peak east of the Rockies. But while Asheville and other widely-known resorts of "The Land of the Sky" attract multitudes of visitors, other haunts as entrancing for sky and air and scenery have been accessible only to the pilgrim who sought them out in a fleeting visit. One of the most charming of these regions which awaited the coming of hotel accommodations and other creature comforts of a tarrying-place is the Fairfield and Sapphire Lake country, twin jewels in an emerald setting, unique for beauty even in this favored Southland. Set in the midst of the Blue Ridge Mountains, towering cliffs rise a thousand feet from the lakes, and cascades shimmer like bridal veils from the tablelands. The rare charm of it all has attracted investment, and now entertainment is offered by the Sapphire Inn, on the lake; Mountain Lodge, on the summit of Mount Toxaway; and a superb new hotel, Fairfield Inn, on Lake Fairfield. The variety of surroundings and entertainment is very notable. Sapphire Inn, on the lake, with spacious grounds, offers unsurpassed fishing, boating and driving. Then high on the mountain summit rests the Lodge, reached over a fine road, winding upwards for nearly four miles. From this isolated peak the view is the most extensive and magnificent in the entire Alleghany chain, and the grandeur of living here in the sky cannot be described. Fairfield Inn nestles on the shore of its matchless lake, and is the largest of these resorts.

The hotel is like a great Manor house, on an estate of twenty-six thousand acres, which contain twenty-five miles of river and brook fishing, carefully stocked and preserved. Large farms in the highest cultivation and numerous apple and peach orchards, supply the house, and on the spreading pasture lands graze flocks of sheep and herds of choicely bred dairy cattle. Through this great estate many miles of road have been built and graded, and continued around the lakes through scenery of wonderful beauty, by half a hundred water-falls, of from fifty to three hundred and seventy-five feet in height. The inn, itself, is rich in the modern comforts and luxuries which contribute to the sum total of living, with a fine water supply, electric lights, spacious porches and rooms, boating, bathing, and the drives and shady walks about the shining lake. The management of this group of hotels is notably satisfactory in every way, and the over-worked word "ideal" seems to apply to man's handiwork in this cloudland. A catalogue of the attractions of this mountain paradise would be a record of charms which speak far more alluringly for themselves. The solemn forest primeval is bright with wonders for the forester and botanist, and in this natural sanitarium, the rest and health and pleasure seeker thanks heaven for the joy of living, and is content. The hay fever victim finds the ozone-laden and dry air a balm and a cure, and the average temperature at Sapphire for the summers of the last four years has been only sixty-nine degrees. The water is as pure as the air. Visitors from the north and east reach Sapphire, coming from Asheville and Hendersonville, N. C., to Brevard. From the south and southwest, the route is via Spartanburg, S. C., and Hendersonville to Brevard. The drive from Brevard or Walhalla over splendid roads is an enjoyable curtain raiser to the beauties of the Sapphire country. More detailed information will be furnished by addressing "Manager of Hotels," Sapphire, N. C. This resort region is one of the jeweled links in the chain connected with the North and South by the Southern Railway, the route to "The Land of the Sky." The Sapphire country, with its manifold and long-hidden charms, is reached with the limit of comfort and speed over this great system.

THE RELIGIOUS CONDITION IN COUNTRY DISTRICTS.

WE reprint this week, from the Boston Transcript, part of an article by George W. Cooke, on the question, "Is Religion on the Decrease in New Hampshire?" It is written from Dublin, N. H., where the author, a well-known thinker and writer, is spending the summer. What he says of the situation in this section of New Hampshire is in a measure true of most country districts of New England, and probably to a large extent throughout the United States. It should be thoughtfully read, for hardly any subject more properly demands our attention. Think what we may of foreign missionary work, it is a solemn and serious fact that the Christian Church to-day—in this year 1899—is failing to reach, to minister to and to Christianize the rural communities of our own country. There is a pitiful indifference toward religion on the part of rural people. It is not only "Sunday golf-players" who go to no church on the Sabbath, but all classes of our citizens are at fault in this respect.

The present writer is familiar with a number of typical communities in New England, New York State and Pennsylvania, and in these communities the number of those who are unconcerned about spiritual things is very great, and the company of those who "follow this way," as the early Christians called their new religion, is sadly small. The little congregations in the different places of worship have a veritable struggle to live, and the minister's small salary comes very hard. The non-religious part of the community does not antagonize the Christian part, but it goes its own way and concludes that there is very little in Christianity any way.

George W. Cooke concludes that one of the main causes of this situation is to be found in denominationalism, sectarianism. The few Christians are divided up into weak groups and parties, who work for their own peculiar views and interests instead of uniting and working as a whole for the transformation of the community. There is much truth in what he says, and there can be no doubt that extreme denominationalism has almost destroyed the religious life in some communities. It makes each single congregation too weak of itself to wield much influence, and it draws a sharp line which divides its own set or sect from the rest of the neighborhood, and instead of exhibiting the great idea of Christian brotherhood, it trims and pares religion down to a narrow thing, meant only for a chosen few, and it is not surprising that this narrow, and often bitter, sectarian religion is not attractive to the community at large. There isn't enough Christ in it to draw men.

But sectarianism is by no means the only, or even, perhaps, the main, reason for the slight power of the churches over the communities of which we are speaking. The real trouble is that the message of the churches is not VITAL enough, the Christians themselves of the community are not Christlike enough, to compel the indifferent to consider the value and the power of the things of the Spirit. The non-Christians see little or nothing in the Christianity about them which makes it desirable or attractive to them.

Go into a community, on the other hand, where the churches have a vital message, and where their members are full of present and expectant faith, and you will find that the whole neighborhood is leavened by such churches. The most irreligious man in the place is forced to believe that there is a power in religion which he himself has not.

Then, too, it seems to us that another reason for the weak hold the churches have upon such communities as we have been speaking of is to be found in the fact that ministers of the Gospel do not know how to get hold of the non-religious part of the community. There is very little in common in their lives. The minister is not one of them; he has come to settle down upon them, to preach to them. His interests lie very largely in working out theological questions, and their interests are all exceedingly practical. They feel that he is separated from them by a great gulf, and they do not feel moved and uplifted by a great spiritual force which is an organic part of the community.

Let the Christians of a community be united; let the message of the church or churches be vital; let the members be Christlike, and let the minister or ministers be centers of spiritual force, living in close relation with the people of the place and sharing their life, and the result will be that every family in the region will feel the value and power of religion, and, whether it is in New Hampshire or Oregon, there will be an increase of religion.

WRESTLING FOR THE BLESSING.

How many of us want our blessings without the struggle! If God is our loving Father, we fondly say, then he will surely give us what we need for our spiritual development without any strenuous exertion on our part. Hold up the cup, as the lily does for the dew, and it will be graciously filled. But no one can fail to find in the experiences of great spiritual souls something quite different from this—even the Captain of our salvation is made perfect through suffering and struggle. No, the spiritual stature does not come with folded hands and calm content and peaceful ease. When Jacob is to be transformed to Israel, the prince—when he is to rise to a new spiritual self—he finds that the divine form which confronts him in the dark will give no blessing until he wrestles for it.

Two of the Master's great parables embody the truth that God gives His blessings to those who show persistence and even importunity in making their desires known. Not that God must be teased as weak human parents often are before they grant favors to their children, but it is surely best for us, for our spiritual development, that all the virility and force and earnestness of our nature should go into our prayers for spiritual blessings, and that we should ask as though we meant to receive. There was once a poor heathen woman who met Jesus, the only time He ever crossed over the border of the little country which He called His earthly fatherland, and her heart was heavy with trouble. She had faith enough to come to this traveling Teacher, and to ask Him to cure her daughter. She poured out her request as a mother can. "And He answered her not a word"! There was no sign of any help from Him. But here was a woman who would not go away without a blessing, though it might consist only of crumbs. She got not only her heart's desire, but also the beautiful words: "I have not seen such faith in any person, even in my own country in Israel."

It is, we believe, a mistake to suppose that the highest worship is best when it is passive. The highest worship is reached when the soul goes out actively to wrestle with God in silence, it may be, in groanings that cannot be uttered, or in loud cryings for a truer, nobler, worthier, holier self, for the higher spiritual stature. This is what Gladstone once called "the holy work of worship."

God cannot be worshiped idly, sluggishly, lazily, and we need to realize that the great reason for failure in spiritual development comes from the lack of earnest, valiant wrestling for the highest good our soul can see.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

A "Congress of Charity" is to be held in connection with the Paris Exposition next year, from July 30th to August 5th.

F. B. Meyer, the noted English evangelist, who had been spending some time in the United States, recently returned to England.

A church has recently been opened in South London for the benefit of the 15,000 Welsh speaking people in that part of the city.

The patriarch of Constantinople for the Armenians, in union with the Roman Church, has lately been elected with the full approval of both Pope and Sultan.

The general conference for Christian workers at Northfield, Mass., closed its 17th annual session on the 20th, after the most successful series of meetings in the history of the movement.

"Zion's Herald" has accused the Secretary of the Epworth League, Dr. Schell, with malfeasance in office. The latter retorts with a statement branding the utterance of "Zion's Herald" as wholly untrue.

The Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal have called upon the church for a twentieth century offering of $25,000. It is proposed to divide the money equally between the educational and missionary work of the church.

At a recent meeting in Odessa to express rejoicing over the revision of the Dreyfus case, a young Jew declared that this revision ought to move Jews throughout the world to revise another unjust trial which resulted in the execution of an innocent man—Jesus of Nazareth. A number of young men have consequently formed a society for this purpose, calling themselves Revisionists.

The Liverpool School Board lately decided to introduce the "Free Church Catechism" into the schools of that city as part of the course of study. Strong opposition has developed, and it is a question whether the action of the board will be sustained.

A Mormon elder, with permission of the mayor of the city, preached his doctrines on Boston Common on the 19th. About one hundred persons only were present to listen to him. It will be a matter of surprise to many to learn that for several years a Mormon church has existed in Boston with regular services.

The Church of England Army has recently obtained new headquarters in London costing $55,000. The Church Army is said to be accomplishing much excellent work. It has sixty-five vans, by means of which the gospel is preached in all parts of the city and country. In the last quarter $5,000 worth of Bibles and religious literature was sold by the Army colporteurs, in addition to the large quantity gratuitously distributed.

The Roman Catholic bodies in this country have been protesting against alleged violation of churches by our soldiers in the Philippines, but President Schurman, who has just returned from his commission to the islands denies the charges, and adds his corroboration to the story of the oppressive dominion of the Roman Church in the islands. He states that one-half of the property in the neighborhood of Manila is owned by the religious orders.

No good is certain but the steadfast mind,
The undivided will to seek the good;
'Tis that compels the elements, and wrings
A human music from the indifferent air.
The greatest gift a hero leaves his race
Is to have been a hero.

I am so glad! It is such rest to know
That Thou has ordered and appointed all,
And wilt yet order and appoint my lot.
For though so much I cannot understand,
And would not choose, has been, and yet may be;
Thou chooseth, Thou performest, Thou, my Lord—
This is enough for me!

"SEE THAT THOU SAY NOTHING TO ANY MAN."

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON

This was to be no common test of Christ's marvelous power; yet here was no ostentatious display. There was no call to those near at hand to pause and witness a new exhibition of His greatness. To the unclean spirit that cried out, "I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God," He said, "Hold thy peace." He cast out many devils, but He "suffered them not to speak."

The glory of the deeds of mercy by which those in the pangs of "divers diseases" were brought back in a moment to fulness of vigorous life, spread all too fast. He was not moved by the spreading of fame, but He was moved with compassion. When the kneeling suppliant at His feet said, "Lord, Thou canst if Thou wilt," His answer was the simple, sweet consent of pity and of love. "I will," He said; "be thou clean," and the sacred story reads that as quick as Christ had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed and the sufferer was cleansed.

No ceremony, no exhortation, no rebuke, no pompous display, no conspicuous authority; but, "I will"—two little words of comfort and of promise, and, "Be thou clean"—three little words of quiet strong command. Yet "as soon as He had spoken"—so the sacred story reads—immediately the order was obeyed.

And while He spoke, He drew near. The object at His feet was loathsome beyond words. From this writhing, quivering mass of corruption even common health and purity could only shrink and flee. Yet Christ Himself drew near. With every fibre of His sensitive soul and body responsive, as it was to each throb of human pain, yet, without letting the leper wait one moment in suspense, He stretched forth His hand. Coarser natures could but draw back in disgust. The pitying Christ drew near. He gave the swift assuring word. He stretched forth His hand, and, more than that, He touched him.

What that touch meant to Christ we dare not hope to know. It must have been a mighty transmission of vitality, a marvelous expenditure of the highest, subtlest forces. We know He had infinite and divine power, unfailing and sure sources of strength. Yet who shall say that He knew no conscious weariness and exhaustion because of the "virtue" that had gone out of Him? We cannot believe He was spared human loathing and bodily recoil, yet what a marvel of tenderness and pity must that have been that dominated shrinking and quieted disgust.

Of the cost to Him of the constant exercise of His power to heal we have only such hints as are given by His frequent flight into the wilderness or to some mountain apart—by the midnight hours in solitary places, when through the silence and the shadows He, even as we are forced to do, crept close to the heart of God.

We are apt to think too little of what the deeds of mercy meant to Him. We know enough to feel that they were a part of that great, constant outpouring of His soul, that made Him "a man of sorrows"; a part of His daily dying that others might have life. And what marvelous life it is that He gives—that loathsome leper knew. Whatever his healing meant to Christ, to the leper it meant strength, and vigor, and power, and hope, and love and home. It meant the clear eye, the uplifted head, the pure brow, the clean hands, the bounding step.

It meant such joy as made him in the first flush of his transport unable to control himself. He was grateful, as we often are, but not grateful enough to make him obedient. Christ says to us, sometimes, "See that thou say nothing." He has His own reason, and yet we talk. Or He says to us, as He said to Mary, "Go and tell"—and we are silent. The test of gratitude that He seems to require from souls to which He has drawn near, is obedience. Too many times we are ready to feel grateful, but not ready to obey. The effect of disobedience in this case was that Jesus "could no more openly enter the city." He was forced to stay without in desert places, and those had to seek the desert who "came to Him from every quarter."

Strange as it may sound, we believe there are still many times when God wants His children to keep still. Even His gracious dealings with our own souls may be talked about till mischief results. The Christ had said, "See that thou say nothing to any man," yet the leper went out "and began to publish it much." He "blazed abroad" the very matter concerning which Jesus had said, "Be still."

We have all known instances when the Christ has been driven out from the heart of good work being done in His name, because His own followers "blazed abroad" and "published much." It is quite possible still to drive Him away—to send Him into the desert and force people to go there to find Him, when He would gladly have stayed in our midst if we had been careful to obey.

It is sadly true that we can create conditions that hinder and hamper and obstruct His work. Or we can help by keeping ourselves and our experiences and our healings in their proper place, and making Him and Him alone prominent and conspicuous before the world.

But you ask, How do it, if we fail to talk of His wonderful work? Talk, but talk when He commands, where and when He directs. Whatever the experience is, don't "publish it much" till you have permission. Don't "blaze it abroad" till you are sure that the light of the blaze will make His figure stand out clear instead of throwing light upon your own. No doubt the healed leper was an object of much more attention than if he had obeyed and gone about his duties, performing each in loving, grateful faithfulness. He was told to show himself to the priest. He should have waited God's time to show himself to the world.

Too much talk is often, even in our day, the language of an evil spirit within us. Evil spirits knew him, but he said to them, "Hold thy peace." Would we, too, have the evil cast out? Let us learn to be still, and give Him a chance to do His work in His own marvelous way.

New York City.

IS RELIGION ON THE DECREASE IN NEW HAMPSHIRE?

BY GEORGE W. COOKE.

In a country town it is impossible to eliminate the sectarian influence, which may not find any open expression, but none the less surely it hinders the cause of "pure religion and undefiled." It has the result of leaving a considerable proportion of the population of most towns outside any church influence. Probably one-half the permanent residents of Dublin are not regular attendants at either of its churches, and one-quarter rarely attend religious services of any kind. Of the forty families now living in Dublin village, New Hampshire, about twenty-five are affiliated with the Unitarian Church and about ten with the Orthodox; but the number of men who are regular attendants is only nine for both churches, while the same number never attend either, and six attend with an intermittent regularity. These figures indicate that only one-fourth of the men are regular church attendants, and that only one-half have any positive connection with the religious interests of the village. They will hold good for the whole town, as they probably will for nearly all the farming towns of New England. I am of the opinion, however, that no limit of this kind need be made, and that these figures will apply to all towns alike, and to the cities quite as well.

Some of the effects of sectarianism can be seen in their full force only in smaller towns, where the people come into close contact with each other, where everybody is known to everybody, and where there is little opportunity for choice as to one's religious affiliations. In the city the man who is not satisfied with the creed, management or minister of a church easily finds another, and one that will give him what he wishes to find. In the small town no such opportunity for selection is afforded, and those who become dissatisfied with the church with which they have been connected usually withdraw entirely from church attendance. Under the glaring light of town gossip a change from one church to another is too great a step for most men and women to take.

The evil of sectarianism stands out conspicuously in the remoter towns because every energy of the church membership must be bent to the one task of the maintenance of the church. The larger life of the community is neglected, the church has no organized charities, it does not minister to the intellectual life of the town, it does not concern itself very distinctly with the problems of morality and of social well-being. The struggle to live absorbs all its strength, except what is given to the furtherance of sectarian interests. The churches rarely work together for the interests they have in common or for the higher moral and social life of the whole community. This want of harmony and co-operation between the churches is a potent means of creating distrust in the religious sincerity of those who attend them. When the chief aim of a church is to advance the interests of its own sect it comes gradually to neglect "every weightier matter of the law," and to regard the people around it simply as subjects for its proselyting zeal. How stands the town life as a whole it cares little, and it is so absorbed in the task of making converts to its own way of thinking that it ceases to have any positive concern for the moral and intellectual uplifting of the community. Under these conditions of rivalry between churches, and of eagerness for the increase of church membership for sectarian ends, it is not strange that the town life becomes pitifully narrow and unprogressive, that superstition advances and that intellectual interest ceases.

It would not be just to denominationalism to say that the lack of religious interest is wholly due to this cause, for a goodly proportion of it comes from personal animosities and town feuds. Here is a man of good character and public spirit who never attends church, but when you come to know town and family history well enough you discover that his father or grandfather gave up attendance because of some personal contention, on account of some action of the church he did not approve, or because he thought he had not been rightly dealt with in some business transaction that involved the church or its leading members; and this animosity descends in the family. Or you discover that the absence of one man is owing to the presence of another. And you also find that two parties exist in the town, which are always struggling with each other for the control of town affairs, and that this contention has a decided influence upon the church interest of the men. The men of one party take an active interest in church affairs, and the men of the other do not. Such causes as these have a surprisingly large influence in determining church attendance and in limiting the effective spiritual and moral power of the churches.

One of the most marked causes of church deterioration is owing to misdirected zeal for the advancement of the social life of the churches. With the slackening of theological interest, and with the growth of the agnostic attitude (which is found as conspicuously in the remotest towns as in the most cultured cities), there has come a largely increased tendency to make of the church a center of social activities. In the country, as well as in the city, many churches are little better than social clubs; and the urgency of this interest in the country is even greater than in the city, owing to the absence of other means of social gratification. You enter a church on Sunday morning and find thirty-five or fifty persons present, but you attend the church sociable on Thursday evening in the vestry and find the number is one hundred or one hundred and fifty. The attitude on Sunday morning is one of apathy and indifference, but that of Thursday evening shows enthusiasm and keen enjoyment. One clergyman has said that he was little more than a town crier to announce entertainments and to act as a center around which the social interests could focus themselves. If the social interest were removed many a church would come to an end.

It is not in the country, however, that this demand for amusement finds expression. On a beautiful autumn day two or three years since I attended church in one of Boston's suburban towns, and found twenty-five persons present. Afterward I was told by one of the leading men of the church that at any time three hundred persons could be gathered together in the vestry for a church supper and entertainment. He seemed to regard this ability to draw together a large company of persons for social recreation as the chief indication of the strength and promise of the religious society he represented. To me it seemed a sure indication of spiritual deadness and of religious apathy. When a church can minister to the needs of the community in which it is placed effectively by only such means as these, its usefulness has departed. At the present moment, this is the most conspicuous tendency one everywhere finds in church life and in nearly all denominations. It does not promise well for the immediate future of our churches; rather does it indicate their failure to minister to the higher life of the soul.

It is quite possible that one may take too narrow a view of the ministry of social recreation. The fact is, that in country communities there are no centers of social life outside the churches. It is in many ways a most desirable thing that the amusements of the people should be had under noble auspices, the best that the town can afford. Where they are not provided by the churches they are almost surely of a lower and more degrading character. When one has seen the eagerness with which farmers and their wives meet together for the enjoyment of the simplest amusements, he cannot doubt that there is a mission for the church vestry. The objection does not lie so much against the wholesome amusements which may be introduced to increase the interest of the people in each other and in the church as in fact that the entertainment interest dominates everything else. With the majority the social life provided by the church is the chief thing, while the intellectual and spiritual interest is made subordinate.

The keen intellectual interest the churches have so often represented in the past, to a large degree they no longer manifest. If a minister is desired, he must be a young man, or he must be very sociable, or he must be capable of preaching entertaining sermons. To a considerable extent the demand is for what is entertaining and for an active social interest. The growing indifference to all theological problems, and to the intellectual interpretation of life, has brought the churches to a demand for ritualism or for entertainment. When the calling of a minister is under consideration, the chief question is, if he is good at making parish calls, and if he is capable of increasing his congregation by his friendliness and his social gifts. In many a congregation his preaching powers are of little importance, if he is a good parish worker. In one of the most cultured towns, a few miles from Boston, a new minister being required, one of the parish committee said that the demand was for "a hustler—a man who can get right around among the people and wake them up, and bring them to church." In all directions this is what is demanded—in the country not less than in the city.

The tendencies of the churches are well indicated by the fact that an increasing number of them do not "settle" their ministers, but "hire" them by the year. At each parish meeting they are discussed, and voted upon for another year's engagement. In this way every little element of dissatisfaction immediately finds expression. A minister is not put into his place with any expectation that he will remain for more than three or four years, and this very fact helps to realize what is anticipated. The most trivial causes lead to a separation of ministers and parish, and all his faults are quickly and persistently magnified.

The church attendance decreases. The number of those who never attend church enlarges with each year. An attitude of apathy and indifference with regard to religion, on the part of the majority, is clearly apparent. The young grow up to want of reverence and to attendance upon church only for what is entertaining. The Sunday school concert is largely attended, but the thoughtful sermon wins only a small hearing. These conditions are not hopeful, however buoyant may be one's optimism. Taken in connection with the deterioration of the schools, and the general want of interest in the subject of education, they do not promise well for the future.—"Boston Evening Transcript."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

PRAISE.

Father we love this earth,
The work of thine own hands—
The heavens above,
The wide spread lands,
In sunlight rare
That lie beneath.

The placid ocean calm,
And restless throbbing sea,
Thy voice obey.
They offer Thee
In ceaseless tone,
Their solemn dirge.

The mountain peaks that rise,
With brows rough worn with age,
Crested with snow
Like ancient sage,
With solemn mien
Thy wonders tell.

The gentle slopes—the hills—
And valleys fair,
The mountain rills
With murmur soft and low,
And rivers broad
With deep, majestic flow,

In mystic service blend
Thy name to praise.
Father, we love Thy earth,
And with its anthem raise,
With humble heart,
Our song of praise.

ENCOURAGING THE BUILDERS.

Haggai 2: 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be strong all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work, for I am with you. Hag. 2: 4.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 4.—God's call to build. Hag. 1.
Third-day, Ninth mo. 5.—Encouraging the builders. Hag. 2: 1-9.
Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 6.—The Call obeyed. Ezra 5: 1-5.
Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 7.—Opposition. Ezra 5: 6-17.
Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 8.—Enemies defeated. Ezra 6: 1-12.
Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 9.—The Temple completed. Ezra 6: 13-22.
First-day, Ninth mo. 10.—God's glory. 2 Chron. 5: 11-14.

The Book of Haggai is one of the shortest in the Bible, consisting, as it does, of but two chapters. The name Haggai probably means Festal. We know nothing about him except what is found in his brief prophecies and in the references in Ezra (5: 1; 6: 14). The dates of his utterances are dated accurately, and cover a space of four months only. All belong to the year 520 B. C., and were delivered in the sixth, seventh and ninth months of the Jewish year, nearly answering to our July, August and October. Why Haggai should have remained silent during the years 535-520—the fifteen years of inaction by the Jews—is not recorded. It can only be surmised that the time to speak had not come. His great contemporary, Zechariah, who appears to have been a younger man, bore a similar message.

It was the mission of Haggai to arouse his people to a sense of their shortcomings in neglecting the rebuilding of the Temple. Some have supposed he himself had seen Solomon's Temple (verse three of present lesson), but it is only a supposition. It has been well said: "No prophet ever appeared at a more critical juncture in the history of the people, and it may be added, no prophet was more immediately successful."

Cyrus had been succeeded by Cambyses, a cruel tyrant; the efforts of the Samaritans to poison the minds of the rulers (Ezra 3: 5) had been successful, and from this and various other causes work on the Temple had ceased. With the advent of Darius Hystaspes to the throne a new era began. He was an able and wise monarch and the time seemed fit for a renewal of the effort to rebuild the nation's sanctuary.

Psalms 146, 147, 148 and 149 have been attributed to Haggai and Zechariah.

The whole of the Book of Haggai should be read.

1. "In the seventh month," etc. (October). This prophecy was given forth seven weeks after Haggai's first prophecy (Hag. 1: 1), and about a month after work had been begun on the Temple. The burden of the former message had been "Work!" Of the present it was, "Be of good cheer."

2. "Governor." Satrap—he was appointed by Persia. The time was that of the Feast of Tabernacles. "Josedeck." "Jehozadak." Revised Version. See 1 Chron. 3: 19.

3. "Who is left," etc. The Temple was destroyed in 586; Haggai was speaking in 520, so sixty-six years had elapsed. Very few could have seen the Temple of Solomon. "In her first glory," or former glory. "The Jews said that five things were wanting in the second Temple. (1) The sacred fire; (2) the Shekinah; (3) the Ark and Cherubim; (4) Urim and Thummin; (5) the Spirit of Prophecy." "Is it not in your eyes as nothing?" Revised Version. Compare Ezra 3: 12, 13. There was much to depress, but it was not the part of patriotic men, or of faithful servants of the Lord, to depreciate present efforts by comparing them with the past.

4. "Be strong. "Courage!" "Nerve yourself!" "Work." Set to work. "For I am with you." Silver and gold and precious stones, and even what the former Temple possessed, are nothing compared with the promise of the Lord that He will be with you.

5. "According to the word," etc. The reference is to Exodus 29: 45, 46. "Remaineth among you." "And my Spirit abode among you." Revised Version. But the present tense seems more in accord with the context, and is to be preferred. "Fear ye not." So long as the Lord was with them there was no reason to fear.

6. "Yet once," etc. That is to say, "It is but a little while and I will shake," etc. Compare Heb. 12: 18-29; 1 Pet. 3: 8.

7. "The Desire of all nations shall come." Scholars now, almost without exception, read this passage as in the Revised Version—"And the desirable things of all nations shall come." It is agreed that the beautiful words, so familiar in the authorized version, are a mistranslation. The expression means "everything which the nations count precious—their wealth, glory, natural characteristics and special gifts and aptitudes—shall be brought to beautify God's house." (Compare Rev. 21: 26.) This translation is also in accord with the statement in verse 8. (Compare Ezra 6: 6-12; 7: 12-26.

8. Silver and gold are the creation of the Lord, and so belong to Him to be used as He wills.

9. "Better as in Revised Version: "The latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former." To the Jews the Temple was one building from Solomon's time to that of Herod. This prophecy was outwardly true, as the Temple of Herod was larger and more magnificent than that of Solomon. While it is not likely that Haggai himself consciously prophesied of the coming of Christ, his words were spiritually fulfilled, in that the presence of Christ, the Son of God, conferred far more glory on the building than any outward adornment.

"Will I give peace." To his hearers these words undoubtedly meant a promise of outward peace. And peace was the lot of the Jews during the terrible wars which soon followed between the Greeks and Persians. To the spiritual ear these words tell of the coming and preaching of Him who was the Prince of Peace, and who brings peace to the troubled soul.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Be strong in the Lord."

2. "His name shall be called Immanuel—God with us."

3. "I can do all things through him that strengtheneth me."

AN EARLY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORER.

2 Tim. 3: 10-17.

(A union meeting with the Junior society.)

Second-day, Ninth mo. 4.—Are blessed of Jesus. Mark 10: 13-16.

Third-day, Ninth mo. 5.—Should study the Word. Deut. 6: 1-9.

Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 6.—Should honor parents. Ex. 20: 12; Eph. 6: 1-3.

Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 7.—Should imitate Jesus. Luke 2: 40-52.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 8.—Should praise Jesus. Matt. 21: 12-17.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 9.—Should be helpful. 2 King 5: 1-14.

If Timothy had only written for us a volume of reminiscences after the style of to-day, doubtless he would have told us of his first meeting with Paul—how he was impressed by him, how their friendship grew; indeed, what a book it would have been had Timothy been only to Paul what Boswell was to Johnson. It is another pleasing fancy to imagine Timothy as a modern Endeavorer, transferring into this movement the enthusiasm, personal devotion and consecration that so endeared him to Paul.

Timothy began Endeavor work early. As a Junior he was well drilled in the Jewish Scriptures. Doubtless his mother, and possibly his grandmother, saw that he memorized his verses and understood the Bible stories. They trained him also in the faith so dear to them, and we are to think of him—not as a graceless, irreverent youth, and a wild young man "sowing his wild oats," but as thoughtful, obedient, susceptible of the inspiration of noble ideal and the dominance of a noble purpose.

Paul evidently laid deep hold upon the young man's heart—not only for his Master's sake, but, as it proved, also for his own sake. How deep the friendship became, and how abiding, can be traced all through the Acts and the Pauline epistles, and at the last the prematurely aged, imprisoned veteran, knowing death is near, having none like Timothy to care for him, patetically pleads, "Do thy diligence to come quickly."

Timothy was a model Endeavorer in this choice of an ideal for life. The inspiration of a noble life which re-incarnates for us the Christ spirit is a mighty incentive toward righteousness, and not to be discounted because there are possible evils in hero worship. A young, impressionable nature needs to fall under the influence of a man like Paul, whose "teaching, conduct, purpose, faith, longsuffering, love, patience, and even persecutions, sufferings," can mold his own life forever.

The whole nature of a child needs to be lifted early to this high plane of acting. In Holland the land is low and they must built great dikes to keep out the sea, but in England no dikes are needed, for the whole country is lifted to a higher level. It is not "dikes" that children need, but moral and spiritual elevation. Timothy lived in an evil age and grew up in the midst of grossest, unspeakable wickedness, but as a man of God he fled from these things and followed after the true, the pure, the good. Margaret Sangster has written a beautiful book for girls, with the title of "Life on High Levels," and the title itself is a sermon.

Timothy was a model Endeavorer because he could work under others. Paul could send him here and there, assured that he would faithfully look after the work assigned him. Once, when he had sent him to Philippi, he said of him: "I have no man like-minded who will care genuinely (see margin) for you." To be an Endeavorer thus trusted and relied upon by your pastor or Sabbath school superintendent—to be one always ready for service and faithful in its performance, winning such an encomium from those who are called to the direction of the work—is to be worthy indeed.

Timothy was a model in that he not only followed Paul's faith and purpose, but also his persecutions and sufferings. He learned to "endure hard things as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." He was no fair-weather Christian, no mere shouter at a revival, and a stay-at-home the rest of the year. He personally knew of the persecutions of Antioch, Iconium, Lystra and elsewhere, and was not daunted by them. He was no John Mark to turn back when the perils of an unknown journey confronted him.

Our lesson gives us two of the great inspirations of Timothy's life: One the personal influence of Paul, the other the Holy Scriptures. The word written and the word lived—these were the molds of his own faith and practice. Let us seek the same influences; believe in the best men and women you know; study the Bible. Do not spend time in carping at men who have failed or are hypocrites. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, . . . think on these things." There is evil enough in the world, but we do not need the realism of sin and evil to make us pure. Follow the faith, purpose and conduct of lofty souls. Study the masterpiece of literature, the Bible and your life will be like that which you thus cherish.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Lynnville, Iowa, Eighth month 14th, 1899.

The Lynngrove Quarterly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union held their regular meeting on Saturday evening, August 13th, 1899, at Lynnville, Iowa. The following program was very ably carried through, each part being of a very high character: Song and Devotional, Robert Lincoln; paper, "Christian Giving," Inis Day, of Kellogg; paper, "Christian Living," John Lincoln, Oak Grove; duet, Ruth Brown and Effie Meredith; address, "The Pledge," Josiah Hockett; paper, "Consecration Meeting," Minnie White; solo, Grace Macey; recitation, Luzena Davis; duet, Howard and Ruth Brown; report of Detroit Convention, Ruth Brown. The union meeting was well represented and greatly enjoyed by all.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

TEAM WORK.

It is said that football depends more upon "team work" than upon individual powers. Be that as it may, it is certain that in Christian work it is only through "that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, that maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love." (Eph 4: 15). That is not a bad verse for a motto for your Endeavor Society for the next six months—and for six years as well. There are too many "joints" lacking in many societies. The result is that the work is disjointed. A few chairmen of committees are earnestly at work, but "each several part" of their committees does not fill its "due measure." The first great problem before hundreds of societies to whom this will come as they start anew into their fall and winter work, is to get a due sense of responsibility upon their members. By the way, what is Christian responsibility? It is our response to God's offer of ability. It is first to know the "exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe," and then to respond to that power as the machinery does to the engine. The increase of the Endeavor Society depends upon this, and also its own upbuilding in love. It will be well to hold a "responsibility" meeting, and have the whole question of personal responsibility fully discussed from every standpoint. How could such a meeting end except in most importunate prayer for a personal Pentecost?

But to do "team work" means also to take our right place in the body. A horse that is accustomed to being driven single, does not drive well double, because he always wants to crowd into the middle of the road. Do you work well only when you are in the lead. One of the chief questions in these days for missionary candidates, is: Can you do team work? It is equally important in the home field. Christian Endeavor training ought to fit us for harmonious co-operation with our brethren in church work.

A SPIRITUAL ATMOSPHERE.

An essential element of right Christian life and service is a spiritual atmosphere. It is in the power of every believer to draw around him the essential elements of such an atmosphere. It is also possible to so fully abandon one's self to influences that are upon the whole prejudicial to spiritual life, or that their claims upon our time and strength crowd out better things, as to utterly dwarf, if not destroy, all our spiritual energies. It is often difficult to show just why this, or that, should not be indulged in, or to point out definitely the evil that will result from such indulgence, but it is easy to see that the result upon the whole is the creation of an unspiritual atmosphere in which Christian life can no more thrive than physical life can thrive in noxious, poisonous gases. The theatre, dance and card table do not create a spiritual atmosphere; the small talk of society, the personal criticisms and backbitings, the questionable jokes of popular lounging places, the scandal-mongering columns of the daily press; all this, and much more like it, create the unspiritual atmosphere. Those who live in it are pale, sickly, weak. They are like the denizens of an overcrowded tenement house down some dark alley.

A spiritual atmosphere consists of other associations and occupations. The quiet morning hour with God, the regular and constant attendance at meetings for worship, the fellowships of Christian life and service, the companionship of good, pure, and uplifting books, the realization, above all, of the presence of God, and of His guidance in the affairs of life—these, and similar things strengthen and develop life along high levels, and fit for noblest service.

A spiritual atmosphere is always an unselfish atmosphere. When so-called spirituality becomes self-centered, occupied with its own frames and feelings, fraternizes only with its own little coterie, and looks askance at all others, it may be very unearthly, but it is not the least bit heavenly. The best thing we know about heaven is that it gave its best gift for earth. The unselfish spiritual life is like it. It lives to serve.

A QUIET HOUR THOUGHT.

"Supposing him to be in the company, they went a day's journey: and they sought for him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance, and they found him not." Luke 2: 44, 45.

Does it not seem strange that Mary could have journeyed a whole day without knowing that Jesus was in the company? All the more when the day had been the first out from Jerusalem, and it would seem all the more important that they should get safely out of the crowded streets and the motley throng from all nations without leaving any one behind. But perhaps the start had been hurried and they were late and the baggage may have been to arrange, so they trusted to a supposition and went their way. Then there was much to talk about concerning the great multitude and the splendid retreat of the temple, and the old friends they had met, and so they went on their journey a whole day without seeing Jesus. But at nightfall, as they arranged for camping, and for the evening meal, he was nowhere to be found. The anxious search among their kinsfolk and Galilean acquaintance did not reveal him. How the news spread through the camp that a child was lost! What anxious consultations were held! They could not sleep that night, and with the early morning they hurried back to Jerusalem, scanning each group of pilgrims by the way, their temporary home in the city, every place they could imagine, for two whole days, until at last they found him in the temple.

Does the story fit our lives in any of its particulars? Are these days when we, too, hurry into the journey, or business, or care, or pleasure of the day with only a supposition as to the presence of Jesus? They supposed that He was in the company. So we confuse religious associations, services and work with Jesus himself, and "suppose" He must be somewhere in the company. But religious sensibilities so lacking in acuteness of perception cannot be rewarded with the rich fellowship of His presence. His love is too great to be satisfied only with a supposition. We may even talk learnedly about the Divine Immanence while we actually lose the Divine Indwelling. The former is a fact, but the latter is a revelation—a manifestation conditioned upon a right attitude of soul toward God.

Let us note again that it will not do to depend upon past manifestations of His presence. Mary could never forget the night at Bethlehem when Jesus was born, nor all the attendant marvels, but there came a time when her heart was content for a whole day with only a supposition. But when He could not be found how keenly was she awakened to the sense of her loss; but we, poor souls, can go on the memory of past experiences and present suppositions for days and even weeks.

What are the certain tokens of His presence with us? He dwells in our hearts by faith, and wherein does faith differ from a supposition? Faith is based on a definite knowledge of facts, while a supposition implies an ignorance of the real facts. Faith is absolute surrender to His indwelling; it is action based upon reliance on that fact; it wakens Him not even though the storm arises, for it rests upon the fact that He is there and He knows. The spirit's witness is also a token. "At that day ye shall know that I am in you and ye in me." That is in the day when the Spirit shall have come upon you. There is an inner persuasion, a consciousness of the Divine manifestation.

There is a consciousness of communion; there is an illumination of the word of Jesus; there is a sense of love to God and to men; there is a confidence in prayer. The maintenance of this fulness and freshness of the spiritual life, untarnished by adverse environment and undimmed by inward doubt or decay, is the charm of Christian life. Such souls forever have the "dew of their youth."

PEACE.

"There is a peace that cometh after sorrow,
Of hope surrendered, not of hope fulfilled,
A peace that looketh not upon to-morrow,
But calmly on a tempest that is stilled.

A peace which lives not now in joy's excesses,
Nor in the happy life of love secure,
But in the unerring strength the heart possesses
Of conflict won while learning to endure.

A peace there is in sacrifice secluded,
A life subdued, from will and passion free,
'Tis not the peace which over Eden brooded,
But that which triumphed in Gethsemane.

REPORT OF WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

On the 16th of Eighth month at 10.30 a.m. the meeting of Ministry and Oversight was called together in the auditorium, with Arthur L. Carey and Elma D. Cook as clerks.

Prayer was offered by William Birdsall, Mary Hadley, Eli G. Parker, and Israel Terrell.

Samuel C. Mills read a few verses of Scripture, and gave some earnest exhortation that each Christian worker and preacher should seek to do his best on every occasion, that he should use and develop every faculty of soul and intellect in the service of Christ, and that the church should encourage the colleges, and make a place within her own borders for the best gifts and the finest intellects, which in the past have too often been allowed or compelled to find a field for work in other places.

The opening minute was then read, the representatives were called, and after a few minutes of routine business the meeting adjourned till 2 p.m.

The session at 2 p.m. was opened by singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name." Prayer was offered by Joseph Wright, Rosanna Pickering, and Rachel Wright.

Callie Nurdyke, in a few well chosen words, urged that the minister give not his own message; that he do not speak when he has seen nothing.

Rachel Wright said that it meant something to be led of the Spirit, and that it meant something to obey the leading.

Levi Mills said that Friends needed to be warned against becoming lopsided, and depending on the leading of the Spirit without an intelligent effort to understand the truth.

Minutes were then read for five visiting Friends, whose names are given in the report of the yearly meeting.

Lavinia Barrett was appointed to prepare a synopsis of the business and concerns of the meeting, to be presented to the yearly meeting.

In the consideration of the Queries, Levi Mills said, that he trembled at the awful guilt of neglect of the church. With more than 4,000 adult members, there have been fewer than 400 accessions to the church. He laid the blame upon the stinginess of the membership, who would not give the tithe which they owed to God, and thus robbed the church and crippled its work, and starved their own souls into leanness and death.

Expressions from many Friends showed a strong feeling in the same direction.

Nathan Frame recommended that each one seriously ask himself whether he had not something in his hand that the Lord would have.

President Unthank warned us against losing the gist of the matter by criticising some objectionable expressions. The truth is, "God will not bless a stingy church."

Thomas Miller read some solemn words from one of the prophets, concerning a "famine of hearing the Word of the Lord."

The meeting adjourned to 8 p.m.

The evening session was devoted to gospel ministry, and was led by Eli G. Parker. His discourse was on understanding the signs of the times.

Then adjourned to meet at 8 a.m. on Sixth-day morning.

Sixth-day, 8 a.m.—After singing and prayer, David Hadley spoke on the message of Friends to the world. The churches ought to have a burden, and the burden would seek a messenger. A messenger without a burdened church behind him is in a fearful relation to things. A loaded wagon will not wear out so fast as an empty one. A loaded church will not have such occasion for local discords over the merest nothings, such as are sure to occur in an unburdened one.

The first essential of the messenger is deep spirituality. It is more important that the messenger be prepared, than that the message be. The burden ought to be a genuine one.

Joseph Wright read from Paul how God had called the weak things of this world to bring to naught the mighty and the wise.

John Henry Douglas spoke briefly of the church's need of a Pentecost like that first one, or like that other one which came in the early days of our Society.

Second-day, 8 a.m.—The meeting was opened by a season of prayer that God would open his own counsels to us, as we considered the need of the churches in arranging and providing for pastors. J. B. Wright, Levi Mills, Nathan Frame, and J. L. Spicer prayed.

Josephus Hoskins said: We are at the end of ourselves. There is but one way to go on—to look to God. He has the solution to this question. We must get where He can speak to us, and we must be able to say from the bottom of our hearts, "Thy will be done."

John Henry Douglas gave a solemn and earnest talk on the need of the church, and God's way of working. He said: We are in a close place; but it is good for us to be in a close place. The preacher must not preach for money. But the church that permits the minister to make all the sacrifices will stay weak in spite of great preachers. Somebody must be free from temporal entanglement, to plan for the work of the church.

Allen Jay followed with a few words of encouragement and counsel. He quoted John Bright as saying, that George Fox was the greatest reformer since the days of the Apostle Paul.

The work begun by Fox will go on. We must lay our hands upon our young people. There will be preachers yet—more in numbers, and better than those now at it. There will be a revival in Bible study. I am sorry you have dropped the Bible course in the college here. We need a teaching ministry. We need Barnabases to hunt up preachers. We need to avoid the delusion that the world is coming to its end so soon that the preacher has not time to prepare for his work.

William Birdsall said: The reason I made my subscription to the college is, that somebody may be trained there for work.

Abigail Hadley said: When the church lays its hands on a young person, it ought to be certain he has the gift.

A committee was appointed to revise the pastoral queries, and the meeting adjourned till Third-day morning.

The session on Third-day was opened with singing, and by prayer offered by A. L. Carey.

Nathan Frame made an earnest protest that God has placed His call and qualification on top of every gift and attainment, and that He would still pour out His spirit upon men who had not a college education, and they would preach to learned and unlearned "the old, o'd story of Jesus and his love."

The Committee on Conference reported that an instructive and helpful conference was held in Eleventh month. The same committee was continued to arrange for, and hold another conference the coming year.

The report of the Pastoral Committee was read, and after considerable discussion adopted.

David Hadley was then given the opportunity to say some closing words. He said: The minister must recognize his gift as coming from God, and to Him must he give account. The more we have to do with God the better. The minister must keep his heart close to other ministers.

In response to a loving invitation, all the ministers gathered closed about the speaker, and as they knelt together, he offered a fervent, fatherly prayer in their behalf. John Henry Douglas and Esther Frame also led in prayer, and the meeting adjourned till Fourth-day morning.

Fourth-day, at 8 a.m., the closing session of this body met. William Birdsall, Ruth Miller and Eli G. Parker led in prayer. "Jesus, lover of my soul," was sung.

A Pastoral Committee nominated to the meeting was appointed.

A well-prepared synopsis of the proceedings and concerns of the meeting was read.

Eli G. Parker made a few suggestions to ministers. John Watson warned us against the temptations that will beset us as we return to our business, disordered by our absence from it.

The closing minute was read, and in a very sweet and solemn sense of the presence of the Lord, very many of His servants engaged briefly in vocal prayer. "God be with you" was sung, and the closing prayer was offered by Eli G. Parker.

THE YEARLY MEETING.

On Fifth-day, at 10 a.m., the large auditorium was nearly filled, when the opening session of the yearly meeting was held.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung, Joseph Wright prayed, the congregation sang "Jesus, lover of my soul," then Nathan T. Frame prayed.

Samuel C. Mills spoke briefly from the text, "Cursed is every one that doeth the work of the Lord negligently (or R. V., deceitfully)."

Any man or committee that neglected the work to which appointed, or that did the work in the spirit of selfishness, or log-rolling, or deceit, would be cursed of the Lord. The curse might take the form of spiritual blindness or a calloused heart, followed by a crooked life, and an unwillingness to be searched.

He closed his discourse with prayer, after which the opening minute was read by the presiding clerk, James B. Unthank. William Livesey served the meeting as recording clerk, Ella Haney as reading clerk, and Reuben B. Peele as announcing clerk.

Most of the delegates answered promptly to their names; the clerk gave the ordinary instructions to them, and Levi Mills made a proposition that a new plan of raising yearly meeting stock be adopted. His plan was to call for one dollar from each adult member, and require the payment from all who were able to pay. The plan was referred to the delegates.

Minutes were then read from the following visiting Friends: Esther Cook, from Newcastle Monthly Meeting, Ind.; Samuel C. Mills, from Whitewater Monthly Meeting, Ind.; David Hadley, from Amo Monthly Meeting, Western; Thomas Branson, from Amo Monthly Meeting, Western; Rosanna Pickering, from Friendship Monthly Meeting, Kansas; Caroline N. Hunnicutt, from Earlham Monthly Meeting, Cal.; John Henry Douglas, from Scott's Mills Monthly Meeting, Oregon; Eli G. Parker, from Lynn Grove Monthly Meeting, Iowa.

A certificate was read for Charles Babcock, an evangelist and a student in the Cleveland Training School.

The clerk, on behalf of the meeting, welcomed these Friends, and he was seconded by many expressions from the meeting.

John Henry Douglas, on the part of the visiting Friends, spoke with great tenderness of the meaning of their presence here. And Esther Frame sang, "Blest be the tie that binds." After the appointment of a number of committees the session closed.

At 2.30 the London general epistle was read. As usual, it was packed full of good advice and devout sentiment. The remainder of the session was devoted to the Bible school interest.

The report of the committee showed a total enrollment of 2,965, an average attendance of 1,419 and total collections amounting to $558.48.

A solo was sung by Mrs. Hockett, "Nothing to pay."

Dr. Robert Pretlow, of Western Yearly Meeting, addressed the meeting on "The Quaker Side of the Bible School."

All the churches agree on many of the fundamental principles. The keen perception of certain special principles brings in denominationalism. The great discovery of George Fox was, that Christ can speak to the soul. This doctrine is the special characteristic of Quakerism. From this arise all our peculiar teachings, our attitude toward the Scriptures, the ordinances, and benevolent and philanthropic enterprises.

These doctrines must be taught in the Bible schools, unless the schools are to be different from the church, if our children are not to be brought up by chance. If we are ourselves full of Quaker doctrine and knowledge concerning it, we will find abundant opportunity to teach it in connection with the international lessons. Our knowledge must be an experimental one; if we have not been baptized with the Quaker baptism, if we have not been plunged into the Spirit, then are we not Quakers.

There are five qualifications for teaching in the Quaker schools:

- (1) "The Indwelling Master," (2) "The Call or Gift from on High," (3) "Accurate and Practical Knowledge of Scripture," (4) "Clear and Definite Understanding of the Quaker Doctrines," and (5) "A Loving Loyalty to the Church and School."

Mrs. Hockett sang a solo, "The New Jerusalem."

Sixth-day, 10 a.m.—Esther Cook sang, "Where Jesus is, 'tis heaven there." David Hadley prayed.

When the opening minute had been read, Levi Mills, on behalf of the young people, in a touching manner presented a comfortable armchair to Joseph Wright, the aged head of the meeting.

The clerks were reappointed.

The clerk called attention to a large number of pictures of missionaries and mission scenes from Alaska, pictures which had become the property of the yearly meeting, and which would be put into the college.

Minutes were read for Eunice Furnace, of Sheridan Monthly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, and for John Watson, of Skiatook Monthly Meeting, Indian Territory.

In considering the state of Society, David Hadley said: We ought to go to meeting from principle, not for convenience. We ought to go whether everything in the meeting suits us or not. If they are not good we ought to go and help make them good. The worse they are the more need there is for our going. The smaller they are the more are we needed in them. Our attendance and faithfulness in the small meetings tell more upon our character than our presence at large meetings.

We ought to have right relations with each other. We ought to meet each other with courtesy, and with open heart and hand.

Israel Terrell and John Watson spoke to encourage to faithful attendance upon our meetings and in family worship.

The session at 2 p.m. was devoted to the subject of "Temperance." There was first a song by the children of L. T. L. "Some glad day." Prayer was offered by Dr. Pretlow, and another song was sung by the children, "Temperance boys and girls are we."

The report of the committee showed that 27 members use intoxicants, and 4 members raise, 4 sell, and 465 use tobacco.

Clara Hoffman was introduced to the large audience (the largest of the week, so far), and made a stirring address that called forth many expressions of approval. She told the story of Holland, and its salvation from the sea by dikes, built at great expense of time and labor, and built in spite of all sorts of objections. So the great sea of drink has engulfed us, and objections of every sort stand in the way of effort to save ourselves. In her discourse, the speaker strongly condemned the slaughter of the Filipinos as unchristian and un-American.

James Brann led the meeting in a song, "Throw out the life-line." Then the children sang, "The Curse of Wine."

Seventh-day, 10 a.m.—The session was opened by prayer by Samuel C. Mills. J. Lindley Spicer, of the Children's Home, Cincinnati, was introduced to the meeting and his minute read. Charles D. W. Hiatt came in a little later in the session.

Epistles from all corresponding yearly meetings except Oregon were read. All contained hearty expressions of good will, and encouraging accounts of the work and interests of the meetings.

John Henry Douglas gave a personal greeting from Oregon Yearly Meeting. He said that this correspondence session was to him always one of the most interesting of the yearly meeting. This was partly because he had been at all of them, and at many of them time and again, and the epistles seemed like letters from home. He then gave a glowing account of the recent work in several of the yearly meetings as personally known.

The session closed with the doxology.

At 2 p.m. the interests of the college claimed the attention of the meeting. The program was in charge of Ruth Mills. She first asked all the old students in the meeting to rise. Then she called all the members of the alumni and faculty to the platform.

"America" was sung by the congregation, and prayer was offered by N. E. Bennett, pastor of the Baptist Church, and the teacher of astronomy in the college.

After a song by a quartette, the report of the board of managers was read. This encouraging report showed an enrollment of 150 students, and a surplus of $300 in the fiscal accounts. The preparatory course of study has been enlarged, and the entrance requirements in Greek and Latin have been put on an equality with those of the most advanced colleges. Valuable additions have been made to the library in the way of shelves and books. The building is to be heated by a battery of six steel furnaces that are now nearly completed. The moral and religious influence of the school has been satisfactory.

N. H. Chaney, Ph.D., Superintendent of Schools in Chillicothe, Ohio, was then presented, and gave a fine address on "The Power of Purity in Life and Learning."

The power of purity is the power of a structural law that must work everywhere. It is the power of the Master of life. In the gymnasium, as the trainer of the body this law must reign. So it must in the training of the intellect and soul. Home, state, and nation must depend upon it. It is also the law of individual life. He that preserves his purity, lives like a god, and so far as he may, preserves the things around him, and they living with him bless him forever. He that loses his purity dies like a demon, and drags down to death the things around him, and they dying with him curse him forever. Boys often make the mistake to think that age and bigness make a man. But there are men eighty years old who never spent a moment of true manliness. The survival of the fittest is the survival of the purest. The great books that have served the world as Bibles, have been great on account of their purity. The gardener and the jockey, ignorantly obey the law of purity. Why should it not be obeyed then in the mental and spiritual world. The man of Galilee was the strongest force that ever touched humanity, because he was the one essentially pure man. This is the reason why a little child may lead stalwart men, and a tender woman can outdo a regiment—the purest is the strongest.

Levi Mills then took the lead of the audience, and took up a subscription of about $850.

John Henry Douglas gave some interesting reminiscences of his early work in connection with the college.

The quartette sang another song, and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Chaney.

The session at 7.30 was devoted to the subject of "Peace." The singing was led by James Brann. Eli G. Parker opened the meeting with prayer. The report of the Peace Association of Friends was read, as was also the report of the Peace Committee.

The first address of the evening was by Samuel C. Mills, recording secretary of the Peace Association. He believed the peace sentiment was growing, and that it must grow as the gospel of peace prevails.

The next address was by David Hadley. He thought that the martial spirit was very easily stirred. The martial spirit ought not to be allowed to have influence in politics. We ought to have peace in the soul, and in the home, and in the church.

Esther Cook sang "Sweet Peace."

President Unthank said that he was glad to belong to a church that for more than two hundred years had advocated the rational and Christian method of agreement that is now being taught by so many people.

Second-day, 10 a.m.—The meeting began by singing, "Alas! and did my Saviour bleed." Nathan Frame led in prayer. "More about Jesus would I know," was then sung.

Albert Brown, pastor of the meeting in Indianapolis, was introduced, and a minute was read for Charles D. W. Hiatt.

The report of the treasurer, E. J. Hiatt, was read, and with it the satisfactory information was given, that all the dues of the quarterly meeting for the past year had been paid in.

The report of the Committee on Education, accompanied by detailed reports of Friendsville and Maryville Academies was read. The meeting decided to recommend Maryville Academy to the continued benefaction of the Miles White Fund.

Memorials of Amy Fulghum, Joseph Peitsmeyer, and Hazael D. Green, ministers who have lately fallen in the ranks, were read and approved. A feeling of great tenderness came over the meeting, and many expressions of commendation of the characters and labors of these departed Friends were uttered.

President Unthank reported that by the appointment of the meeting he had attended the Quinquennial Conference, at Providence, that the proceeding of the conference would be published as a supplement to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and he recommended a careful perusal of the valuable papers it will contain.

R. W. Douglas closed the meeting with a benediction.

The session at 2 p.m. was given up to a consideration of the evangelistic and pastoral work.

"Jesus, lover of my soul," and "When the roll is called up yonder," were sung.

John Henry Douglas and Joseph Wright prayed. A satisfactory report of the committee was read. The superintendent had been at all the meetings, both in Ohio and Tennessee. Revival services had been held in all except seven. There were about three hundred conversions. There is an increased spirituality among the members, and increasing desire for the services of pastors; but a lamentable lack of willingness to support pastors.

Amos Cook, who has at great sacrifice labored as superintendent the past year, was continued, to have the general oversight of the work the coming year; but he is to have the assistance of a superintendent appointed in each quarterly meeting.

David Hadley addressed the meeting on "Pastoral and Evangelistic Work."

Unless the churches have the hunger for the conversion of sinners the evangelist will labor in vain.

There is a gift for evangelistic work. Those who have the gift ought to harmonize. The evangelist ought not to antagonize the pastor and vice versa.

The evangelist ought to be sound in doctrine, and pronounced in denominational views. He should be clear of offensive individualism. He should be in subjection to authorities; he should not be dictatorial, nor be an element of division, nor draw away disciples. He ought to illustrate in his life the gospel. He ought to observe dignity and courtesy. He ought to avoid flashy, sensational and emotional religion, and he ought to be liberally supported.

All meetings should have regular pastors. The self-supporting churches should choose their own pastors, those that are dependencies should have pastors selected for them.

Pastors ought to have no business except incidentally; the money paid them ought to be grace money, and not legal money. He ought to fill his office with ability and faithfulness. He must be willing to make sacrifices, and he should have both moral and financial support.

Where our future ministers are to come from depends on how the present ministry is appreciated.

No system must be tolerated that will abridge the Holy Ghost, or render the church unspiritual.

A subscription was then taken for the use of the Pastoral and Evangelistic Committee, which amounted to $456. Brother Deem, a minister of the M. E. Church, pronounced the benediction.

At 7.30 was held the Christian Endeavor Rally. The attendance was large, and the earnest enthusiasm was marked. The services were interspersed with spirited and spiritual songs, such as "Blessed be the dear Son of God," "Leaning on the everlasting arms," "Throw out the life-line," "Blessed assurance," "When the roll is called up yonder," "I'll live for him who died for me," and "We shall stand before the king."

The program was in charge of Charles E. Terrell. The devotional service was led by Charles Babcock, who after Scripture reading and prayer, spoke briefly from the text, "Ye shall receive power." About eighty brief pointed testimonies were given in a few minutes. Myrtle Lightner read her annual report, which was well prepared, and full of encouraging information. She was greeted by the great audience with the "Chautauqua Salute," in recognition of her four years of satisfactory service.

Albert J. Brown, of Indianapolis, was then introduced and gave the address of the evening. He compared the Christian Endeavor in its development of individualism, freedom, and union to the ancient New England town meeting.

Ella M. Barrett and Levi Mills, two of our delegates to Detroit, gave glowing accounts of the great international convention.

"God be with you" was then sung, and the benediction was pronounced by J. H. Douglas.

Third-day, 10 a.m.—Prayer was offered by Esther Cook, and "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me" was sung.

A few minutes were given to Nathan Frame to introduce a "Book of Reminiscences," about to be published by himself.

An account of the Bible Conference held a few days since at Earlham College was read, and an invitation was extended to this meeting to co-operate with Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings in providing for and holding such a conference the coming year. The invitation was promptly accepted, and a committee of five was appointed to have the care of our part of the work.

Portions of a report of the Joint Committees on Indian Affairs were read, and this meeting was asked to assume some share in the expense attending this work, and our delegates were instructed to make an appropriation for that purpose.

Allen Jay and John Watson addressed the meeting briefly on the work among the Indians.

The meeting was dismissed by Allen Jay.

The meeting at 2 p.m. was given up to the Home and Foreign Mission Work. After the singing of "All hail the power of Jesus' name," Samuel C. Mills led in prayer. The report of the Home Mission Committee was read. More than 5,000 pages of literature have been distributed; many hundred family visitations have been made, and $528 have been expended in the work.

Amos Cook was called upon to give a brief account of the work among the mountain meetings of Tennessee.

The clerk then read a communication from the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions, also a letter from M. M. Binford, telling of an Ecumenical Council of Missions soon to be held in New York, in which Friends are to be represented. Ellen C. Wright and John Henry Douglas spoke in explanation of the work of the board. Its plan was approved, and Charles E. Terrell and Ellen C. Wright were continued to represent us on the Board.

Reports were read from the Foreign Mission Committee, and from the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, telling of the sending of Mattie Hadley to Alaska, and of other work in that mission field.

The committees have expended $539.81. Caroline N. Hunnicutt then told of the origin and work of the Kotzebue Mission.

A subscription was then taken up. Allen Jay asked for the subscription, and while it was being taken with much enthusiasm, someone handed a small sum to Amos Cook for David Sanders, of Tennessee. A spontaneous contribution for him followed, and more than thirty-five dollars were put into the hat, people coming in with their contributions from all over the audience.

At 10 a.m. on Fourth-day, the closing session of the yearly meeting was opened with prayer by Eli G. Parker.

An epistle prepared by a committee, and addressed to the other yearly meetings was read and approved; also a synopsis of the epistles addressed to this meeting, prepared for publication in our minutes, also a minute on the state of Society.

The report of the delegates was read, and with some alteration adopted. Appropriations were made amounting to $1,850. James H. Terrell, Levi Mills, Abigail J. Hadley, Eliza H. Thorne, and J. B. Wright were appointed to co-operate with the committee of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings in arranging for and holding a Bible Conference at Earlham next summer.

The concluding minute was read, and the meeting was dismissed by David Hadley.

The meetings for worship held during the week of yearly meeting were characterized by sound, wholesome and able preaching, and by the earnestness and devotion of those who testified by the hundreds, to the goodness of the Lord. Praise meetings were held in the auditorium almost every day at 8.30 a.m. and 1 p.m. Most of these meetings were in charge of Esther Cook who attended the yearly meeting by the invitation of our Evangelistic Committee, who desired to introduce unity of effort into the evangelistic services of the yearly meeting.

Several of the night sessions were given up to the preaching of the gospel, and on First-day five sessions of meetings for worship were held in the auditorium, and both before noon and after, there was preaching at the college, and at two stands on the grounds.

Probably 12,000 people were present. On the whole, the yearly meeting was one greatly blessed of the Lord from beginning to end.

NEW EVERY MORNING.

Yesterday now is a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf which God holds tight,
With glad days and sad days and bad days which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fullness of sunshine and sorrowful night.

Let them go, since we cannot relive them—
Cannot undo and cannot atone;
God in His mercy receive, forgive them;
Only the new days are our own—
To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain;
And 'spite of old sorrow and older sinning,
And puzzles forecasted and possible pain,
Take heart with the day and begin again.

—Susan Coolidge.

and yet stays home on election day.

News from the Field.

Edwin Markham, the author of "The Man with a Hoe," was at Haverford Meeting on First-day, the 27th inst. He has been visiting for a few days at the home of James M. Price, at Overbrook, Pa. He is much interested in Friends.

M. M. Binford returned to his home, in Brooklyn, on the 28th, much improved and strengthened by his summer rest, to enter upon his work again.

Oscar Roberts writes from Johannesburg that his work is interesting and prospering. He says that the political condition is critical, as we all know from the newspapers.

Glenwood, Iowa, Eighth month 22d, 1899.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

I left Cordoba, South America, Seventh month 18th, came to Buenos Ayres on the 19th, spent the 20th with George Allen and wife and Ernest Haycock and Charles W. Wilson, missionaries, and on Seventh month 21st sailed from Laplatia, thirty miles east of south, on the "Clyde" of the Royal Mail Line, for Rio de Janeiro, which was reached late in the evening of the 25th, and on the 29th sailed for New York on the "Buppon" of Lamport and Holt Line, where we landed Eighth month 17th, after making one call in the West Indies for coal. I am in good health, having made the entire trip without seasickness. From New York I came directly home, reaching here on the 20th, where I find my wife still in very poor health, but some hope for the better. I can truly say the Lord's blessing has rested on me all the time since leaving my home until my return. Praise be to Him.

Truly,

WM. MARSHALL.

Wishing to be remembered within the bounds of Christian brotherhood and sisterhood, we will give a brief history of our church, which is situated a mile east of Winchester, Randolph County, Ind., which is called White River. We have a membership of about 180 members and a flourishing Sabbath School of about 75 scholars. Our superintendent is Luzena Haworth, our secretary is Meda Cox, our residing ministers are Olynthus Cox and Silas Cox. Our dear sister, Belle Kenworthy, came in the Second month, and held a series of meetings. There were 63 conversions and renewals. Praise the Lord for His wonderful works to the children of men. Our prayer is that the Lord may bless our dear sister's labor and give her souls for her hire.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Motor, Iowa.—The ten days' tabernacle meeting held here by Edwin Loft, assisted by James B. Pickard, was blessed of the Lord in the conversion of sinners, renewal of backsliders, and the filling with the spirit of God's people who attended the meeting. About 30 souls were blessed and helped of the Lord. This is the second meeting that Edwin Loft has held here. The one last winter resulted in 34 souls being blessed and 16 uniting with the church. The church has been revived, and has taken on new life. A house is being built for the pastor. James B. Pickard, of Pleasant Plain, has been called to be pastor for the coming year. The tabernacle is now at Milo, Warren County, Iowa. The meeting opened well and with good interest, and we are believing for a good work to be done by the help of the Lord.

EDWIN LOFT AND WIFE.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting has just had a feast of good things at the Quarterly Meeting held at South Starksboro, Vt. Elmer D. Gilderslieve, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., came at the instance of the Evangelistic Committee of the Yearly Meeting, and Emilie U. Burgess kindly responded to a special invitation. Both these dear friends were very acceptably with us. The hymn, "All for Jesus," was sung at the opening, and was the theme of that meeting. Emilie U. Burgess told of a woman who kept a light for her husband who was out one cold stormy night, but she had occasion to go into another room, and took the light with her just for a few minutes. The result was that during that brief moment the husband, who was watching the light on his homeward journey, lost his way and wandered all that dreadful night while his wife was in agonies because of his delay. All can make the application.

On First-day morning the crowds came together as usual. A window was removed, and E. D. Gilderslieve stood there and preached the everlasting gospel to those outside as well as in from the words, "This same Jesus," and then Abbie J. Birdsall sang a solo to the admiration of many. In the interim lunch was partaken of by the groups gathered about. Mary A. Young's bountiful hospitality, as usual, is worthy of especial notice.

E. U. Burgess gave an interesting address to a full house in the evening on "Peace and Arbitration," and another the following evening at Monkton Ridge, and again at North Ferrisburg, to appreciative audiences, while E. D. Gilderslieve tarried a little to sing the blessed gospel in private to some sick or needy souls.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

West Elkton, Ohio.—Friends at West Elkton have recently completed the work of remodeling and furnishing their house. The building had, for several years, been in need of repairs, but not until nearly a year ago were any definite steps taken in that direction. Through the earnest and persistent efforts of our pastor, Hiram Wollam, with a few others aggressive members, Friends were induced to begin the work. The house was formerly arranged according to the old style of Friends' meeting houses, but it has been arranged in accordance with modern ideas of church building and furnishing. The work on the main room was completed in February at a cost of near $1,100, all of which was provided for on and before the day of dedication. The smaller north room, which may be thrown into and used in connection with the main room, has been recently furnished at a cost of $100, one-half of which has been raised by the Christian Endeavor Society. Through all this work the Lord has blessed us, and we now have a place of meeting of which no one need be ashamed.

Directly after the main room was completed, a two weeks' meeting was held under the direction of Myron Hartley. The meetings were well attended and much interest manifested. Two persons professed conversion, and one united in membership with Friends. Others were strengthened in the faith. Since then seventeen others have come into the church, and others are looking this way. For a number of years many of our members have lacked interest in the work of the church, and failed to contribute to its support. Some were opposed to the support of a pastor amongst us. After nearly two years' trial we can say that the added interest in the church, and the hearty support given by the membership testify to the success of the pastoral system with us.

MARMADUKE STAFFORD.

Van Wert, Ohio.—Van Wert Quarterly Meeting was held the 5th and 6th of Eighth month. It was the last Quarterly Meeting before the Yearly Meeting when the annual reports are sent up. There was an increased interest in nearly all departments of the church work. We have eleven meetings in the Quarter, all of them built up in the last twenty years, and most of the meetings have no members that were raised in the church or knew anything of Friends until they came in through the revival work. At least 2,000 members have been taken into the church in that way in this part of Ohio. Six meetings that were started have been abandoned or laid down because of insufficient care. There was a great field open to Friends if the church had been systematically organized and the pastoral work carefully done. Reaction set in and divisions and jealousy in the church a few years back seemed to discourage many, so that there was danger that the whole Quarterly Meeting might be lost to Friends. Such was the condition when I came to them a year and a half ago. But with slow, systematic work, we have tried to bring order out of chaos, and get confidence restored in the church. There is a better feeling than there has been for some time. During the last year we have had regular pastoral work in every meeting, and we have held revival services in all of the meetings except one; 120 have professed conversion or been reclaimed; 67 have been received into the church, and more than 300 names have been dropped from the list of membership, making over 500 dropped in two years. And yet when the statistics are gathered correctly we shall have about 900 members left in the Quarterly Meeting. I give these particulars for the lesson there is in them to our church. If we had a church whose members were all perfect then might we observe the fine but impractical theories of many who oppose systematic and pastoral work. But since there are no such churches, and will not be in this age, pastors, evangelists and teachers are absolutely necessary for the best interests of the church. The Christian Endeavor interest has more than doubled the past year. The interest in the Sabbath School work is increasing.

J. O. Binford, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral Work, was with us, and preached some very practical and edifying sermons.

Eli F. Brown, of Indianapolis, addressed the young people at their Christian Endeavor rally on Sabbath afternoon, which was the closing exercise of the Quarterly Meeting, when all agreed that it was the best Quarterly Meeting we have had for years. F. C. Stanley was reappointed superintendent of the pastoral and evangelistic work for the coming year. One thing more I have wanted to say to Friends for a long time: Every pastor should be made an agent for THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and keep up the canvass for subscribers the whole year, for there is no agency that so fully supplements the faithful pastor's work as to have it read by the membership.

F. C. STANLEY.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Ella C. Veeder, who has for some years been active and earnest in the field of work in California Yearly Meeting, is now confined at home caring for an invalid father.

The work at Alamitos is going successfully on, and the meeting is in a prosperous condition. Tilman Hobson is pastor at this place.

Pasadena Quarterly Meeting was held Seventh month 22d and 23d. Beside the ministers belonging to the meeting, Stewart Noble, of Ohio, was with us with timely messages of Gospel truth. The meetings of this Quarter are scattered from San Francisco to San Diego County, and work is in pioneer fields find room for all their energies. Four of our young workers have just gone to engage in mission work in San Francisco—Esther Smith, of Long Beach, Lillian Abbott, Jeanette Bounalie and Anne Trueblood, of Pasadena. The two first-named were in the work of the mission known as "Silent Workers" in San Francisco last year. Two members of Pasadena, Robert and Carrie Samms, are missionaries above the Arctic Circle, Alaska, and another, Charles C. Reynolds, is with a mining Company at Cape Moore, Alaska, so that our interests are almost co-extensive with the western coast of North America. Letters from our missionaries at Kotzebue Sound, Alaska, written in Third month, report them well and the work in hopeful condition. Robert and Carrie Samms made a trip up the Kowak River, in Twelfth month and First month, visiting the natives of the interior, preaching to them and teaching them as opportunity offered. The trip required over three hundred miles of travel with snowshoes and dog-sleds, a pretty severe undertaking for a woman when the thermometer ranges to 60 degrees below zero, and no place for protection from storms except their sleeping bag. At Penelope Camp, 150 miles up the river, C. C. Reynolds and Dr. Coffin, with their party, were wintering. They had built a mission building, and were faithfully teaching the natives located near them. Robert Samms and C. C. Reynolds went over 100 miles further up the river, visiting other camps and investigating the opportunities for further missionary work. Anne Hunnicutt had sole charge of the work at Cape Blossom while Robert and Carrie Samms were absent. During Third month she was married to Edward Foster, a young man who accompanied one of the mining parties, to Alaska. C. C. Reynolds during Fourth and Fifth months led a party across the country to Cape Nouve, an expedition that came near ending disastrously. At one time he was thrown into a stream of water and ice, and was carried over two miles in the rapids before he could extricate himself. At another time the party was carried by the swift current on an extemporized raft, under an ice arch over a stream, and barely escaped with their lives. Their provisions nearly failed them, and they were obliged to live in part on roots of wild herbs.

San Diego.—I want to send the glad tidings to all who read

THE AMERICAN FRIEND of the victory which many hearts have known, in a complete surrender and reception of the Holy Ghost, through the teaching of Charles H. Stalker, in a series of meetings which he has held in this place, and through the power of the blessed Holy Spirit. I cannot tell the number who have thus been blessed, but it has not been a few. Last First-day we had a Sabbath school in the morning, and at 11 a.m. and 7.30 p.m. a Friends' meeting, which will, by the grace of God, be continued, so Friends coming to Southern California for their health or to enjoy our beautiful climate will find a Friends' Church at San Diego.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Smithfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Bolton, Mass., on the 10th inst. Notwithstanding the fact that a heavy rain commenced falling at the hour for the meeting, a large audience was present. The venerable Nathan Douglas, of Durham, Maine, led in the service and preached a characteristic sermon with all his old-time fervor. Charles H. Jones, of Amesbury, Mass., Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Gospel Work, was also present, and delivered a very practical discourse based on the words found in Acts 4: 12: "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Only routine business claimed the attention of Friends in the second meeting. Several spoke very highly of the value of THE AMERICAN FRIEND as a church paper, and the clerks of the monthly meetings were encouraged to contribute items of news for its columns, and to endeavor to increase its circulation. Near the close of the meeting Nathan Douglas made a short address in which he said that he never expected to visit Smithfield Quarter again, and bade Friends a touching farewell. He attended Worcester Meeting the following Sabbath and went from there to Lynn to attend Salem Quarterly Meeting.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Plainfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Plainfield, Indiana, Eighth month 5th, 1899. Rebecca W. Flagler, a minister, of Farmington Monthly Meeting, New York, with her husband, Arthur Flagler, and Calvin Bray, of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, were in attendance.

The practical gospel truths presented were listened to with interest. Many testimonies were given, full of appreciation for the visits and words of these dear Friends.

The usual routine work, including statistics, answers to the queries, and matters to be forwarded to the yearly meeting, were passed upon.

It was decided to grant the request made by Indianapolis Monthly Meeting that the quarterly meeting be held at that place in the eleventh and second months of each year.

The trustees of Central Academy presented their annual report, and the good condition of the school during the past year was very gratifying. The school is under the care of twelve trustees, appointed by the four quarterly meetings of Plainfield, White Lick, Fairfield and Danville. It merits the generous support it receives from the students of these meetings. The enrollment the past year—105—was the largest it has ever had. The graduating class numbered 24.

J. Freeman Cox, the efficient acting principal of last year, has been employed as Principal to succeed Robert L. Kelly, who enters upon other educational work.

The need of a more complete and modern reference library was mentioned, and efforts will be made to add needed books and apparatus to meet the requirements of the school, and make it what it should be.

The school year begins Ninth month 26th, 1899, with prospects of a good attendance. E.

BIBLICAL INSTITUTE OF KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

The Biblical Institute of Kansas Yearly Meeting was held at Northbranch, Kansas, from Eighth month 1st to 6th, inclusive. The sessions were well attended by Friends and others in the community. The speakers were all present except one, and the program was carried out with but few changes.

The devotional services at the beginning of each session and the evening sermons were times of rejoicing and spiritual uplifting, and the Holy Spirit enabled the hearers as well as the speakers to comprehend the words of Truth.

Eliza Carey, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic Work; Laura Coppock, from Stella, and Elisha Janeway, from Pleasant View Quarterly Meeting, were in attendance.

The following are some of the best thoughts of the speakers:

Nathan Brown, Barclay, Kansas, "Friends' Church History." To understand Quakerism one must understand the character of George Fox. The persecution of the early Friends always awakened benevolent, never malevolent feelings. President Edmund Stanley, of Friends' University. The Friends' Church grew out of the necessity of the times, and developed as occasion demanded. The Friends' Church never made a minister, but only recognizes what God has done. Each believer may come to God for himself without an intermediate personage. Peace on earth, good will to men, means what it says; hence, Quakerism stands for peace. The idea of doing something to be saved has pervaded the mind of man since his earliest existence. Thus plainness of dress and speech came to be nothing more than an outward form, simply doing something to merit salvation. No outward demonstration is pleasing to God unless it is a real heart service.

On "External Evidences of Inspiration," he said: "Human testimony and experience is the strongest evidence of Christianity, the most positive proof of inspiration. Every advantage which we as a civilized nation possess over the heathen nations we owe to the Bible. Christianity restores woman to the place she should occupy, and child-life is made sacred by it. Wherever it touches life or human activities, government, prophecy or science, the Bible has never made a mistake."

Gilbert Bowles, of Penn College—"Responsibility of the Church to Foreign Missions." It is not only a privilege, but a duty, of the church to send the Gospel to the heathen; like money given to us to hand to a friend, so it must be given to those for whom it was designed. Human brotherhood demands we should teach them a better way of living, and give them a moral standard. "The church is not a field to be tended, but a force to be wielded." The home should be a center of Gospel life. If we feel the worth of a human soul, we will have a motive for bringing all to Christ. Merely believing that Christ is the Son of God does not save one. Justification is a result of faith. Sanctification is the act of God by which man is made holy. The Christian Endeavor and Sabbath School, temperance and mission work, are to the church what the colleges are to the university."

William S. Wooton, Lawrence, Kansas, spoke on "Elements of Successful Ministry," as follows: "A minister must keep in close companionship with God; must know the nature of sin; should be a teacher; should be social and able to command the respect of all."

In one of the evening sermons he talked on the evil effects of bad literature, and gave a history of the establishment of the publishing association of Friends.

A paper on "The Pastor in the Society of Friends," prepared by Josiah Butler, was read by Nathan Brown.

The following are some of the thoughts presented: The church would do well to acknowledge the gift of a pastor; authority and power comes by service rendered in the fulness of the spirit; they that preach the Gospel should live the Gospel; ministers must be led by the Spirit to avoid confusion; one of the important duties of the pastor is to discern and bring out the gifts of the members of his flock.

Minnie P. Bowles, Oskaloosa, Iowa: "The Sabbath school is the pioneer of the church, especially in the new and heathen countries, and helps to make material for it. The Sabbath school is to the church what the common school is to the State."

Rose H. Roberson, Northbranch Academy: "No school should be content with simply doing work within itself, but should contribute to missionary work." She emphasized the importance of grading the Bible School."

In the discussion on "Cardinal Doctrines of Friends," the subject of "Oaths and Affirmations" was especially dwelt upon. The Board of the Biblical Institute was directed to ask Kansas Yearly Meeting to petition our State Legislature that the clause requiring the administration of legal oaths and affirmations be stricken from our State statutes.

CONVICT LABOR IN THE SOUTH.

In reading over your article of Eighth month 3d, "The Treatment of Criminals in the Southern States," "The Chain Gang" and "The Contract System," etc., I thought your readers would be pleased to know that this subject is engaging the attention of thoughtful men in the south, and even many who are not addicted to much serious thought have been shocked by the horrors of this vicious system. Florida is a very large exporter of valuable phosphates; many of these mines are deep holes down in the ground, with a burning, almost vertical, sun in summer beaming down on those poor fellows surrounded by mud and water (none of it fit to drink), and scarcely a breath of air, their food generally of the cheapest and coarsest kind, and their lodging scarcely fit for beasts, with a taskmaster over them often with loaded pistols, ready, if they make any resistance. As these parties who work these phosphate beds generally hire the convicts from the state, it is their interest to make out of them all they can.

So this cruel, vicious, degrading system has gone on for a number of years, but the legislature at its late session took up the subject. I have just seen our senator. He says: "The legislature had a report from the 'Convict Camps,' showing the abuses of some of them, and they appointed a commissioner whose duty it is to visit all the camps every thirty or sixty days, and if any are badly treated to cancel the contract. Then a commission was appointed to inquire into the whole subject, and report to the next legislature some better mode of managing the state convicts."

In our own County—Osceola—of which Kissimmee is the county town, criminals convicted and sentenced for sixty or ninety days, etc., and left in care of our county officers, are treated very differently. Riding lately over a new road carefully graded and rounded up—a credit to any new country—I remarked to my traveling companion: "This road must have cost the county a good deal of money." "Oh, no!" he says, "the prisoners sentenced to the county jail for short periods did it," and others confirmed the statement.

Riding in the opposite direction a little time back, I saw the same operation going on.

Also the streets of our city are improved by tramps and offenders sentenced for short terms. As there seems no cruelty or injustice in this, perhaps it may lead to the betterment of the condition of the state convicts, especially as the public feeling seems to be fully aroused.

News and Events.

In accordance with Secretary Root's last order ten new regiments of volunteers are to be recruited. This will give the army a numerical strength of 95,000 men, which is within 5,000 of the total permitted by the recent army act. The last Congress, it will be remembered, provided for the enlistment of 65,000 regulars and 35,000 volunteers. The complement of regulars has been secured, and twenty-three regiments of volunteers, with thirteen hundred men to a regiment, have been raised or are in process of formation. About 15,000 men have been secured for the ten regiments organized under the order of July 5th, 1899. The War Department intends to provide for operations in the Philippines a fighting force of 63,000 men, or twice as many as General Otis demanded in the spring. The increased activity in the War Department is presumably due in a large measure to the administration of Secretary Elihu Root. Reports from the Philippines state that the rebels are as determined as ever, and if anything more thoroughly prepared to resist American advances than heretofore. In Manila, press dispatches say that talk of ending the war deals no longer with weeks, but with months, and even years. The territory occupied by the Americans is very small, and with the disadvantages of the rainy season to contend against no permanent gain seems possible on the part of our troops until fall.

President Kruger has replied to the demands of Colonial Secretary Chamberlain, and while the text of the communication has not been made public, it is understood to be wholly unsatisfactory. Secretary Chamberlain requested a Joint Commission of Inquiry to examine and report on the Franchise act and its effects in affording representation to the Outlanders. According to report, President Kruger ignored the request and submitted counter-proposals of his own. This action is in entire accordance with the character of the wily Boer diplomat and is a matter of no surprise, though it must generally be regretted that such obstinacy brings the chances for war nearer than before. Boers and British are making every preparation for war, and troops on both sides are being rushed to the frontier. Outlanders are leaving the Transvaal, and it is believed that fighting will soon begin. The Queen is said to be particularly averse to a war, wishing to end her days in peace, but the tone of her speech on recently proroguing Parliament, was distinctly militant, and her inability to stem the tide of English feeling, which appears to increasingly favor war, may hasten the bursting of the war cloud. England's demand of the Transvaal, over which she has a suzerainty, is: Equal rights for the Outlanders, or British subjects, in the Transvaal, after a reasonable length of residence therein, and such representation in the Boer Parliament as will give them effective means for the redress of grievances and for the security of civil rights.

The Dreyfus trial at Rennes, France, continues to transcend in interest all other news of the day. The proceedings of the court martial, last week, were galvanized into new life by the return of Maître Labori, counsel for the accused. His recovery, after being shot, has been remarkably rapid, and there has been general rejoicing that he is again able to appear in public. The events of the Rennes trial, last week, were full of absorbing interest. The partiality of Colonel Jouaust for the prosecution was very evident when, on the 21st, he refused Colonel Picquart opportunity to be heard when it was his undoubted right to speak on a pertinent question. Colonel Picquart is one of Dreyfus' staunchest supporters, and his testimony has been of particular value to the defence. The past week has marked a decided change in the attitude of Dreyfus. Hitherto he has confined himself, when questioned, to impassioned protestations of his innocence, but he now replies argumentatively and in a calm voice to the various points raised by the witnesses. General Mercier, who is perhaps the bitterest enemy of Dreyfus, was again called to the witness box and was subjected to a severe and withering cross-examination by Labori. The latter, however, was greatly handicapped by Mercier's refusal to testify to important and self-condemning questions. In this he was supported by Jouaust. The most discouraging feature of the trial is still the evident opposition of the judges and their sympathy with the prosecution.

The National Afro-American Council and the National Association of Colored Women have been holding their annual conventions in Chicago. The "Council," which was organized at Rochester, N. Y., two years ago, is a small body, but it includes nearly all of the foremost negroes in the country. Among the subjects considered at the meetings of the Council were lynching, and the condition generally of the negroes in the South; Bishop Turner's plan for the deportation of negroes to Africa, and political questions of the day. It is pertinent to note that Bishop Turner's suggestion was almost invariably condemned. A striking incident of the convention was a resolution condemning Booker T. Washington and striking his name from the books. His advice to the negroes to leave politics alone and go to work proved unpalatable to his fellow members, and they accordingly took steps to resent his interference. It is safe to say that this opposition will only increase the popularity of Booker T. Washington among his white friends, and it cannot well injure his valuable services to his own race.

ONE CIGAR A DAY.

"How can you afford all these books?" asked a young man calling upon a friend; "I can't seem to find spare change for even the leading magazines."

"Oh, that library is only my one cigar a day," was the reply.

"What do you mean?" inquired the visitor.

"Mean? Just this: When you advised me to indulge in an occasional cigar several years ago I had been reading about a young fellow who bought books with the money that others would have burned in cigars, and I thought I would try and do the same. You may remember that I said I should allow myself one cigar a day?"

"Yes, I recall the conversation, but don't quite see the connection."

"Well, I never smoked, but I put by the price of a five cent cigar every day; and as the money accumulated, I bought books—the very books you see."

"You don't mean to say that your books cost no more than that! Why there are dollars' worth of them!"

"Yes, I know there are. I had six years more of my apprenticeship to serve when you advised me 'to be a man.' I put by the money, which, at five cents a day, amounted to $18.25 a year, or $109.50 in six years. I keep these books by themselves as the result of my apprenticeship cigar money; and if you had done as I did, you would, by this time, have saved many, many more dollars than I have, and you would have been better off in health and self-respect besides."—"Commonwealth."

WHAT THEY ARE.

Composition of the Famous New Food.

A widespread interest has been created among good livers as to the composition of Grape-Nuts, the new food that has come into popular use of late. It has long been known to physicians, chemists and food experts that the starchy portion of the entire wheat flour and barley is transformed into a true and very choice sugar by the act of intestinal digestion in the human body. This sugar is identical with and is known as grape-sugar, and it is in condition for immediate transformation into blood and the necessary structure from which the delicate nerve centres are built up.

A food expert of the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., Battle Creek, Mich., followed a line of experiments until he produced the food called Grape-Nuts, of which grape-sugar forms the principal part, and it is produced by following out Nature's processes, in a mechanical way. That is, heat, moisture and time are the methods employed and directed by scientific facts gained in research.

Grape-Nuts are probably entitled to the claim to be the most perfectly adapted food for human needs now extant. Certain it is that the user's delight in the flavor and the perfect action of intestinal digestion during the use of Grape-Nuts is satisfying, and the added strength of body confirms the fact.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES.

Several of the new municipal governments set up by the Americans in Luzon are reported to have collapsed, because of the treachery of the Filipino mayors.

A general strike is feared in Havana that will tie up business for a fortnight. Employees have had steady work for months, have saved money, and for the sake of a rest are ready to join a sympathy strike to support the masons.

Maitre Labori, on the 26th, scored some very strong points for the defence by exposing the methods of army officers in aiding the prosecution. The arrest of General Mercier is said to be among the probabilities.

The Atbara bridge across the Nile was successfully opened on the 26th. This bridge was built by a Philadelphia firm, the English constructors being unable to complete the contract in the time given.

On the 21st the business portion of Victor, Colorado, was entirely destroyed by fire, the loss being estimated at $2,000,000.

The city of New York is greatly stitied by the efforts of a private corporation to secure a franchise for supplying water to the municipality at a ruinously high rate. The "Ramapo deal," as it is called, is stigmatized as a "huge swindle." It is said to be engineered by Tammany politicians.

Two rival French expeditions in Africa, when meeting recently, clashed arms. Several volleys were exchanged and eleven men killed. No satisfactory explanation has been given for the quarrel.

It is rumored that the Democratic National Convention may be held in February next year.

The beef trust has forced the prices of meat to a higher point than has been known for ten years.

M. Guerin, president of the Anti-Semite League in Paris, and his companions, remain barricaded in the headquarters of the League. The building is in a state of siege, and is closely watched by a large force of police.

A conspiracy to overthrow the administration of President Sam, of Hayti, is reported to have been discovered and promptly suppressed.

The Sultan of the Sulu Islands has signed an agreement by which American sovereignty is recognized over his kingdom.

The bubonic plague recently broke out in Oporto, Portugal. The government has announced its intention to establish a sanitary cordon around the city to restrict the spread of the plague.

The Atlanta "Journal" instances some queer claims against the government. A Chicago man, named Taylor, asked Congress for several sessions to give him $100,000 for having suggested to President Lincoln the idea of issuing greenbacks. One Colonel de Arnaud made repeated demands for $50,000 for having shown General Grant how to capture the town of Paducah, Kentucky. An Iowa man wanted $350 for cutting corns of sailors and soldiers during the rebellion. Another, from New York, wanted $25 for a pair of trousers which were eaten off a clothes-line by a government goat. A fellow in Minnesota requested the sum of $550 for a sky-blue horse taken by the soldiers.

GETTYSBURG, LURAY, WASHINGTON.

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

Over the battlefield of Gettysburg, through the picturesque Blue Mountains, via Hagerstown and Antietam, and down the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley to the unique Caverns of Luray; thence across the rolling hills of Northern Virginia to Washington, is the route of this tour—a section of the country intensely interesting from both a historic and a scenic standpoint.

The tour will leave New York 7.00 a.m., and Philadelphia 12.20 p.m., Saturday, September 16th, in charge of one of the company's tourist agents, and will cover a period of five days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the trip throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $25 from New York, $24 from Trenton, $22 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents, Tourist Agent, 1193 Broadway, New York; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

NATIONAL EXPORT EXPOSITION, PHILADELPHIA.

Reduced Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The National Export Exposition, which opens at Philadelphia on September 14th, and continues until November 30th, will be the most interesting and important event occurring in Philadelphia since the Centennial Exhibition in 1876. In addition to its valuable commercial exhibits it will present many features of popular interest and amusement. The United States Marine Band, Sousa's Band, the Banda Rossa, Innes' Band, Damrosch's Orchestra, and other celebrated bands will furnish music alternately, and a Midway Plaisance, equal if not superior to the famous World's Fair Midway at Chicago, and comprising a Chinese Village, a Chinese Theatre, acrobats, and customs; an Oriental Village, London Ghost Show, Hagenbeck's Wild Animal Show, Blarney Castle, and many other unique presentations, will furnish abundant and diversified amusement. Arrangements have also been made for Mandolin, Guitar, and Banjo Concerts, and for a grand chorus from the German Singing Societies.

For this occasion the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion tickets from all points on its line, to Philadelphia and return, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip plus price of admission. These tickets will be sold during the continuance of the Exposition and will be good for return passage until November 30th.

For specific rates and additional information apply to nearest Ticket Agent.

The largest flower in the world, it is said, is the bolo, which grows on the island of Mindanao, one of the Philippine group. It has five petals, measuring nearly a yard in width, and a single flower has been known to weigh twenty-two pounds. It grows on the highest pinnacle of the land, about 2,000 feet above the level of the sea.

"THE GERMAN BAPTISTS."

The singular sects of European origin that are among the very best citizens of Pennsylvania, assemble in vast crowds to thank God for having been preserved and cared for all winter. The women prepare the meals, and there is an abundance of food. Some of the festivals are private. These include the holy kiss and the feet-washing. First there is a rigid examination to see that no brother or sister bears ill will to another. When the holy kiss is passed one woman kisses the woman sitting next to her, and she turns her face and kisses the next, and so through all the pews occupied by women. The men who sit together do the same thing.

Feet-washing they take from the gospels, their object being to get as near to the customs of our Lord and His apostles as possible. The richest, like the poorest, removes his shoes and stockings and has his two feet washed and dried. Then in silent prayer he goes upon his knees on the bare floor, and does the same for the poorest laborer, washing his feet with water, and cleansing them in humility. Strangers are not allowed at these meetings, simply because they would detract from the solemnity of the service. The bishop washes the feet of the men, and the elders assist in it. Usually the owners of estates wash the feet of the poor. The aged wives of the elders, after being blessed and encouraged by the bishop, carry on the sacrament of feet-washing for the women folks. A wooden or earthen basin is used. The mistress humbly washes the feet of her maidservant. They gird themselves with towels after the manner of our Lord. They read St. John 13: 1-17, pour water into a basin, and then they pass cups of water and small pieces of bread.

The Methodists obtained their love-feast rites from these people, Wesley having partaken with them in his travels in Germany. While these meals are served in the basement of the church, all travelers, wayfarers, tramps, homeless people, and gypsies are made welcome under the surrounding trees and fed plentifully.—"Christian Advocate."

A SECOND CHANCE.

In Florence, one of the treasures of art admired by thousands of visitors is Michel Angelo's representation in marble of the young David. The shepherd boy stands with firm foothold, the stone grasped tightly in his right hand, ready to be sped on its holy errand. When the statue was unveiled, three hundred and fifty years ago, it caused an unparalleled sensation among all lovers of art. The work is, indeed, a marvelous piece of sculpture.

But the strangely winning thing in the story of that statue is that it was the stone's second chance. A sculptor began work on a noble piece of marble, but, lacking skill, he only hacked and marred the block. It was then abandoned as spoiled and worthless, and cast aside. For years it lay in a back yard, soiled and blackened, half-hidden among the rubbish. At last Angelo saw it and at once perceived its possibilities. Under his skillful hand, the stone was cut into the fair and marvelous beauty which appears in the statue of David.

In a like manner, when a life has been spoiled by unskillful and unscrupulous hands, so that it seems as if all were lost, there is One, the great Sculptor, who can

But what if the ruined man refuses the second chance, and will not endure the blows from the Sculptor's hammer and the sharpness of his chisel?

Let not thy peace depend on the tongues of men.—Thomas a'Kempis.

J. A. Riis in the August "Atlantic," following his previous articles upon Tenement Houses and their owners and managers, takes up the question of the Tenant, who and what he is, and how shall he best be taken care of. He finds the slum tenants to be practically foreigners. Of these the majority at the present time are Italians, to whose characteristics and of those of the Jews, the next most numerous clientage, his paper is chiefly devoted.

POPULAR SUPERSTITIONS.

Several years ago the inmates of a small, respectable dwelling-house in Philadelphia discovered upon the whitewashed wall of one of the rooms the likeness of a human face, which faded and returned again. The neighbors came in to view the wonder. Other faces appeared and vanished. Crowds thronged the house and street, and accounts were printed in the daily papers.

It was to no purpose that scientific men insisted that the figures were caused by moldy growths which came and went with the dampness, and that the likeness to the human face was imaginary. The house was pronounced by the public to be haunted, and the owner was unable to find a tenant for it for years.

About the same time another mystery came to light in one of the mountain counties of Pennsylvania, and commanded public attention. It was a pane of glass in the window of a farmhouse, in which appeared the face of a woman looking out.

She could be seen only by a person standing outside at a certain angle. At first it was declared to be the ghost of a former owner, but when the public took hold of the matter it was decided that each spectator saw a different ghost, that of the dead friend for whom he cared most. Many visitors made pilgrimages to inspect this defective pane of glass.

Nor is it only the ignorant who are moved by these cheap mysteries. One of the most stately mansions in Berkeley Square, in London, stood vacant for a long time because it was said to be haunted by ghosts, who appeared one at a time, night after night, in an attic window, with a single candle burning dimly beside them.

It was explained that the house had been left in the care of a crazy butler, who chose thus to exhibit the family portraits, one after another, to the public; but in spite of this explanation, the mansion could find no tenant, even among the educated class who occupied the houses of its grade.

Many of us are superstitious and alert to find mysteries in unlucky numbers, in spilled salt or haunted houses. There is a mystery behind each tree or stone or bit of matter—the power and wisdom of the Unknown; but we do not look for that.

IF you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; Macbeth's don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear pop, clash on the least provocation.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

IN THE BOWELS OF THE EARTH.

Few places of worship in England have more interest than the Miner's Sanctuary in the Mynydd Newydd coal-mine, near Swansea, Wales. Situated seven hundred and fifty feet below the surface of the earth, with four long rows of pibwood to sustain the roof, a rude desk on a large lump of coal for a pulpit, and a series of rough-hewn planks as "pews," it is indeed the strangest of the many strange bethels in wild Wales.

Every Monday morning, without a break for fifty-four years, the colliers have crowded into the novel apartment to ask the blessing of Providence upon the week's work.

To the eldest miner present the conduct of the service is customarily intrusted, but regular ministers have not infrequently descended into the mine before the Monday's "turn" has commenced, and the whitewashed walls of the little chapel have resounded with that Celtic fervor which Welshmen speak of as the hywl (which no irreverent Saxon should pronounce as howl).

One motto there is painted near the pulpit: Os nos heb ddim ser nid nos heb Dduw deyrusa dan wadnau Mynydd Curiog. Freely interpreted, that is: "If it is night without stars, it is not night without God, for He reigneth under the foundations of the mountain."

Whether it be ascribed to good luck, to good management, or the responsive protection of Providence, it is a fact that for the past half-century Mynydd Newydd Colliery has been singularly free from serious accidents.

THE MAN WITHIN THE MAN.

CREATION does not stop with the making of a perfect human body, wonderful as that is. The eye, with its delicate adjustment for vibrating to color rays; the ear, with its thousands of harp-strings stretched to beat in response to the waves of sound; the wonderful brain, reaching down through its myriad net-work of nerves that carry out and carry in the messages; the heart, with its intricate systems of veins and arteries for reaching every cell of the body—these are as perfect as material organs can be; and the work of material creation seems complete with the production of the human body. But, alas! that which is perfect and complete is ready to vanish away, and the body no sooner gets finished than it begins to run down and wear out and waste away. It has no future; no bud of farther hope lies within it. It is the most marvelous organism and the most perfect form in the visible creation, but it dies daily until it is reduced to the dust from which it is made.

If this body of death were the crown of creation then there would be only one word for it—failure. Make the body never so perfect, and it must still come woefully short of any worthy goal. In fact, we soon find that it is the man within the visible man that we really care for. It is not the hundred or more avoirdupois pounds of flesh that we love,—not the dust wreath—but the SELF that uses this visible form and speaks to us through it.

The creation and perfection of this man within are the highest ends of life so far as we have any revelation of them. This spirit of self can have but one origin—it must be born from above. It is not a thing of decaying flesh or of disintegrating matter, nor can it come from them. It comes from God, who is its home, and its perfection must go on by a divine plan—according to the law of the spirit of life which was in Christ Jesus. Like anything else, it grows by what it feeds on. It has its hungers and its thirsts which must be satisfied with real things, not with shadows.

It is clearly evident that a spiritual self cannot be forced; it must make its own choices. Its life must be formed by its own resolves and decisions. It goes up or down as it chooses. The light shines for it, the gifts of God are all about it, the heavenly visions are granted it, the cords of an infinite love pull at it; but it decides for itself what its response shall be, and thus it chooses what its attainment shall be. The law of its being is to go from more to more. Every time it uses the light and appropriates the gift and sees the vision and responds to the love, it expands, and increases its range and scope. Every attainment is thus a prophecy of something more beyond. It can never come to its goal as the body does—that is, to the point where it must begin to run down—for its end and perfection is nothing short of likeness to Jesus Christ and the fullness of God. Its very imperfection is its glory, for it points it ever on to something which lies before. It is never left high and dry as a finished and completed thing with no more capacity for increase. The making of the man within the man is thus a continuous creation, and the desire to attain perfection is the measure of the man.

Body may go to pieces, but this spiritual self continues to be what it has made itself by its choices and its loves. The tree that grows toward the light forms its center of gravity on that side and finally falls toward the light. The soul that chooses to be a son of God may wait with perfect assurance for the time when Christ shall be seen as He is, and the likeness shall be completed.

THE YEARLY MEETING AND THE MEMBERSHIP AT LARGE.

ONLY a small proportion of our membership attends yearly meeting. Even in the most compact yearly meetings the business sessions are not large, while in those which cover an extensive territory it is naturally impossible that the bulk of the members should come. It is a misfortune to miss the opportunity of such gatherings, and those who never go at all are of necessity unable to enter fully into the spirit and work of the branch of the church to which they belong.

It is impossible, of course, for those who go to carry home to those who stay the spirit and the atmosphere and the enthusiasm of the meeting, but some means should be devised for bringing the work of the yearly meeting more clearly before the home members than is now done. Apparently the "minutes" of the yearly meeting are not very zealously or eagerly read by those who stay at home, and they hardly accomplish the purpose of carrying the business and the "burdens" of the yearly meeting home to its members.

The representatives from the quarterly meetings sometimes give verbal reports, which are good as far as they go, but they hardly meet the real case. What is wanted is something which will reach the home community. We would suggest for this purpose that, wherever it is possible and practicable, informal, social meetings should be arranged for in the various meeting houses as soon as convenient after the close of yearly meeting. At such meetings the work of yearly meeting could be gone over and considered. Those who were privileged to attend should carefully prepare themselves to impart as much as possible to those who could not go. The work of the several standing committees should be gone over and a brief outline or synopsis of it given, together with the needs and the prospects. All this committee work depends for its success upon the interest, the sympathy, the zeal, the liberality of the membership at large, and the fire should be kindled at once. Those who go to yearly meeting would find that their own interest in its work would greatly increase, if they made a business of studying these lines of work and telling them over again to the community at home. It would not do merely to read the reports—which are often rather dry reading—but it would be necessary to give an interesting glimpse and view of what is being done, and of what is needed from the membership. We would emphasize the fact that this meeting must be made an interesting occasion, or it will largely fail to accomplish the desired purpose. The spiritual power which is felt in the devotional meetings, in the meetings for worship, and in the illuminating addresses which are frequently heard during the sessions of the yearly meeting, cannot easily be carried away and handed on to others, but something may be done in this direction. Those whose lives have been quickened and deepened by great religious occasions and opportunities can give out something of this, and the ability to give out is the best proof of having received. If those who go to yearly meeting would always have in mind the thought of summing up its work and its message for the benefit of the non-attenders, they themselves would profit much by such concentration of attention, and it would be a wide blessing to the home communities, and in this way the yearly meeting may extend its value and influence and expand its work.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It has seemed wise to the sub-committee appointed to prepare the draft of a uniform Discipline for the American Yearly Meetings to abandon the idea of having it finished in time for the yearly meetings which come this autumn. It is so important to have each clause of such a Discipline carefully considered and matured before it goes beyond the hands of the committee, that it seems best to continue the work upon it somewhat longer than was contemplated, and particularly so since nothing will suffer by a few months' more delay. The general committee is scattered over the whole continent, and the work of consultation requires much time.

THE statement was made some months ago in THE AMERICAN FRIEND that the Philadelphia Missionary Association was endeavoring to raise $3,000 for the traveling expenses and salary of Gilbert and Minnie Picket Bowles, whom it wishes to send to Japan. The amount was incorrectly stated and should have been given as $1,500. The attention of all interested Friends is called not only to this correction of statement, but the need of funds for this purpose.

Fear is not cowardice. The ability to recognize danger and fear is a source of power. Cowardice consists in weakly yielding to fear, not in the fear itself. The man who says frankly he is afraid to drink liquor because of the danger he sees in it is no coward, but is wise in his fear. Those who sneer at him for cowardice, themselves claiming to know not what fear is, record themselves as lacking in true manhood and the stuff that makes heroes.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

It has been suggested that the four Congregational home missionary societies, now independent, be united under one head.

The Methodists in Utah have collated statistics with regard to the conversions from Mormonism, and say that the number has very greatly increased of late years.

The Mormon elder who spoke on Boston Common on the 20th ult., appeared again on the 27th and announced that Mayor Quincy had revoked his permit to speak.

It is interesting to note that there exists in France to-day a flourishing institution known as the Œuvre des Prêtres, the purpose of which is to educate former priests in the Catholic Church to become Protestant pastors and evangelists.

On the occasion of his birthday, recently, Dwight L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, was presented with a gift of a chapel at Mt. Hermon by his friends in Great Britain and America. The chapel is five miles distant from Northfield, Mass.

In Würtemberg there are at the present day 3,000 Waldensians, divided into ten congregations. These people are descended from Waldensians who were expelled from Italy in 1699. They are planning to celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of their settlement during the present fall.

The Jews in Palestine during the last half century have increased to nearly 50,000. In New York city there are now 350,000 Jews, while in 1812 there were only 1,000 in the entire United States. This increase, therefore, in the Holy Land is not in proportion to the gain of these people elsewhere.

A. Ben Oriel having left Palestine and settled permanently in Canada, has closed his house in Jerusalem and sold his goods at auction. It is stated that he leaves nothing to pass over to any other mission. This missionary to the Jews has been working for several years independent of any church board.

It is reported that the Pope is exercising his power in the Dreyfus case, so far as to endeavor to persuade the Jesuits to moderate their violence against the victim of the French church and army. It must be remembered that the present disturbances in France have largely to do with the ill-concealed animosity of the Catholics and Jews.

According to the "Protestant Missionary Directory of India" for 1899, the following are the statistics of missions in that land for the past year. The number of Baptist missionaries in India is 436, showing a decrease of 17; Congregationalists, 159, increase 8; Church of England, 528, increase 38; Presbyterians, 467, decrease 2; Methodists, 298, increase 23; Lutherans, 253, increase 68; Moravians, 27, increase 20; Society of Friends, 25, increase 4; independent missionaries, 400, increase 178; Salvation Army, 86. Total, 2,797; total increase, 329.

Following up the judgment of the Archbishop of Canterbury, regarding the use of incense and lights carried in procession, the Bishop of London has set an example by calling upon his clergy and congregations to "quickly abandon" their use. It is reported that nearly half the parish churches in England and Wales are more or less inclined to ritualism, while in 289 incense is known to be in present use.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE JOY OF BELIEF.

BY HENRY M. SANDERS.

"Believing we rejoice." Confidence is joy. Faith brings gladness. Trust is always a source of happiness.

The religion of Christ banishes gloom. It is a religion for the sorrowful, but not a sorrowful religion.

The conventional saint of mediæval legend, with pale countenance, wasted form, sour features and melancholy visage, is not the New Testament ideal. We are not more pleasing to God when we eat bitter aloe than when we eat honey; when we drink colocyath, than when we sup nectar. A foggy day is not more heavenly than one of sunshine, nor is a funereal march diviner music than joyous music is.

God Himself is called the Happy God, and godliness reproduces this beatific attractiveness. God means that His people should be happy and has commanded us to rejoice, so that we ought to ask God to forgive us for being sad as when we break any other commandment.

"With joy unspeakable," continues the apostle. Christian joy is a deep and silent thing. And that is the reason it is so often mistaken for its opposite. Because it is calm and grave the world thinks it severe. But "God approves the depth and not the tumult of the soul."

Happiness is a shallow, superficial word. It signifies what happens, what comes to us by hap or chance, what falls to our lot from without. It has reference to circumstances—depends largely on material welfare. But "joy" is a nobler word—a deep, serene and quiet thing—a "calm rapture" as Jonathan Edwards called it. There is nothing boisterous, tumultuous, hilarious about it. It doesn't express itself in laughter, nor sing comic songs. It is "joy unspeakable." Not a thing to be talked about. Its expression would never be likened to the "crackling of thorns under a pot."

Happiness and merriment are emotions determined by temperament, by circumstance; joy and blessedness depend on a soul which is in harmony with God, is satisfied with God—finds all its needs supplied in God.

The delights on the surface can be spoken and utter themselves in laughter, but joy lies too deep for smiles. The great river moves silently to the sea with equable flow; the shallow brook chatters among the pebbles.

True Christian joy is "glorified," says Peter—has the glory of heaven shining upon it, filling, suffusing, transfiguring it; saving it from frivolity and cheapness, exchanging the flimsy, fluttering wings of the butterfly for the strong, calm, mighty plumes of an angel. Christian joy is not jollity, the exuberance of animal spirits on which temperament and trouble put a damper. Even men not sanguine or buoyant in natural disposition may have the "joy of the Lord." The Gospel has power to make us rise superior to temperament and appropriate alien virtues. If it does not, it is difficult to see what good it does for us.

And similarly with depressing circumstances. Christianity has come on purpose to make us independent of them, to enable us to say, "Though the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herds in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord; I will joy in the God of my salvation."

The Bible finds no contradiction in saying, "As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." "We rejoice, though now for a season we are in heaviness." Our Lord was a "man of sorrows," but amid the shadows of the Cross He could speak about His "joy," and pray that it might be in His disciples. "He rejoiced in spirit."

Suffering men have often been the most joyful. Men in prison have known most of liberty. Those on beds of anguish have sung most loudly the hymns of triumph.

Richard Baxter, who was a life-long sufferer, with an incurable disease, and lived with one foot in the grave, as he said; who was persecuted for his religion and was condemned to prison for five years for preaching five sermons, declared amid his paroxysms of suffering, "I have pain, but I have peace," and wrote—not the book—"Is Life Worth Living?" but another, called "The Saints' Everlasting Rest," which borders on inspiration and is a foretaste of Heaven.

Such are the contradictions of Christian experience, such the privilege of holy living. People who have had the least of the world have often had most of satisfaction. Martyrs, as a class, have been the most cheerful of men. To them thumbscrews have been finger rings and manacles bracelets. Like the salamander, they have flourished in fire, danced on burning coals and frolicked in a furnace.

There is life under the snow. Greek fire burns in water. And it is possible to be beset with cares and troubles, to live in the hardest of "hard times," and yet have a pure fountain of joy divine welling up in the soul, sweet amid the bitter waters.

In the first letter Paul ever wrote—that to the Thesalonians—he said, "Rejoice evermore." And then, at the last, after he had been flogged five times in the market-place and three times in court, had been shipwrecked three times, and been in prison so many times that he doesn't count them at all; after being pelted with stones by vagabonds, till he was thought to be dead; hungry, cold, naked, robbed; hunted by murderers with only a wicker basket between him and death; betrayed by friends whom he had trusted; everywhere surrounded by dangers and difficulties, and saved at last by being clothed with pitch, and used as a candle to light the streets of Rome, by having his head chopped off—this is the man who at the close of life, with an iron chain clanking on his wrist as he wrote, could say with a repetition and explosiveness that sound like the salute of booming cannon, "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, Rejoice."

The joy of our faith is not to be considered one of the luxuries of the Christian life, but the very staple of it. It is bread, not cake. It is the flower and fruit of religion, and all is worthless till it comes to that. Hence the Bible enjoins it and puts it among the commandments. It is a plain and positive duty to cultivate this grace, and to have it; and not to go on forever asking for it and not having it. We ought not to rest satisfied with a religion that does not make us bright and cheerful and happy.

We are not pilgrims on a tedious journey to a distant paradise, but have one all along the way. God gives us a heaven to go to Heaven in, and feeds us with crumbs that fall from the Master's table, which are a part of the eternal banquet. God wants His people to abound in gladness and to go to Mt. Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads.

And that, too, not for our own delectation only, but as a condition of service as well. "The joy of the Lord is your strength" here. It has a practical power which puts vigor into our work. Gladness is the life of any pursuit. We do well what we enjoy doing. Drudgery is apt to be valueless. A sad heart soon tires. We work best when we sing at it. We are weak unless we are glad.

Joyfulness of spirit is the most precious gift for those who desire to lessen the sorrows and sadnesses of the world. David wanted the joy of salvation restored unto him in order that he then might be equipped to teach transgressors God's ways and that sinners might be converted unto Him. It is the joy of our faith which commends it to others.

Men are still bent on the pursuit of happiness and asking, "Who will show us any good?" And it is the happy Christian who can furnish a satisfactory answer. The joy of our lives will do more to commend our faith to others than all verbal declarations; but if we go mourning all our days, lugubrious, solemn, sad, men may well ask of us as of old, "Where now is thy God?"

Consecration is not the act of our feelings, but of our will. Do not try to feel anything. God is working in you to will, whether you feel it or not. He is giving you power at this moment to will and to do his good pleasure. Believe this and act upon it.—Meyer.

"Who is my neighbor?" asked the lawyer. Christ's answer was the parable of the good Samaritan and the command, "Go, and do thou likewise." He was not to study laws or creeds or philosophies—he was to do as far as he understood. The deepest problems of life are to be solved not by thought alone, but by doing as far as we can think.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SUNSET ON THE LIZZA.

BY WILLIAM WISTAR COMFORT.

Siena, Italy, Seventh month 15th, 1899.

Every one has heard of Siena and can connect the name in his mind with the thread of some memory of history or of art. Indeed, for a town of twenty thousand inhabitants, it is perhaps as well known as any in Europe. If we think for a moment, it is not hard to explain the widespread fame of this little mediæval city. In the first place, if we take up any history of Italian art, we are quite sure to be confronted at once with the Sienese school of artists, old Duccio di Buoninsegna leading them away back in the thirteenth century. In the "Lives of the Saints" our attention is involuntarily arrested by at once the most mystical and most practical of female saints, Catherine of Siena. And again, in the third place, Florentine history is so mixed up with that of her Ghibelline rival that Siena intrudes herself at every moment when we read of the rise and decline of the Tuscan capital.

For all this, comparatively few travelers come to Siena. The three grim old hotels in the Via Cavour (almost every Italian town has its Via Cavour and Piazza Vittorio Emanuele) look deserted enough at this season of the year. Like every respectable building in Siena which is not a church, these hotels were once noble palaces; and in spite of the fact that they are sadly run down in the heel, they still retain something grand and gloomy about their exterior which suggests the nobility and pride of their first owners. To be sure, twice during the summer Siena is galvanized into something that approaches gaiety. Then it is that a modest number of foreigners come to these honorable hostelries. But the "Palio," or horse races, once over, the "trippers" hasten away, and only we permanent residents are left to know Siena as she really is.

Doubtless, then, it is either for her history and art, or for her mediæval horse races in the public square, that most Americans come to Siena. They make plans to stop over night here on their way between Rome and Florence. It is not, however, of any of these things I want to write. Siena has too much history to be even hinted at here, and as for what has been called "the strangest horse race on earth,"—well, this is not the place for the description of such an event.

Nathaniel Hawthorne says, somewhere in his Italian notes, that he found he had a very limited capacity for sight-seeing. Probably a great many people are aware of a like limited capacity, but are not honest enough to say so. Now, Siena seems to be providentially placed just where it is for the benefit of him who has mental indigestion. One must have been through it to know what this experience is. If, after a few weeks in Rome, you go directly to Florence, or vice versa, you will find you have made such a "salad," as the French say, of your impressions that you are in despair. Of course, there are some people who have no sensations in the presence of man's landmarks in history—whole epochs of history, with their lessons, slip off the shoulders of such an one as easily as water off a duck's back. It is not of such "worse than senseless things" that I am speaking; for they will not suffer from seeing too much. But, quite seriously, one has need to sit down now and again to take account of what he sees in Italy, to think and read about it, to reflect on its deeper meaning, and then to fortify himself in advance for what lies beyond. For this reason I say Siena seems providentially placed where it is, between the most interesting cities of Italy,—one gathering in itself the most familiar remains of Roman civilization, and the other the birthplace of the new era in literature and art.

I may say, once for all, that Siena is in the hill country of South Tuscany, separated from the sea to the west by a long, low range of blue mountains. Though there is no water in the neighborhood, the country round is extremely fertile; and high above it all, on her own elevation and girt about by her high brick walls, Siena rises, literally mistress of all she surveys. Such is the setting of the town which successfully divided the honors of war with her greater Tuscan rival, Florence, and for whose possession Spaniards, French, Germans, Popes and Florentines disputed century after century.

But I resolved to say nothing about Siennese history. There is too much of it which is not easy to unravel. One thing may be said, however, with safety: the history of the city is a history of wars and fightings. It seems as though there were always somebody outside the walls who was bent on getting in, and someone inside who wanted to keep him out. And the queer part of it is, that when by chance the Siennese had a little peace from outside foes they loved to get up a little turmoil within the city walls, by way of distraction, as it were. Thus it will be readily understood that he who has the time to dig about in Siennese history will be richly rewarded by the finds he makes.

So many nice things have been said about the Siennese in the guide-books, that one is loath to find fault with them. They are proclaimed as courteous, hospitable, fair-speaking, kind to strangers and easy to be entreated. William Dean Howells, in his readable little book about "Tuscan Cities," confesses that he was not met at the station by a deputation of enthusiastic citizens, as he was led to believe he should be, judging from the accounts he had read. He explains this, however, himself by adding that, likely enough, they were in ignorance of his projected arrival!

Taking it all in all, the Siennese are not bad people to dwell amongst. They are infinitely less objectionable than the Neapolitans, with their mendicant hordes, and less bothersome than the wretches at Rome who haunt the church doors and make one's life miserable. I know of but three professional beggars in Siena, not counting the small boys who dog the footsteps of the letter carrier and pester you for "francobolli esteri" (foreign postage stamps). Some people who have been here a long while insist that the townspeople are very friendly and cordial when you get to know them. This is probably true; but a stranger who tarries but a month or two in Siena will not be overrun with callers.

I confess it was not for the children of the soil that I came to Siena, nor to Italy. This town—as, indeed, the whole country, to my notion—would be just as interesting and a good deal more sweet-smelling, if the whole population were out of the way. I think this is one secret of the fascination everyone experiences at Pompeii. There, at least, as in some of the great ruins at Rome, you are in the presence of man's handiwork without his noisome presence. How many lovely spots there are in Italy which would be perfect without the blot of man's presence! Nowhere more than in Italy have I felt the truth of the words: "Every prospect pleases, and only man is vile." So, let us leave the quaint old town with its widening streets, its grim palaces and churches, its crowding archways and green window blinds, and its overloaded donkeys, too, braying because they cannot be comforted,—let us leave all this, and at the sunset hour seek the purer air of the Lizza.

"Lizza," which is our word "list," means, literally, a fighting place. Just why this spot should have been so designated when the whole country around was a fighting place, I cannot explain. Perhaps because it encloses the fortress par excellence, the sturdy brick walls of which still bear the Medici arms in token of the Medicean mastery in Siena. It is due to the credit of Siena in this connection to add that the Florentines never succeeded in gaining a permanent foothold in Siena until 1555, after the great plague which devastated the whole of Tuscany had reduced the population of the city from one hundred thousand to fifteen thousand in a few months' time.

Happily, there is neither war nor rumors of war nowadays in the Lizza. Only, at certain hours the bugler steps out into the open space within the barracks and sounds the clear notes which float away over the neighboring hills and valleys. Except for this harmonious interruption, all is quiet on the Lizza. I like it best at the sunset hour—that is from six to nine o'clock—for the evening glow rests long on this high point. Siena is such an easy place to be contented! One day is just like another. No one seems busy, but, rather, resting, as it were, after the centuries of strife which long made rest impossible. Any part of the old town is peaceful enough; but the Lizza at sunset reaches the climax of dreamy tranquility.

Every evening, as regular as the chiming of the cathedral bells, I go up on the Lizza, and, leaning on the high brick wall, I look out over this sweet Tuscan land of hill and valley. There must be something peculiarly congenial in this view. For there are others there, chiefly men, curiously enough—old men with canes and broad-brimmed hats, who came up here to watch the sun set. Everyone remembers having seen in some art exhibit a painting representing the old fisher-folk of Normandy and Brittany, sitting or leaning on the sea-wall and looking out to sea for the return of the fishing boats. No subject is more often chosen by the artist, and few are better calculated to touch the feeling of anxious yet important expectation, which takes possession of us at all times. Such are the habitués of the Lizza, with the exception, that they are in perfect accord with nature. They await no future event, but are content to steep themselves in the quiet joy of the Present. As I see them standing singly or in groups, looking far out over the green "campagna," I am reminded of those city fathers of old, who, as Homer sings, gathered on the Trojan walls and looked seawards toward the Grecian fleet and camp, chattering like grasshoppers the while.

Howells has remarked that the Lizza is the only piece of level ground in Siena. Nowhere else can you take a dozen steps without going up or down one of the three little hills on which the city is built. The Lizza does not tower above the city, but occupies a sort of promontory which juts out from it, and thus commands a distant view on three sides. Huddling up close to the walls, as though seeking their protection, are the silvery green olive trees. In the middle ground is a tiny cemetery, with its white stones standing bright against the green. Then, beyond, the sight loses itself; one might say an ocean of billowy greenness. The eye sweeps over miles and miles of different shades of green, the valleys being already sombre in the night, while the hills are still touched with sunlight. On each hill stands a villa or a monastery, surrounded by its vineyards and olive orchards. Everything is so very still, as though it were asleep; and over to one side, outlined against the western sky, stand half a dozen cypress trees. They look just like the little Noah's Ark trees of our childhood days, but they are keeping watch over these hills and valleys.

It is quite impossible to describe the richness and the tranquility of the scene. Better far to advise one's friends to come to Siena for a few days. As an experience it is worth the time, even on a limited itinerary. It is rarely one feels so transported into the Middle Ages. Around these same scarred walls the battle raged. These lovely hills have been trod by countless armies of conquerors, who have swept by and left no trace of their ravages. Not even six miles away, at Monte Aperto, does the little stream of to-day show any signs of that bloody conflict between Florentine Guelphs and Sienese Ghibellines.

The imagination peoples the scene,—the imagination which will not always work when we wish it to do so. There are two or three places where I have felt transported back five centuries or more in this way. The feeling usually comes over one at night, or at sundown, and that is why the title of this little sketch has seemed to be appropriate. A night spent a few weeks ago at Assisi brought on the same delightful, weird sensation; and another evening, last summer, as I watched the sun go down, from the walls of Aigues Mortes, I could imagine myself in the days of Saint Louis, the good king who sailed from there on the crusade whence he never returned.

The last rays have gone off the high, striped campanile of the cathedral. The bells toll eight o'clock. The "Ave Maria" has sounded, and the watchers turn regretfully homewards from the western ramparts. A few more blasts from the bugle, and at nine o'clock the gates of the fortress are closed. The splendor of one of those sunsets, which compels belief in the hand of the Divine Artist, is succeeded by the no less glorious beauty of the Italian stars. So days go and nights come on the Lizza; but Siena bears her age well, and will, doubtless, stand on, as she has stood in the past, for many a century to come.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN APPEAL FROM JAMAICA FOR CUBA.

BY ARTHUR H. SWIFT.

I have read with interest and no little satisfaction the letter from Dr. Trueblood that appeared in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of Seventh month 20th.

I am particularly pleased that another attempt has been made to interest Friends in the West Indies, especially in Cuba.

We whose privilege it is to labor in Jamaica are increasingly impressed with the need of missionary work here. Our field, I presume, is privileged above all others, except Barbadoes, with religious, political and educational advantages. If superstition and vice can, under such favorable circumstances, be so open and flagrant, vaunting their filthiness in the face of Protestantism and the English government, what must be the condition of that land that has but lately come out from under Spanish despotism and Roman Catholic laxity and superstition?

We judge that Cuba's moral condition is manifoldly worse, and her darkness infinitely deeper, than that of Jamaica—an opinion that is strengthened by the testimony of those who come to us from that land.

If Jamaica needs the Friends' Church, and its success in Jamaica truly proves that it does, surely Cuba stands in greater need.

And we, the Friends' missionaries in Jamaica, are praying that these appeals from Cuba by interested hearts will meet with a quick response from the readers of this paper.

I note with pleasure that the methods employed by Friends in the Jamaica work have proven themselves suitable and efficient to such a practical man as Capt. L. D. Baker, insomuch that he offers to our denomination the first privilege of carrying on the mission work he wishes to see inaugurated upon the great Cuban estates. One object of my writing this letter is to assure the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that when this good man offers to any denomination the opportunity of doing mission work upon the properties in which he is interested it is an opportunity that should not be lightly passed by.

The class of laborers employed by the company is, of course, the poorer class, of which the larger part of the population is made up. They are the people who most avail themselves of the privilege of attendance upon Divine worship, and are the most susceptible to the influences of the gospel.

The company employs hundreds of these laborers, and, gathered as they are in settlements, they are much more easy of access than when living upon their own lands.

Capt. Baker is extremely practical in his ideas of missionary methods, and has strong objection to overlapping missionary parishes. When once he gives a territory to a denomination, if that denomination proves efficient, no one else is allowed to come in and plant another mission.

The overseers of the properties upon which mission work is done are instructed to render all reasonable assistance to the missionaries, and in no instance are they allowed to let prejudice hinder their assisting God's workers. This is an advantage that none but those who enjoy it can appreciate.

In the early history of Jamaica missions, missionaries who came out to work upon the estates at the invitation of the proprietors found themselves more or less handicapped, as the owners had the right to demand of them the exercise of their services when and where and for such purposes as they pleased. If the worker refused he rendered himself liable to expulsion from the property. This had the effect, much to the sorrow of the missionary, of making him appear before the slaves as a religious officer.

Nothing of this kind obtains on the properties of those who offer us this opportunity, nor upon any other in Jamaica under our knowledge.

We assure you that we have never been called upon to exercise our influence over the people in any way for the benefit of the property. We are given the privilege of working and the use of buildings, and then left alone except that the work is often visited and workers encouraged by Capt. Baker and his associates.

We sincerely hope that each yearly meeting will feel like taking a part in improving this opportunity. This seems to us a Divine call.

Cannot the yearly meeting next held take the initiative, and those following fall into line?

The prophet Zechariah was a contemporary of the prophet Haggai (Ezra 5: 1; 6: 14), but is generally thought to have been a much younger man. Those of his prophecies which are recorded begin about two months after Haggai (Zech. 1: 1; Haggai 1: 1). Like Haggai, he was commissioned to rouse the Jews and encourage them to greater energy in rebuilding the temple.

His work consists in great part of visions. There are eight of these. Some of them are not easy to understand in all particulars, though the main thoughts are generally clear.

All of these visions are stated as having been seen during one night—that of the four-and-twentieth day of the eleventh month.... in the second year of Darius (Zech. 1: 7), which answers nearly to February, 519 B.C. There is not space to describe these visions, but it may be said that through them all are impressed the thoughts that the Lord is over all, and that he will guard and reward those who are faithful to Him.

The present lesson contains the fifth of Zechariah's visions, which is, in some respects, the most striking of all.

The mission of Zechariah was undoubtedly one of great power; and it stirred the hearts of those who listened to it (Ezra 6: 14) and filled them with zeal.

The fifth vision was meant to assure Zerubbabel that he was the anointed of God and was chosen by Him as the head of the Jews.

1. "Waked me:" These visions were seen in the night. The prophet seems to have slept after the preceding visions. The angel was the one who had explained what the prophet had already seen.

2. "Candlestick:" There were no windows in the Tabernacle, hence the need of artificial light. Like nearly everything else about the Tabernacle, there was also the symbolical meaning. "Seven lamps thereon:" Evidently referring to the seven branched candlestick described in Exodus (25: 31). It is likely that the candlestick reproduced on the Arch of Titus in Rome was similar to that seen by Zechariah. The candlestick symbolized the church, the people of God, who are to shine as lights in the world. Compare the vision of John in Revelations (chap. 1), where the seven candlesticks are the seven cherubs. Note that the prophet goes back to the Tabernacle, for in Solomon's temple there were ten golden candlesticks (1 Kings 7: 49; 2 Chron. 4: 7). "Bowl:" For the supply of oil. "Seven:" Seven was considered to be the sacred number. It is often used in the Bible in this sense. See Prov. 9: 1; Judg. 16: 13, 19; 2 Sam. 21: 6, 9; Gen. 21: 28-30, etc.

3. "Two olive trees:" Olive oil was generally used for burning. It is in these two trees that the essential part of this section of the vision consists. It was not from the bowl as filled by man that the supply of oil should come out, from living trees: hence, the supply came from a source without—a continuous, living, inexhaustible source. The explanation is given in verse 14. The lack of continuity in the narration, which exists here, has often been noticed. It is thought by some scholars that verses 6-10 have, in some way, been placed before verses 11-14. This seems probable, and they will be considered first.

5, 11, 13. The prophet declares his inability to understand the vision, and asks an explanation.

14. "These are the two anointed ones:" "These are the two sons of oil:" (Revised Version). That is, the king and the high priest. "The two trees are the royalty and priesthood; the two branches are their present representatives, Joshua and Zerubbabel.... Through these two—that is, the prosperous administration of things civil and religious—God will enable His people to triumph over present difficulties and shine in the world."

6. Verses 6-10 are a special message to the head of the state. The message can only be understood in its full force when the condition of the returned exiles is remembered. It is addressed to the thoughts of the leaders as well as those of their companions. It is as much as to say: You feel that you have undertaken a hopeless work, that you cannot shine among the nations; that all that you can do will be insignificant; hear the word of the Lord, "Not by might, not by force, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

7. "O, great mountain:" Every obstacle which had appeared to Zerubbabel as a mountain would disappear—be wholly removed. "Bring forth the headstone thereof:" Fifteen or sixteen years before, Zerubbabel had laid the foundation stone—he shall lay the capstone also. This was done a few years later. "Headstone with shoutings of grace." (Revised Version.) When placed in position, the people would shout, May the Lord's favor continue to be with it.

9. A continuation of the promise.

10. Who hath despised the day of small things?" (Hag. 2: 3): Who are they that have ridiculed this work, or who have been so faithless as to despise its apparent insignificance? "Even these seven which are the eyes of the Lord; they run to and fro," etc: Those eyes which see everything rest with joy on the completed work.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Supplies of grace can only come from God.
3. Men and women are to be channels of blessing to others.
3. Man's weakness is no obstacle, and his might is no necessity. The Spirit of God is all-powerful.
4. Nothing escapes the eyes of the Lord.

UNHESITATING CONFIDENCE IN CHRIST.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 15.—The penitent malefactor. Luke 23: 39-43.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 16.—The confidence we have in Him. 1 John 5: 13-21.

A proud, young Pharisee, with an indomitable will and a lofty ambition, exceedingly zealous for the traditions of his fathers, suddenly became convinced that the Jesus of Nazareth, whose followers he was persecuting unto death, was the Son of God and the Messiah of Israel, and although this conviction involved the most radical change in his life, the surrender of all his ambitions, the breaking of all old associations and his identification with a despised people, the suffering of indescribable hardships and a life of unremitting toil, ending in a prison cell, and soon to be followed by a cruel death, we hear from him in this lesson the most triumphant testimony as to the Christ that he has followed and the certainty of his faith in him that can be put into words. What was the basis of this confidence? It began, doubtless, with the evidence afforded him by the joyous assurance and unshaken confidence of the martyrs. No man like Paul could have seen Stephen die and not have been profoundly moved. He saw here the peace for which he so long had striven in vain. The conviction reached a climax when he saw the vision on the road to Damascus; it passed into personal knowledge when the peace of God came into his own troubled heart, and it was confirmed beyond all doubt when he saw how the Christ had fulfilled all the prophecies so dear to every Jew. But it is not probable that Paul thought so much of these evidences as he sat in his prison cell and dictated his last letter to Timothy. He says: "I know him," and he rests his case for time and eternity on this personal acquaintance with his Lord.

It is deeply interesting to note how people came to believe in Christ when He was here upon earth. John's gospel records a most instructive series of conversions, so to speak, in the earlier chapters. Some came through personal testimony of others, some because He revealed Himself as a prophet or a worker of miracles, and so must unregenerate men dead in trespasses and sins be awakened by any and all means to see their need and to come to Christ. Many of us have come by similar means. It has been the life of others who have trusted Christ; it has been their testimony as to His keeping power; it has been the transformations we have seen wrought in human character through faith in Him; it has been through the almost irresistible convictions of the Holy Spirit drawing us to Him; it has often been the overwhelming sense of danger and condemnation that has driven us to Him for refuge. Then, after we have come to Him, we have been confirmed in our faith by the peace He gave, by the testimony of Scripture which we came to understand. But a friend must come to be known to us by something besides his credentials or his gifts to us. We must come to know him personally. We want to know Him by His tones, His expression of countenance, the look of His eye, the touch of His hand; we want to know the things which He enjoys and His appreciation of them; we want to know all His tastes and desires; we want to know His character in all respects; we want to come to know Him so that we can feel at home in His presence, so that we can talk or sit in silence, knowing that words are not to assure either Him or us that all is well. Now, Paul had so walked with Christ and become so acquainted with Him that he thus knew Him. He needed no sign, for all life was a sign to Paul. There was no longer anything secular to him, for all was lifted into the realm of a sacrament. The Divine withholdings were to him as sure a sign of his Master's love as the things He gave. He knew that he had been permitted to fill up the measure of sufferings yet behind, and that it was working for him a far more exceeding weight of glory. He knew that his prayers were answered even when the thorn remained. All he had was given to Christ, and all that Christ had was his since he was Christ's.

How can I come to know Christ so that I can feel as Paul did? Is it possible for me? Yes; just as much for me as for him, if I am willing to pursue the same method. He counted all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. The trouble with us is that we do not lose enough for Christ. We want self and Christ. Christ cannot commit himself to us in precious fellowship while we are seeking great things for ourselves. Absolute consecration to the will of God lies at the base of this personal knowledge of Christ. "If any man love me he will keep my commandments, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." This does not refer to any outward or spectacular manifestation, but to that union with God in the Spirit wherein communion with God is blessedly real to us.

But even the earlier stages of the consecrated life are not perfect with many. Faith as yet has short wings. We do not know Christ well enough to let Him sleep through a storm. We are in a state of spiritual apprehensiveness rather than confidence. We are afraid we will lose "our experience." No wonder since we are so recently escaped from the snares of the devil. Here we need to reassure ourselves much by the experience of others. External evidences are of value here. But we shall soon come to "know Him." Our spiritual consciousness will become more acute; experience of His power will strengthen our faith for longer flights in the "seeming void." The storms will not intimidate us; delayed answers to prayer, or transfigured answers, will not cause doubt. The overturning of our plans will be of small consequence, since it will only mean the revealing of His larger plans. We will find that He trusts our confidence in Him without always explaining His plans to us, and we shall learn not to disappoint Him. Such is the blessed life "in the knowledge of Him."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Several yearly meetings have already passed this year, and no special reports of the Christian Endeavor Unions have come to us for publication in this department. This is the fault of the secretaries, or of somebody who ought to tell them of the importance of such reports. It is the only way we can all keep informed as to the progress of Endeavor work in our church. Will the secretaries in those yearly meetings yet to occur send us such a report of their work as appears in this issue from Wilmington Yearly Meeting?

Myrtle Lightner, secretary of the Friends' International Union (Sabina, Ohio), requests the secretaries of all Yearly Meeting Unions to send to her a report of Endeavor work in their yearly meeting once each three months. From this a summary will be prepared that will appear in these columns.

ANNUAL RALLY OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION OF WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Doubtless the most enthusiastic session of Wilmington Yearly Meeting was that of the Christian Endeavorers on Second-day evening. The presence of the Lord was manifest in the opening praise service, conducted by Charles Babcock. Many persons, old and young, from all over the vast auditorium, were on their feet at the same time, testifying of the many blessings bestowed upon them during the past year, and of the help the Christian Endeavor Society had been to them. Very gratifying were the words of commendation from the ministers on the platform, encouraging the Endeavorers to renewed activity in the cause, and telling of the aid they had received from the Christian Endeavor Society.

After the reading of the Secretary's report, Albert J. Brown, pastor of the Friends' Church at Indianapolis, made a most excellent address. His historical reminiscence of early New England life, and the application he made to the vigor and strength of the Christian Endeavor work at the present time, giving the credit of our zeal and energy to our staunch forefathers of the primitive age, was both pleasing and effective.

Ella M. Barrett, the delegate to Detroit, gave a very interesting report of the Convention. She pictured, in such a vivid and graphic manner, the good things that were seen and heard as to carry her hearers enthusiastically with her while she proceeded in her narration of the many incidents of the Convention.

Levi Mills, in his characteristic way, gave some notes from the Convention, showing that not only were there showers of rain, but that showers of blessing also fell in abundance, and that the sunshine of His presence pervaded the entire meeting.

From the Secretary's report the Endeavorers of Wilmington Yearly Meeting are alive and ready for work at all times. Two societies hold services in the jail. Four societies are contributing toward the education of students in the Maryville School. One society has established a First-day school in a village where there is no church. Another society reports having held the church together. Another has charge of the Sunday evening service. The same society has purchased "Penelpe; or, Among the Quakers," and pass it from member to member each week to instruct young Friends in the doctrines of the church. Two societies sent their pastors to the International Convention at Detroit.

Wilmington Intermediates have sent 1,022 bouquets to the Cincinnati Hospital during the month of July.

Nearly every society in the Union has contributed to the support of Mattie E. Hadley, a member of the Wilmington Society, who has been sent recently by this yearly meeting to engage in mission work in Alaska.

Among several things recommended by the delegates to the Union, each society was urged for the coming year to raise at least $10 for foreign missions, to be used through our own Missionary Board.

The officers for the coming year are: President, Charles E. Terrell; secretary-treasurer, Emma E. Wright; quarterly meeting superintendents, De Ella Leonard, Thomas L. Scott, Ella M. Barrett, Rosa Lee; superintendent scholarship fund, Bessie T. Ballard; superintendent missionary work, Eva E. Terrell; superintendent junior work, Laura Hunnicutt.

FOR ENDEAVORERS.

BY EMMA F. COFFIN.

"Twenty-five years in sin, and three weeks a Christian."

So said a man, an auctioneer, forty-two years of age, who, for twenty-five years, had been a leader of Satan's forces, and during all that time had resided in the same town. His bosom "chum," a man near his own age, and, like himself, much given to drink, came by invitation to church one Sabbath evening, and was, brightly converted. He was taken into membership. The day of his public reception the man above referred to, with his wife, came to see him welcomed. She was converted to God the same day. Since that time he has attended every service, midweek prayer meetings and all. Finally, one Sabbath evening, at the request of the pastor, he with his friend and their wives, tarried after the meeting closed. When the crowd had passed out he was spoken to about his soul, and told that he ought to surrender to God at that time. He is a man whose natural gifts are wholeheartedness, intelligence, ability to speak, and a commanding eye. As we stood talking upon the subject of his salvation, his friend said, calling his name,

"—, what's the use; let's all get upon our knees and let the pastor pray for us." He held a sleeping two-year-old child in his arms. The pastor said, "Yes; give the baby to your wife and we'll pray," and to the wife, "Take the baby while we pray." He deliberately handed over the child to her, and without any persuasion, save the above, with the silent power of the Holy Ghost went upon his knees. After all had offered vocal prayer for him, he was told that God would be pleased to have him pray for himself. He was given these texts without comment or pleading, "Ask and ye shall receive," "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." We waited in silence when he began to pray, asking God to take control of him, and telling Him that he put himself in His hands, asking Him to prove him until prayer meeting night and see whether he meant to deceive Him or not; also confessing his past sins. When we had arisen, he said, "This is the first time I was ever on my knees to pray and my first prayer for salvation." Then he told how for three weeks he had been under conviction, and that every moment he had been alone during this time these questions confronted him: "How would I look at a mourner's bench?" "How will auctioneering and the Christian life go together?" Then he told how he had been a "clown among the boys" for twenty-five years; that he had served the devil with all his power, and now he would serve God as faithfully. He also said to the pastor: "Now, if this pans out as I think it will, and there is all in the step I have taken that I think there is, I'll want to ask a favor of you. I'd like to ask for the privilege of standing in the pulpit for a half hour some day and telling my experience." Three weeks from the night of his conversion he was given the opportunity. The words at the beginning of this article are some of the things that he said, and that he had found more true enjoyment in three short weeks than in all his life before; that he had made a sale of himself to the Lord Jesus Christ with another as the auctioneer. He said: "I was converted three weeks ago to-night, welcomed into the church this morning, and I'm trying to preach this evening." It had been announced that he would speak. The church was crowded, and many went away unable to gain admittance. A score or more of his old companions, who never go to church, were present. Some of them wept during the service. We are trusting they may be reached. He told how even his little children noticed and spoke of the difference in his life. He and his friend have both become active members of the Christian Endeavor Society. Let Endeavorers everywhere pray for both that they may be Spirit filled and kept. The Lord has blessedly saved many others during the pastoral year. Surely Jesus is quickly coming. The way in which He is turning on the Holy Ghost power and touching hearts; the rapidity with which the Spirit works, with many other signs, leads me to this conviction. He seems to be in a hurry to save those who are willing to be saved. The rending cry in my soul deepens continually and sends me weeping upon my face. "O God, save the people!" Then the Holy Ghost picks out one, two or three special ones, lays them upon my heart and says, "These next." He draws, convicts and wins them to the dear Saviour. Glory be to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Amen.

BOOK NOTICE.

"The Junior's Friend." By J. Edgar Williams. A very practical little booklet has been prepared by one of our younger ministers and issued under the above title. It has been heartily commended by Dr. Schauffler, of New York city, and appears to be worthy of the commendation. It is arranged in the form of a catechism and is suitable for use in Junior Endeavor Societies, Sabbath school classes, or in the home. It can be obtained by addressing the author, at Marshalltown, Iowa. Price, 25 cents a copy, or 12 copies to one address for 20 cents each.

SOMETIME, SOMEWHERE.

[This poem has been extensively and admiringly quoted for many years as the work of Robert Browning. It was written about 1879 by Ophelia G. Browning, the daughter of a Methodist minister of Fordham, N. Y.—Ed.]

Unanswered yet, the prayer your lips have pleaded
In agony of heart these many years?
Does faith begin to fail, is hope declining,
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father has not heard your prayer,
You shall have your desire sometime, somewhere!

Unanswered yet—though when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne
It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,
So anxious was your heart to have it done?
If years have passed since then, do not despair,
For God will answer you, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? But you are not unheeded;
The promises of God forever stand;
To Him our days and years alike are equal.
"Have faith in God!" It is your Lord's command.
Hold on to Jacob's angel, and your prayer
Shall bring a blessing down, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Nay, do not say unanswered;
Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done.
The work began when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what He has begun.
Keep incense burning at the shrine of prayer,
And glory shall descend, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered;
Her feet are firmly planted on the Rock,
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, "It shall be done, sometime, somewhere!"

Out of our frail humanity the demand that rises in the earthlier hours of our religion may be this, "Save my soul;" but in the most unearthly moments it is this, "Tell me thy name."—Rev. F. W. Robertson.

News from the Field.

Dear Friend:—I have received from subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, in acknowledgment of my article of Seventh month 13th, the following amounts. For these we are very grateful, and trust Friends will continue to remember the great need in northern Michigan: A Friend, $7; Bloomingdale, Ind., $2; South Dartmouth, Mass., $5; Oxford, England, £2, 2s. Few responses, but all "in His name."

James Wood, of Mt. Kisco, New York, is attending Iowa Yearly Meeting, the sessions of which opened at Oskaloosa on the afternoon of Third-day, the 5th inst.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Vandalia, Mich.—Vandalia Quarterly Meeting has had the very acceptable service of Levi Lupton with his tent and co-workers in its midst during the summer months, and while hay was made and wheat garnered, souls, more precious than all else, were also gathered into the kingdom of the Lord, the church built up in the faith once delivered to the saints, and some who had wandered far away were brought back into the favor of the King. In the three places—Chapel Hill, Birch Lake and Vandalia—where these meetings have been held, there is this summary of the work done: 107 public services, 150 families visited and prayed with, and between 50 and 60 souls who sought after and found God, for which we praise the name of the Lord.

The presence and power of the Lord was manifestly felt in each service, and we believe much good done which eternity alone can reveal.

The "Lo I am with you alway" has been blessedly sweet to those who have been "leaning hard" on the Everlasting Arms, and we believe the truths uttered from time to time "shall not return unto Him void," but shall accomplish that that will redound to His glory.

Birch Lake and Chapel Hill were also favored with the help of a brother from Western Yearly Meeting, John Stanton, whose services were very satisfactory.

IDA RYON.

Richmond, Indiana.—Friends attending Indiana Yearly Meeting, which will convene on Ninth month 26th, and desiring places to board, will correspond with Josiah T. White, or William C. Shoemaker, Richmond, Indiana. Ministers with minutes addressed to Indiana Yearly Meeting will correspond with Mahala Jay, Naomi W. Harrison, or Timothy Nicholson, to secure boarding places.

Westfield, Ind.—The Friends of Hartonville, in the limits of Westfield Quarterly Meeting, are building a new meeting house, at a cost of $1,500, as the result of a series of meetings held last spring, conducted by Willis Bond and David Commons, assisted by Ellis Wells. Ellis Wells remained in charge of the meeting since has proved himself a very efficient pastor indeed. He has kept the church in a real good spiritual condition and the people love him greatly. He has raised the money for the new house in a short time, notwithstanding the failure of the wheat crop in his locality, and will remain in charge of the new church next year.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

T. J. Harris, of Hesper, Kansas, visited the meeting at Barclay on the Sixth of Eighth month.

Elkton, O. T.—Stella Quarterly Meeting, in Oklahoma, is composed of nine monthly meetings, two of which, Clay and Cleo, in the past year have been set off from Square Cedar (now Carwyle) Monthly Meeting.

At Clay, last year, Friends began to build a house for worship, but for lack of means deferred the enterprise until this year. In the meantime the soliciting committee started a chain of letters, which ran until about fifteen dollars were collected. We wish to express our many thanks for the aid thus received, every cent of which shall be applied on the building of said house. The way is still open for those who wish to assist to send in contributions.

LODI BONSER, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent.

Burlington, Kansas.—Brother Isaac L. Pitts and his fellow helper, Maggie Pitts, his wife, have been among us at Center Hill Meeting for three years, and have done excellent work for the Lord. The meeting is better established than it ever has been before, and it is in perfect unity and order. It is with regret to us all that they think their time has come to leave here and go to Rose Hill Meeting, in Butler County, Kansas. May the Lord bless them in their work there as they have been blessed here.

C. A. PARR.

Grand River Quarterly Meeting was held at Lowell, the 4th, 5th and 6th of Eighth month. The Lord blessed the large gathering, and the report of the year's work showed that active work had been done on various lines. Minnie Bassett had held some meetings at Lowell, and her service in the quarterly meeting was especially appropriate and much appreciated. It was a real pleasure to meet and mingle with many dear friends of past years.

LYDIA M. CHASE.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Butternuts Quarterly Meeting, held at West Branch, N. Y., Eighth month 18th, 19th and 20th, has been a time long to be remembered, having been eminently owned and blessed of God. Nine ministers and many other earnest workers attended. Walter Aldrich, Caleb Jenkins and Edgar L. Requa, ministers, not members of this quarterly meeting, were acceptably with us. The ministry was remarkably under the guidance of the Spirit, incisive, plain, sound and edifying. We were thankful to have with us Sophronia Reynolds and her daughter, Roberta; Sister Reynolds and her family were formerly members of West Branch Monthly Meeting; her services in the several sessions and in the families have been blessed to many. For all these favors we praise the Lord.

SAMUEL SIMKIN.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Western Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight will convene Ninth month 14th. Three sessions will be held, and the following subjects will be presented for general discussion, viz: "The Present Day Evangelist," by Eliza C. Armstrong, and "Why I am a Friend," by John Henry Douglass. First session to begin at 10 a.m.

LEWIS E. STOUT, Chairman Program Committee.

Thorntown Quarterly Meeting was held at Sugar Plain, Eighth month 26th. J. Franklin Brown, of Earlham College, gave an interesting and instructive address at the educational meeting Seventh-day morning, and on Sabbath evening delivered his lecture on "A Peculiar People" before a very appreciative audience in Thorntown. Seventh-day evening was devoted to a profitable program by the Christian Endeavor Society. The place of holding the Quarterly Meeting in the Second month of each year was changed from Sugar Plain to Thorntown. Rachel Binford, a minister; Henry Mendenhall, an elder, and Aulder G. B. Larzere, a young gospel worker, were in attendance with credentials. The latter is having some service among the individual meetings of the quarter. The quarterly meeting has made a net gain in membership of twenty-seven during the past year.

Coloma, Ind.—Our meeting has been, it seems, wonderfully favored of the Lord, having been blessed from year to year by the labors of such noted workers as Amos Kenworthy, Levi Cox, Franklin Meredith, Jehu Reagan, Noah McLean, Hannah P. Jessup, and many other efficient workers; yet as a manifestation of God's boundless love and mercy He still followed us. Last winter he sent to labor with us Flora Holiday, who was joined by Calvin Choate. The truth was presented with such searching power that many of the members were led to make an everlasting covenant, "to follow the Lord through evil as well as good report," which condition of things has been owned and blessed of the Lord in the salvation of many more precious souls since the meeting closed. Besides our three regular meetings each week, two more prayer meetings were established. At these last named meetings especially, there have been the most remarkable manifestations of God's saving grace. During the revival proper, there were thirty or more who were definitely blessed, being either justified or sanctified; and in the revival following eight more have received the witness of being justified, and eleven have received the baptism of the Holy Ghost; and the good work still goes on, and as God has His way many more souls will be saved here.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Railroad Rates to Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends.

The usual rate has been granted to those attending yearly meeting, on the certificate plan, provided one hundred certificates are presented, showing payment of full fare paid going, good from all points in Iowa, a certificate to be obtained from station agents over each road traveled where tickets are bought. An excursion, good for thirty days, to Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Columbus and intermediate points, will be run at the usual low rates over the Iowa Central and Big Four Railways, leaving at close of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

A. F. N. HAMBLETON, Ry. Sec., Oskaloosa, Iowa.

ALASKA.

Jennie Lawrence has been placed at the head of the beach work, and she has divided it in three separate gatherings along a stretch of nearly two miles: one at the Treadwell mines, another at the Mexican, and the other at the Ready Bullion mines. The time of holding these meetings is three o'clock in the afternoon, all at the same time. Last Sabbath was a beautiful day, and the writer accompanied a native from Fort Wrangle, whose name is Aaron, to hold services at the Ready Bullion. From the scars to be seen on his face, one would think that he had been a very wicked man. At two o'clock I went to his cabin, and found him busily occupied selecting hymns and reading Bible texts. We soon started for our place of service, which was nearly a mile and a half. He seemed to be one of the happiest men on the island, almost continually singing some gospel hymns in a low tone as we walked along, and the more people we met—white or native—the more earnestly he would sing; he was not afraid to let his light shine before men. His appearance and Christ-like manners drew the admiration of all that met him. We soon arrived at our appointed place, and sung a few songs outside, which seemed to attract the attention of a few, especially the children; after which we went into a small tent 10 x 12 feet, where a family lives near the center of a group of twenty tents or more. Most of the men were at work in the mines, but when prayer was offered and songs of praise sung the tent was filled, and some stood near outside; thirteen were inside, mostly children, and all seemed to give close attention to what was said. The little dirty-faced, keen-eyed children were especially interested, and we were made to remember that text, "Suffer little children," etc.. Aaron was remarkably blessed in his message, taking for his text, "For God so loved the world." He read it himself and spoke mostly in his own language. He is a good interpreter, and can interpret with that unction and reverence that is calculated to act upon the hearts of his hearers. We found in the audience some who had been educated at the different missions, who appreciated the privilege of again hearing the Word as they had heard it in former times, and some were made to vocalize their feelings and thankfulness that we came among them, and offered us a room for next services. These camp-meetings are calculated to reach some who seldom get to the regular places of worship, and the impressions made upon the tender minds of the dear little children will be lasting.

E. W. WEESNER.

Douglas Island, Alaska, Eighth month 15th, 1899.

Birth.

Born, Eighth month 18th, 1899, to Mrs. Wilson T. Jay, Martinsville, Ohio, a son.

Married.

JEFFRIES—BALDWIN.—On Sabbath morning, the 13th, at early sunrise, Ida Belle Baldwin to Charley E. Jeffries, of Traverse City, Michigan, at the home of the bride's father, Nathan D. Baldwin, in Westfield, Ind.

WOOD—MOORE.—Eighth month 23d, 1899, at the home of the bride's mother, Highland Place, Emporia, Kansas, Warren S. Wood, of Lawrence, Kansas, to Laura M. Moore, daughter of Rebecca Morgan.

Died.

GARRIGUES.—William Henry Garrigues, of Philadelphia, died at Salem, Ohio, Eighth month 16th, in the 77th year of his age. Born in Philadelphia, Pa., much of his life was spent in Ohio, from which state he returned with his family to Philadelphia in 1866, where he has since resided and was best known. His business connection was with the firm of Garrigues Bros., Publishers, from which he retired some six years ago. Actively engaged in Christian work for many years, he has devoted the last six wholly to labors of love for the uplifting of humanity. His Christian efforts have been very marked, especially since he could devote most of his time to that end. He has for many years been a member of the Prison Society of the Eastern Penitentiary, a regular weekly visitor to one ward or corridor of that institution, going into the cell of each prisoner, contributing such temporal comfort as the rules would allow, and to the spiritual welfare of each. In this he will be sadly missed. Constant in attendance at the devotional services on First-day morning, 9.30 o'clock, great blessing attended his ministrations to the unfortunates in this institution. He was a member of the Board of Managers of the Central Soup Society, a practical charity of our city; also secretary of same for many years, and when dispensing the needed food during the severity of winter he spent six days of each week at his post, delivering the bread with his one hand to the needy and keeping a record of the number of applicants each day, when large amounts of bread and soup were dispensed. He was a thorough sympathizer in and contributor to the Breakfast Association, helping quite frequently in the devotional services to lift the unfortunate men to a better mode of life; a constant visitor to the Home for Incurables, Home for Aged Colored People, Howard Home, a helper at the meetings of the W. C. T. U. and various Gospel missions, the religious meetings held at the police stations, and early and continued friend of the "Shut-in Society," etc., and remarkable correspondent with those who by affliction were shut in their homes, and visitor to same, bringing sunshine and gladness to many hearts; in fine, an indefatigable service for Christ. Though a Friend (Quaker), he had in more recent years loved the service of song, and with a good degree of success become familiar with hymns, and employed this strong arm of successful evangelistic work to edification, as many can attest. It was uplifting to be favored with his presence when drawing near to the throne of heavenly grace in all forms of devotional privilege.

NEWBY.—Alice, wife of Thomas Newby, fell asleep in Jesus the 12th of Eighth month, 1899, in her 70th year, at their home, 2619 Holmes Street, Kansas City, Mo. Coming to Kansas as pioneers in the early settlement of it as a "free state," this dear Friend, with her husband, had much influence in building up the meetings of Kansas Yearly Meeting. Her voice will be missed in its counsels, and many will mourn the loss of a personal friend.

PAXSON.—Sarah Paxson, daughter of John and Rachel Green, and wife of Reuben Paxson, died at the home of her daughter, Mary J. Wolard, the 2d of Fourth month, 1899, in her 78th year. She was a life-long member of Friends, and was both a member and elder of Fairfield Monthly Meeting in Ohio, until in the year 1881 she removed to the State of Kansas, where she lived almost continuously until a short time before her death. She was one of the oldest members in establishing Green Castle Monthly Meeting, of which she was a member at the time of her death.

THORNBURGH.—William W. Thornburgh died at his home in Charlottesville, Indiana, Seventh month 29th, 1899, aged 80 years and 20 days. He was the son of Joel and Anna Thornburgh, the latter a minister in the Society of Friends, widely known, having had service in every yearly meeting on the continent. He was a lifelong Friend. Given to hospitality, many of the ambassadors of Christ will remember the kind entertainment received at his home. The greater part of his life was actively engaged in business. Yet he ever found time to study God's word and seek wisdom from above. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and had a very retentive memory. He was one of the main founders of Charlottesville Meeting, having donated the lot on which the church now stands. He was the first clerk appointed by that meeting, and was always ready to assist to build up the Redeemer's kingdom. The first meeting was held in his home. He was respected by all; even the little children respected him and paid their respects to him in death. The Junior Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church marched into the Friends' Church and laid a large pillow of flowers upon his casket. He was sick only a few days—attended the mid-week prayer meeting before his death on Seventh-day. He prayed and testified. His pastor and others present were impressed with his service. One thought in his testimony was: "I used to worry and fret when things did not go to suit me, but I have given all worrying over," showing his perfect resignation to the will of God.

WILLITS—Passed away, on the 28th of Sixth month, at her residence in Moorestown, N. J., Henrietta Ridgway, widow of Jeremiah Willits, and daughter of Samuel and Henrietta R. Woodward, in the seventy-fourth year of her age.

News and Events.

Thomas Brackett Reed has formally tendered his resignation from the House of Representatives. This event has long been foreshadowed and it comes without surprise; but, nevertheless, there are many who will regret the absence of his strong influence and powerful leadership in that body. There are as many others who will rejoice in the resignation as that of one who ruled at times with arbitrary and autocratic hand. But every one must admit that the main legislative branch of our government has lost a most able member. In fact, his ability and integrity have generally been recognized by his most pronounced political opponents, and it is known by all who are familiar with his career, that Thomas B. Reed has not only been able and honest, but has also been devoted to the public welfare. Enjoying, as he has, next to the highest opportunity of any man in the United States, he has greatly taken advantage of his unusual opportunity. During his regime the House of Representatives has been completely transformed. He has given it rules and leaders, and from a body almost incapable of transacting business he has made it into one of the most model parliamentary organizations in the world. Of late years he is supposed to have been disinclined to the high tariff policy of the President. He is, however, a protectionist, and it was he who made McKinley and Dingley chairmen of the Ways and Means Committee, and favored the enactment of the laws which bear their names. His chief opposition to the President is said to be on the policy of expansion, but how far this goes it is impossible to tell. However, whatever may be said of his political principles, his departure from public life is a sincere loss to the country.

William E. Curtis, the newspaper correspondent, who has been to Panama, reports himself astonished at the progress that has been made on the canal. The successors of the De Lesseps Company, who are now at work, are working, he says, with economy and efficiency, and are making steady progress. They have not money enough to carry the work through, but they hope to go so far as to inspire the confidence of capital somewhere and get the backing they require. The work now in progress is on the ridge, 500 feet above the sea level, midway across the isthmus. The ditches dug in De Lesseps' time, nine or ten miles long on each side of the isthmus, lie for the time being as they were left. There is far less sickness than there used to be, for the care of the workmen, who are chiefly negroes from Jamaica, is very much better than it was. The canal, as it stands, is valued at $92,000,000, and it is estimated that it will require $98,000,000 to finish it. When finished it will be about forty miles long and will have five locks. Although the property as it stands is valued at nearly one-half of the cost of the completed work, it is not more than one-fifth finished. Congress has sent a commission to examine it and also the Nicaragua route.

Once again last week Dreyfus broke down during the progress of his trial, and becoming completely unnerved, relieved his emotion by weeping. On the whole, the week was favorable for him and many points were scored in his favor. There are rumors of cliques in the army officers who are exerting their utmost to convict him, and should this be a fact the opposition may be seriously weakened. It is interesting to observe what one who is on the scene of action thinks and feels regarding the outcome of the trial. Julian Ralph, writing to "Harper's Weekly," under date of Ninth month 10th, writes as follows:

"A brief discussion of the probable result of the second trial of Alfred Dreyfus will not be a violation of legal etiquette. The procès may have finished by the time this reaches you. Now that it is in progress, it is the fashion of the champions of Dreyfus and of justice to admit no other possibility than that he will be acquitted. I hope they will prove correct. Still, it is a fact that for every such champion in France there are five hundred who believe he will be recondemned. Some of these argue solely upon the disclosures (the repetition of the former charges) to be made in court; and all declare that the safety and peace of France, and its position among the nations of the earth, demand his conviction. These people are not the riffraff of the French. It is the riffraff which makes up the bulk of the Dreyfusards. They include the socialists, nihilists, cranks and vagabonds of the country. This is amazing to all who do not realize the true conditions here; but how can it be otherwise when the church, the army, the aristocracy, and the bourgeoisie, believe him a traitor whose case is made use of by the Jews to break down the army and humble the nation? If the case of Dreyfus had no other or better support in the other countries of Christendom it would sink into insignificance. It would be a mere criminal trial, like any one of a thousand that are tried every day."

Secretary Chamberlain has issued the text of the Transvaal despatches of Ninth month 19th and 21st, and the reply of the Imperial Government of Ninth month 28th. The publication is accompanied by a note emphasizing the advisability of making the correct versions known, owing to the fact that an incorrect version has been published in Pretoria. There seems little to hope for in the way of peace from the communications, and, as indicating a continuance of the crisis, military activity continues in England and at Cape Colony. President Kruger is reported to have said that he expects war, and the Boers are fully armed.

The revolution in Santo Domingo has progressed to the "Provisional Government" stage, and the regular government continued by Vice President Figuero, after the assassination of President Heureaux, on Seventh month 26th, is to enjoy apparently but brief existence. It appears that Figuero has retired from a precarious office, and that the insurgents represent what government there is in the country. The revolution has been almost bloodless. The retiring President Figuero was allowed to go to his home unmolested, and the revolutionary party have been so considerate as to pay for property and supplies seized in furtherance of their movement. The soldiers who are called to his support by Figuero went over to the revolutionists. The expectant Jimenez promises the usual budget of reforms in which successful insurrectionist leaders are so affluent. The country has suffered from a depreciated currency which has much to do with present discontent. Whether Jimenez is the man for the hour is doubtful. It is expected that he desires to exploit the country for the enrichment of himself and followers. He is, from all accounts, an uncertain quantity.

SIX MILLION LETTERS ASTRAY.

"It is estimated that during the last year 6,000,000,000 pieces of mail matter, including all classes, were posted in the United States," writes Patti Lyle Collins in "The Ladies' Home Journal" for September. "Of this number, 6,312,731 were sent to the dead-letter office, making an average receipt of about 21,000 letters and parcels for each working day. During this period more than 85,000 pieces were dispatched either with insufficient postage or none at all, 32,000 bore no address whatever, 34,000 were misdirected, 200,000 were unclaimed at hotels, and something more than the last number were sent to fictitious addresses. And to these figures must be added 2,973,387 letters and circulars without inclosures of obvious value which could not be returned to the senders and were destroyed. More than 50,000 letters contained money amounting to $38,595, while 32,422 included drafts, money orders, etc., to the value of $945,000, to say nothing of 30,000 with photographs."

BRAINS REPAIRED,

Polished and Sharpened by an Expert.

What are brains made of?

Albumen and delicate particles of phosphate of Potash. Chemical examination of the perspiration and urine will determine the amount of recent brain work, by the amount of phosphate of potash found, for these delicate particles are thrown out from brain and nerve centers during nervous activity, and find their way back to earth through pores, kidneys, bowels, etc.

There is but one true way to repair the daily losses, and that way is to furnish the body with food containing a sufficient amount of these two elements. When the brain is not properly fed, the evidence is shown by a gradual decrease in the mental and physical powers of the body.

A food expert of the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., at Battle Creek, Mich., has prepared a crisp, dainty and delicious food for the express purpose of quickly and surely rebuilding the brain and nerve centres, and has given it the name of Grape-Nuts.

This food is made by selecting the proper parts of grains and treating them by heat, moisture and time in practically the same manner Nature does in the human body during the first part of digestion. The result is that the finished food not only contains the needed elements for brain building, but they are ready to be presented to Mother Nature in such a shape that she quickly absorbs and uses them. The good, solid, substantial results obtained every day by people who use Grape-Nuts, prove the facts.

The new food is found in all first-class grocery stores, and is one of the most toothsome and palatable novelties yet produced, in the way of food, requiring no cooking or preparation of any sort, but, on the contrary, it is ready for immediate use and suited to the athlete, brain worker, epicure, or invalid.

LOSING OR GAINING A DAY.

"Where a Day is Lost or Gained," is the title of a paper in the "Century" for September, in which Benjamin E. Smith, editor of "The Century Dictionary," tells of the difficulty of reckoning the days of the week, in traveling east or westward.

The difficulty that may lie in a matter apparently so simple is well shown in one of Poe's stories. The obdurate father of the maiden—evidently with the Greek calends in mind—promises to give her to the objectionable swain when three Sundays occur in one week. To his consternation, and the joy of the lovers, this seemingly impossible event indubitably happens when two sea-captains appear together upon the scene who have circumnavigated the globe in opposite directions.

As a matter of fact, this bit of fiction represents what is taking place every day in the year, and must continue to occur as long as our present method of reckoning time is retained. And the reason for this is simple and familiar. The civil day begins and ends at midnight, but for convenience of explanation let us assume (as is the practice of astronomers) that the day begins at noon and ends at the following noon. It is clear that the interval of time between two successive noons will be, for us, twenty-four hours (a day as measured by one complete rotation of the earth) only when we remain on the same meridian. For if at noon on the beginning of Monday we move, say, over a space of fifteen degrees toward the east, it is obvious that when the sun again stands at noon, for us, only twenty-three hours will have elapsed since we shall have accomplished one twenty-fourth of his journey for him; that is, Tuesday will begin, for us, one hour too soon. Similarly, if we repeat this eastward movement, Wednesday will begin two hours too soon; and so on until, when our starting point is reached, we shall, in count of days, be just twenty-four hours ahead in our reckoning. The result will be that, instead of ending the journey in twenty-four days (as we seem to do) and on a Wednesday, we shall actually complete it in twenty-three days and on Tuesday. On the other hand, if we move westward in this way, the reverse will happen; our days, as measured from noon to noon, will be twenty-five hours long, and we shall actually complete the trip in twenty-five days and on Thursday. For the stay-at-home, and for travelers returning thus from the east and from the west, there will, accordingly, if no correction is made in the reckoning, be for each day three distinct dates, each perfectly correct by diary or log; and each day of the week—not Sunday simply—will be repeated thrice.

How much time he gains who does not look to see what his neighbour says or does or thinks, but only at what he does himself, to make it just and holy.

Lord Selkirk had a formal garden,—an Italian garden, as it is called; and his gardener was very proud of it. "One day," says the "Golden Penny," Lord Selkirk found a boy shut up in the summer house at the end of the terrace of St. Mary's Isle, and was informed by his gardener that it was for stealing apples. On reaching the other end of the terrace, where there was another summer house, Selkirk beheld the gardener's son looking dolefully out of the window. "Eh, John, what's this? Has your boy been stealing, too?" "Na, na, my lord!" was the answer. "I just put him in for semetry."—"Youth's Companion."

SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EX- C. LENT SERVICE TO POINTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY, the chief as well as the popular artery of travel between Philadelphia and Washington, and all points South and Southwest, maintains a superb service of magnificently equipped trains, which leave Philadelphia daily at 7.20 a.m., 5.34 p.m., and 6.55 p.m., reaching, without change, all the chief Southern cities.

The Washington and Southwestern Vestibule Limited, which has long been famous as one of the handsomest trains in America, now has an added feature of attraction in the form of a beautiful Library and Observation car. This will be very much appreciated by the travelling public, as it affords an opportunity of viewing, under the most favorable circumstances, the charming sub-scenery of the historic Piedmont region, as well as the uplands of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The car is for the use of all passengers holding Pullman tickets on the train, and is handsomely furnished with easy, richly-upholstered, movable chairs. It also has a wide, fully-covered extension platform at the rear, capable of accommodating quite a large number of people, who may prefer to travel in the open air and enjoy the unobstructed view of the whirling panorama. The Washington and Southwestern Limited leaves Philadelphia at 6.55 p.m., daily, and is composed of Pullman Drawing-Room

Sleeping Cars, to Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Memphis, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, La. In addition to these it carries one first-class thoroughfare coach, as well as a well-appointed Dining-Car, in which meals are served between Philadelphia and New Orleans. In this connection it is worthy of note that the Southern Railway is the only railroad in the South operating a system of dining-cars, and the menu and meals upon them are maintained at the highest standard.

The Washington and Chattanooga Limited of the Southern Railway, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., is another handsome train. It carries through Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans, La., via Lynchburg, Va., and Bristol, Tenn. Combined Café, Parlor and Observation Cars are operated between Radford, Va., and Attalla, Ala. Meals are served in the Café Compartment at all hours on the European plan. Luxurious chairs in the Parlor Compartments are available for passengers at a moderate charge, the observation portion of car affording a most comfortable location for viewing this magnificent scenery. Passengers occupying Pullman cars have use of this car without extra charge.

The New York and Florida Express, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., carries Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., via Charlotte, N. C. Connections are made at Columbia, S. C., with the Charleston Division for Charleston, S. C., and at Trenton Junction for Aiken, S. C.

The United States Fast Mail of the Southern Railway, leaving Washington, D. C., daily, at 11.15 a.m., connecting with train leaving Philadelphia at 7.20 a.m., is one of the most popular trains operated in the South. This is composed of thoroughfare coaches and Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars between Washington, D. C., and New Orleans, La., Jacksonville, Fla., Charlotte, N. C., Augusta, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., with Pullman Sleeping Cars between Salisbury, N. C., and Memphis, Tenn., and Dining-Car between Washington, D. C., and Spartanburg, S. C. Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will be pleased to furnish rates, time-tables, and any further information.

MIDSUMMER SONG.

The amber smile of early morn
Hath flashed across the rippling corn;
And on the spider's netting frail
The dew is gleaming bright,
As if an elf had lost her veil
While fleeing from the light.

From out the wood the streamlets run
On silver feet to greet the sun;
No bramble snare their steps can bind,
Their laughter rings above,
Where balmy blossoms weight the wind
With messages of love.

Now swells the din of merchant bees
Along the meadow's flowery seas,
While music floats from every bough
In carols sweet and clear:
It is the heart of summer now,—
The noontide of the year.
—Samuel Minturn Peck, in "Rings and Love Knots."

A SMUGGLER'S TRICK.

If people would take as much trouble, and show as much ingenuity, in doing an honest business as they do in evading the law, they might be quite as rich, and with infinitely less danger. Some of the methods adopted to grow rich fraudulently are as ingenious as they are dangerous and wicked. A story is told of a certain merchant of New York who for years was suspected of smuggling precious stones into this country.

Every time he returned from Europe he was carefully searched, and it was even proved that he did not swallow his diamonds before going ashore, but nothing was ever found except a few inferior stones, and these he did not try to conceal.
Traps were set for him, but without avail.

At last a detective, cleverer than the rest, by carefully watching the doings of the suspected man and his partners, hit upon a clue. He found that whenever one of the members of the suspected firm arrived in New York upon a steamer, another member of the firm, or an agent, always took a trip back on the same vessel, and always engaged the same stateroom.
He invariably had the whole stateroom, so that he was alone upon the voyage. This clue led to the discovery of the fraud.

It was found that the importer, during his voyage to New York, would cut a small piece out of the flooring beneath the carpet of his stateroom, and after concealing the diamonds in the holes, would put back the flooring and replace the carpet. When he left the ship he left the diamonds behind him, and thus none were ever found upon him.

A few days after, when the vessel was about to start for Europe, the other member of the firm secured the stateroom and went on board, accompanied by his confederate. The latter would then go ashore, and take the diamonds with him. As there are no custom officers on duty when vessels depart, he would be allowed to pass unmolested, and to carry in his valuable cargo.

HENS DIDN'T HAVE TO WORK.

Thackeray's "Book of Snobs," comprehensive, though it is, would have been broadened and enriched by this anecdote, which is indefinitely credited to "an English newspaper":

"A young woman of Sheffield came into a fortune and promptly hunted up a country house, where she played the role of chatelaine to the manner born according to her own ideas of the part. One day some of her old-time friends came to see her, and she condescended to show them all over the place.

"What beautiful chickens!" exclaimed the visitors, when they came to the poultry-yard.

"Yes. All prize birds!" haughtily explained the hostess.

"Do they lay every day?"

"Oh, they could, of course; but," grandiloquently, 'in our position it isn't necessary for them to do so.'"

NATIONAL EXPORT EXPOSITION, PHILADELPHIA.

Reduced Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The National Export Exposition, which opens at Philadelphia on September 14th, and continues until November 30th, will be the most interesting and important event occurring in Philadelphia since the Centennial Exhibition in 1876. In addition to its valuable commercial exhibits it will present many features of popular interest and amusement. The United States

Marine Band, Sousa's Band, the Banda Rossa, Innes' Band, Damrosch's Orchestra, and other celebrated bands will furnish music alternately, and a Midway Plaisance, equal if not superior to the famous World's Fair Midway at Chicago, and comprising a Chinese Village, a Chinese Theatre, acrobats, and customs; an Oriental Village, London Ghost Show, Hagenbeck's Wild Animal Show, Blarney Castle, and many other unique presentations, will furnish abundant and diversified amusement. Arrangements have also been made for Mandolin, Guitar, and Banjo Concerts, and for a grand chorus from the German Singing Societies.

For this occasion the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion tickets from all points on its line, to Philadelphia and return, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip plus price of admission. These tickets will be sold during the continuance of the Exposition and will be good for return passage until November 30th.

For specific rates and additional information apply to nearest Ticket Agent.

FRANK SIGNS.

In Bengal, native baboos who have attended the Calcutta Medical College for one term, and who have failed in their examination, abandon the idea of any further study of medicine, return to their homes, and hang out a sign upon which are written words to the following effect:

"Dr. Baboo —; failed first year; fee four annas,"—that is, eight cents per visit.

If he is so fortunate as to have successfully passed his first examination, he continues another term; and if he fails in the second examination, he will return home and announce himself as follows:

"Dr. Baboo —; failed second year; fee, eight annas,"—that is, sixteen cents per visit.

If he be able to get through the second examination, and pass on to the end of the third year and then fail, he will establish himself in practice with great confidence, and his sign will read:

"Dr. Baboo —; failed third year; fee, one rupee,"—about thirty-three cents per visit.

Thus is a physician's professional fee graded according to his qualifications.

Cleveland Bible Training School.

CONDUCTED BY

J. Walter Malone and Emma B. Malone.

This institution was not designed to be, nor does it aspire to be, a theological seminary. Such a purpose would be contrary to the spirit of Quakerism. It is intended to meet the needs of a large and increasing class of persons who are clearly called to Christian work, and who feel the need of a more thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, of acquaintance with the various forms of soul-saving effort, and of association with experienced workers.

The School has enthusiastic classes in Consecutive Bible Study and in Scripture Doctrine. It finds for its students abundant opportunities for service in connection with the Friends' Missions, the city rescue missions, visiting the sick and the needy, conducting children's meetings, mothers' meetings, Bible classes, etc.

It has classes in English and in Elocution for the cultivation of proper expression. Also, classes in Ancient History, Church History, and Bible Geography; and short courses in Psychology, Ethics, and Christian Evidences.

It keeps constantly in view, as necessary for effectual service:

I. A clean, pure, fully-justified life. II. Complete consecration to God, including both submission and dedication. III. The baptism with the Holy Spirit for perfection of character and service, and for the proper understanding of the Scriptures. IV. An ever widening and deepening knowledge of the Scriptures. V. Earnest Desire and effort for the salvation of others.

One thought pervades the entire work, viz.: That it is for God, and that His own Spirit must direct it.

The expense of attendance, including tuition, board, washing, heat, and light, is $3.00 per week, or $100 for the school year.

JAPAN IS NOT A COUNTRY OF FLOWERS.

In spite of the fact that flowers are so inseparably associated with everything Japanese, it would be a mistake to assume that Japan is a land of flowers; for wild as well as garden flowers are far more profuse in many sections of this country. Japan is, however, rich in cultivated flowers that are grown in great profusion in garden and nursery in the suburbs of all the cities.

Flower sellers, carrying their fragrant burdens in huge baskets, are met with everywhere, and they are patronized by the poor as well as by the rich, for the prices are low enough to bring them within the reach of all. Although there are many varieties of flowers, few, comparatively, are used in flower arrangement; for the Japanese limit their choice to those with which they are most familiar, and such as are most closely associated with the different months or seasons, seldom or never using rare or unknown flowers.—From "Japanese Flower Arrangement," by Theodore Wores, in the August, Fiction Number of "Scribner's."

LITERARY NOTE.

Professor Hugo Münsterberg, in the September "Atlantic," in his article on "The Germans and the Americans," discusses the national and personal differences between the two great nations, showing how comparatively slight misunderstandings, which might easily be cured or corrected, have created strong but unnecessary prejudices. He believes that "there can be no nobler end than to help remove the foolish, narrow-minded prejudices on both sides and with them the mood of petty quarrels and unnecessary frictions."

MONEY FOUND IN THE MAIL BAGS.

"It seems almost incredible that in the neighborhood of $40,000 in actual cash should have been confined to letters during the last year, and harder still to credit that the most exhaustive efforts failed to find the owners of one-fourth of that amount," writes Patti Lyle Collins in "The Ladies' Home Journal" for September. "The envelopes which are addressed are kept on file for four years, blank ones not so long, but in either case a liberal margin of time is allowed for claimants to appear before the money is finally turned into the Treasury to the credit of the Post-Office Department. In addition to the money contained in letters during the same period, something like $10,000 was found loose in the mails. It is officially styled 'loose money.'"

A BIG UMBRELLA.

One of the novel attractions of the forthcoming Parisian World's Fair is to be a gigantic umbrella which will shelter thirty thousand people. So many people have met with the unpleasantness incident to a sudden fall of rain when attending an exhibition, and have tried to crowd into the already overcrowded refuges from the storm, that the idea can hardly fail to meet with approval.

It is to a Frenchwoman, Madame Percha-Giverne, well known in the gay capital for her inventions in parasols and walking-sticks, that Paris is to owe this gigantic umbrella. It will be more than three hundred feet in height, and will be supported by a metal column, the base of which will be more than one hundred and twenty feet in diameter. The covering will be four hundred and fifty feet across, and will be decorated with designs in colored glass, which will serve at night to illumine the exterior and interior with electric light.

The inside of what may be termed the handle will be divided into four stories, three of which will be under cover, and the fourth above. In each of the covered stories there is to be a cafe. Concerts and theatrical performances will also be given in these buildings. On the fourth floor a restaurant, sheltered by a movable cupola, will be under the management of one of the principal firms of Paris. It has already been engaged by this firm. Comfortable elevators will convey visitors to the top.

A QUAKER INTERVIEW.

Goethe, like many other celebrated men, was somewhat annoyed by the visits of strangers. A student once called at his house and requested to see him. Goethe, contrary to his usual custom, consented to be seen.

After the student had waited some time in the ante-chamber, the poet appeared, and, without speaking, took a chair and seated himself in the middle of the room. The student, far from being embarrassed by his unexpected proceeding, took a lighted wax candle in his hand and walked round the poet, deliberately viewing him on all sides. Then, setting down the candle, he drew out his purse, took from it a small piece of coin, put it on the table, and left the room without saying a word.

GOD'S REMEMBRANCE.

"When the spring comes, the oak tree, with its thousands upon thousands of leaves, blossoms all over. The great heart of the oak tree remembers every remotest tip of every farthest branch, and sends to each the message and the power of new life. And yet we do not think of the heart of the oak tree as if it were burdened with such multitudinous remembrance. It is simply the thrill of the common life translated into these million forms . . . Somewhat in that way it seems to me that we may think of God's remembrance of his million children. . . . That patient sufferer, that toilsome worker, are far-off leaves on the great tree of His life; far off, and yet as near to the beating of His heart as any leaf on all the tree. He remembers them as the heart remembers the finger tips to which it sends the blood. . . . If any doubt about Him, issuing from them, stops up the channel so that He cannot get to them, He waits behind the hindrance, behind the doubt, and tries to get it away, and feels the withering of the unbelieving, unfed leaf as if a true part of Himself were dying. And when the obstacle gives way, and the doubt is broken and the path is once more open, it is almost with a shout which we can hear that the life blood leaps to its work again."

WHY IT SHOULD MEAN MUCH TO BE A FRIEND.

THE days of harsh, strict sectarianism have gone by, we hope, forever. There is no place in the Christian Church for party spirit or for party cries, and the denomination which draws apart and tries to live to itself, and rejoices not to see the truth advance unless it advances under its own banners, is spiritually sick, and that, too, seriously. There is something better to do in this world than to glorify and exalt a particular denomination as though God had chosen it as His peculiar people, and had passed the others by with less favor or no favor at all. What we have to say at present is not in the interests of sectarianism, nor shall we ever encourage such a tendency. But we do want to say a few plain words about the branch of the Church which this paper represents.

Friends have no Gospel of their own different from the old, old Gospel. They simply give an interpretation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and the value of their mission depends directly upon the correctness of this interpretation. We often talk of "views as held by Friends," or "Christian doctrine as held by Friends," but this does not mean that Friends set up another Gospel over against the generally accepted Gospel. Not at all. It only means that those who compose this branch of the Church understand Christ's Gospel somewhat differently from many—indeed, most—other Christians.

Everybody who approaches the Gospel of Christ must in some sense interpret it before he can tell it to anybody else. He must decide what it means. This is, of course, precisely what the apostle Paul did, and in his interpretation he saw somewhat differently from Peter. The Greek Fathers of the Church interpreted it very differently from the Latin Fathers, Subscribers in Great Britain and Ireland may remit to our agents, Headley Brothers, 14 Bishopsgate Street, Without, London, E. C., England, or directly to this office. Subscriptions and postage, 10s. Payable in advance.

Advertisements, notices and changes of address, should reach the office not later than Seventh-day noon, for the number of the succeeding week. Remittances and letters on business should be addressed to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

but they both worked from the same Gospel and they both worshiped the same Lord. In the course of time Friends arose and gave their special interpretation, and they are God's peculiar people in so far, and only in so far, as their interpretation is the true and essentially correct one.

Those who belong to this branch of the Church naturally believe, as they ought to do, that their interpretation is the correct one, otherwise they would put their membership elsewhere, and so long as they stay in this branch of the Church it is their duty to know why they are there, and to magnify their profession. It is a joy to us, certainly, to see the advance of truth anywhere, and we rejoice when we see an increase of spirituality in any religious denomination, but it is our business to go steadily on with the proclamation of the message which seems to us to be the true one, antagonizing no one, attacking no one, exalting ourselves above no one, yet giving a ringing message of what seems to us the true conception of the religion of Jesus Christ.

The thing which surprises and discourages us is that so many of our members do not realize that we have any distinctive message, and do not throb with love for the branch of the Church to which they belong. It is impossible to make a branch of the Church a mighty power in the world unless its members believe in every fibre of themselves that they have a truth worth living and dying for, if need be, unless they stand for this truth as soldiers stand for their country, and unless they feel impelled by a power above themselves to make others see it. Our main weakness now comes from too loose a grip on our central truths, too little of the throb, too little devotion. We need to see, and to see clearly, that we have an interpretation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ which this present age needs,—an interpretation which goes back of forms and dead systems, back of rituals and ceremonies, back of theories about Christ, to Christ Himself, the Life, the Truth, the Way. May we be a “peculiar people,” because we make this message so clear and plain that we shall reach the hungry heart of the multitude about us with this Bread of Life.

THE WORK OF THE WINTER.

WE are beginning to realize in all our widely separated communities that we Christians have solemn duties and responsibilities, and at length we understand that we cannot live unto ourselves. We see, or are beginning to see, that the weak and undeveloped Christians in our meetings must be fed and strengthened, and that the unconverted and non-religious persons just outside our gates must have the Gospel of salvation presented to them. It is something to have awakened to this fact.

The best thing about the Christianity of our day is its care for others, its desire to reach and help others, its feeling that all persons, high or low, rich or poor, ignorant or cultured, have a claim on us to hear the Gospel. There never has been in Christian history a time when so many persons were unselfishly giving out what they have received and undergoing hardship, privation and suffering to bear comfort and life to the hearts of men. This is seen not only in the mission stations around the globe, but also in the earnest, devoted, faithful work which goes on in thousands of our communities to make the Gospel effective in the lives of our citizens.

We have been hearing all summer of successful meetings in different parts of the country, and while the hosts of tourists from our hot cities have been seeking change and rest, there have not been wanting those who have gone steadily on through the heat with their work of seeking to bring men to the Saviour; but the winter is the time when such work can be done to best advantage, as the hindrances are then less and the opportunities greater. It has already been felt by some who have carefully studied the situation that a great wave of religious awakening is about to sweep over the country this winter. Such a result will certainly follow if Christians fulfill their duties and are as alive as they should be to the needs of the time.

Those who have been struggling along without the comfort of religious faith and without the strength and peace and assurance for which all serious hearts yearn can be found in every community and can be reached by a clear and simple presentation of the Gospel.

The healthiest religious awakening can come only when individual Christians become aroused to a sense of their own duties and responsibilities toward their neighbors, and hear the silent Macedonian cries which go out of every home where Christ does not dwell. We must depend largely, to be sure, upon the work of chosen and gifted evangelists, but their success in turn depends in great measure upon the faithfulness of the individual Christians in life, in word and in power. It is well nigh impossible to get the tide of religious power to rise higher in a community than the spiritual level of the church members. An evangelist may come and he may labor with all the zeal and earnestness of which he is possessed, but he cannot reach and convict sinners over the heads of careless and lifeless and spiritless “professors” of religion. The Christians of a community set the standard for the place, and they determine very largely the attitude of the rest of the community toward the religious life. Let the right kind of evangelistic work be carried on in a community where the Christians themselves are full of vitality and power, and we believe the work will prove almost irresistible; but where the church is dead and the conception of Christianity is low, the work of the evangelist is likely to be followed by meagre results unless he can first kindle the inactive members to a new life and a new power. We believe the time is ripe for a great awakening, a powerful religious movement, and we look for it to begin this winter; but it means, does it not, that a new zeal and earnestness and love for other souls shall possess all our membership first? May it be so.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR CRISIS.

QUEEN VICTORIA has hoped and prayed that her reign might close in peace, and though England has in recent years been on the very verge of war several times her statesmen have in each case succeeded in finding a peaceful solution. For the last few days it has seemed almost impossible to hope for a peaceable settlement of the South African complication, but we can hardly believe it will end in war. However, before this reaches our readers the issue will be known.

It is not easy to put the situation clearly, since there is much disagreement regarding the real issue; but perhaps the following view will help our readers to understand the difficult complication a little better. The Dutch settled in South Africa and founded the South African Republic. English capitalists discovered that it was rich in gold and great mining companies were formed to extract the gold. The natural result was that hordes of foreigners flocked to this

Transvaal country, as it is called, to work in the mines and to make sudden fortunes,—a condition of things which we have seen going on in Alaska. The city of Johannesburg sprang up and rapidly grew to the size of a hundred thousand inhabitants. The Boers, as the Dutch colonists are called, are very shrewd and very jealous of foreign influence. They have found themselves overrun with foreigners ("Outlanders," as they are called), who do not become citizens of the Republic, who do not add to the material strength of the government, and who yet demand the privileges and the local suffrage which the Boers enjoy. The Boers claim that these "Outlanders" plot against the Republic in the interests of the British, and the "Outlanders" themselves claim that they are subjected to unendurable treatment from the Boers, whose President is the shrewd, able Paul Krüger, popularly known as "Oom Paul." Then, too, the British Government claims that the South African Republic is not strictly independent, but is subject to the overlordship of Great Britain, and even the Boers have admitted Great Britain's right of supervision in matters of foreign relation. But in recent years the Boers have suspected that England intends eventually to absorb them in its chain of conquests, and they have as a consequence made life as difficult as possible for all English subjects in the Transvaal. The present crisis grows out of the determination of the British Cabinet, especially of Joseph Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary, to force the Boers to give local franchise and specified privileges to British subjects and other "Outlanders." The Boers, on their side, are determined not to yield this point unless England will formally renounce its claim of right to supervise and direct the affairs of the Republic. Neither party has a superabundance of the grace of yielding, and the diplomatic contest has been a stubborn one. Now, unless there is a yielding on one side or the other war must come, and it will be no play day affair, even though the Boers are few in number. They defeated the British troops in two hard-fought battles in 1881, and if they fight at all they will fight hard. But we hope better counsels will prevail.

The great amount of property belonging to the Roman Catholic Church is held in the names of the bishops and clergy. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has recently decided that property thus held by Archbishop Katzer, of Milwaukee, is subject to taxation. As a result, the Consultors of the Diocese have become incorporated, and the Archbishop has transferred all his church property to them. The same course is to be taken in Michigan.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

BY JOSHUA L. BAILY.

In a recent visit which I made in Maine, one of my chief objects was to observe the working of the prohibitory law of that State. While I found many persons who considered the law in a large measure successful, I was somewhat surprised at the number of those who condemned it as a failure. I found the latter were of two classes—those who were opposed to the law, and would like to have it repealed, because of some interest which they had in the liquor business, or because it interfered with or restricted the indulgence of their appetite. The other class was made up chiefly of those who professed to be Prohibitionists, but who pronounced the law a failure because it did not fully suppress the traffic.

I resolved to make an investigation for myself, and availed myself of every opportunity that offered for obtaining information. I spent three days in Portland. At one of the principal hotels where I dined I noticed the menu contained no wine list, and I asked the waiter the reason for it. He told me the law would not allow it. Had I dined at any prominent hotel in almost any other city—New York, Philadelphia or Boston—I would have been confronted with a wine list covering a whole page. At a prominent hotel where I dined recently in another city, there were seventy-three kinds of wine named on the wine list—seventy-three invitations to drink. All of these were wanting at the Portland Hotel. Methought the law certainly doesn't fail in this. I noticed there were no wines or other alcoholic liquors on the table. The popping of corks, so observable at other hotels, was wanting here. I asked the waiter if one could not have a bottle of wine; he looked very much surprised and told me about the Maine law, no doubt thinking I was very ignorant. Again, I thought, the law doesn't fail in this.

I took up two of the principal newspapers of Portland, "The Argus" and "The Express." I looked through them, column after column, and nowhere found any liquors advertised for sale or any information as to where they could be had. There was beef, but no beer; bread, but no brandy; corn and oats and wheat, but no whisky; dry goods and clothing and groceries, but no liquors of any kind. In almost any paper in any other city outside of Maine I would have no difficulty in finding where any sort of liquor could be had, either in the smallest or the largest quantities.

I walked up and down the streets of Portland—not the principal streets only, but the narrow streets and out-of-the-way places, and I nowhere read on any sign the word "liquors" or "saloon," nor was there in any window on any street any bottles or decanters of wine or other liquors, nor were there any beer or whisky barrels, full or empty, to be seen on any pavement. I found out what corresponded in Portland as nearly as there could be any resemblance to what is familiarly known as the "slum district" in other cities. From 9 o'clock until midnight I walked through the streets which had been named to me as most nearly deserving that appellation. I didn't see any store or building which gave any outward indication of its being a place where liquors were sold. I didn't meet a drunken person, and only one upon whom I discovered the odor of liquor, and he was a policeman. I was surprised at the loneliness and quiet of the streets, and concluded that the Portland people either spent their evenings at home, or went to bed early. A policeman kindly gave me the information that a theatre had opened that evening on Peak's Island, a few miles out in the harbor, and that a steamboat load of people had gone out there to attend the entertainment, and he said that the boat would be due on its return trip at twenty minutes after 11 o'clock. I concluded that this rendezvous in the Portland harbor was probably another Coney Island, and that the denizens of the district I had been visiting had gone out there to have a frolic; and so, taking a position in the shadow of an electric light, I stood waiting their return. As they came in and passed by me I could see every countenance distinctly. They were men, women and children. I looked at them with surprise, as I failed to discover any evidence that a single one of them had been drinking. There was no alcoholic odor on the breath of any of them. They were a quiet, orderly, respectable company—just such as any one would expect to meet coming home from a Methodist meeting. I took the liberty of asking an explanation of a gentleman who was walking alone, and he told me that neither love nor money would buy a drop of any alcoholic liquor on Peak's Island. He kindly told me what he might have supposed I did not know, that the island was a part of the territory of the prohibition State of Maine. Surely, I thought to myself, some of those people who so flipantly told me prohibition was a dead failure were not in the habit of visiting Peak's island.

The tramp which I made through the streets of Portland that night was made alone. I felt a sense of security which I would have felt in few other cities. I have been through what is known as the "slum districts" in my own native city of Philadelphia, and in New York, but I was always accompanied by one or more police officers. I have been in nearly all of our Atlantic cities, and in many in the West, but never in any city at the hours named, have I witnessed the same degree of order and decorum which I saw in Portland.

Notwithstanding these conditions which I have described, I do not mean to give the impression that there is no liquor selling or drunkenness in Portland—quite otherwise. The omission of wine lists at the hotels, and the absence of liquors from hotel tables, no advertising of liquors for sale, no saloon signboards on the streets, are certainly so many outward indications of an observance of the law, an observance which in a very large degree removes temptation. To guests at the hotels, readers of newspapers, and to those who walk the streets of Portland, whether strangers or residents, the temptation is not, as in other cities, constantly presented. It is certainly a much safer place for young men to live and grow up than in other places where the temptation is ever before them. But the sale and use of intoxicants in Portland, as in many other places in Maine, is carried on clandestinely under such conditions as are very unattractive. In the very hotel where I dined, as before described, I found in an out-of-the-way place in the basement an apartment which answered the purpose of a bar-room. There was an unpainted pine counter, and a number of bottles displayed containing ginger ale, sarsaparilla, and other such drinks as are commonly called "soft," and there was a bartender, and either under the counter or in some other hiding place, or in a refrigerator, there were stronger drinks which could be had when called for. There were no stools, nor chairs, nor tables in the room, no pictures on the walls, nor any of the ordinary paraphernalia of a bar-room to induce any one to tarry longer than necessary. I was in this apartment several times, and usually found the bartender alone, and found him obligingly willing to be interviewed. He told me the public authorities knew perfectly well that liquors were being sold there; that the officers usually came there every six months and made them pay a fine of $100 and costs, and then so long as they kept certain city regulations not to sell liquors on Sunday or to minors or drunkards, or were complained of by no one, they were not molested until another six months came around. I found similar apartments under like conditions in some other hotels in Portland, and I found interior or back rooms in a number of fruit and grocery stores where liquors were for sale under very similar conditions; but these were not, however, the most reputable stores, and they were usually in out-of-the-way places, not likely to be found by strangers, and not likely to be frequented by citizens who had a care for their reputation.

I have been a not infrequent visitor in Portland in recent years, and what I have last witnessed may be taken as the prevailing conditions for a number of years past; but my familiarity with Portland extends far back in this recent period. Portland, its streets, its commerce, its wharves, were familiar to me more than forty years ago. There were then liquor saloons on nearly all the business streets, and there were blocks of buildings on the streets near the wharves where liquor selling seemed to be the chief business. Jamaica rum was one of the principal commodities dealt in, as evidenced by the barrels which crowded the wharves. There were then some half a dozen breweries in Portland, and at least two distilleries. Where are these saloons now, and the barrels of Jamaica rum? What has become of the breweries and the distilleries? They are not there now. What caused their removal? If it was not the prohibitory law which closed the saloons and stopped the importation of rum, and silenced the breweries and distilleries, what was it? Tell me, ye whose traffic has been destroyed, and who yet denounce the law as a failure. Tell me, ye professed friends of prohibition, who denounce the law as a failure because it doesn't work miracles—tell me, what has brought about this marvelous change.

It is said that the blessings which are nearest us, and which are everywhere about us, are those of which we take least note, and I am afraid it is so with many of the good people in Portland, and elsewhere in Maine, and I don't know but what some of them have short memories. Those who can remember far enough back have only to recall the circumstances of forty years ago, and compare them with the prevailing conditions of to-day.

I made a visit to Bangor, but found affairs there so similar to what I saw in Portland that it is not necessary to describe them, and there are other cities and towns, some of which I visited, and others of which I have reliable knowledge of, where the conditions are much the same; but in many of the smaller towns, and generally throughout the rural sections of the State, where I have not only had the opportunity for personal observation, but opportunity also for collecting reliable information, I feel warranted in asserting that prohibition is in a good measure successful. In very many places drinking and drunkenness are unknown. Young people have grown up to manhood and womanhood without having known the sight or taste or presence of intoxicating liquors, and I have been assured by men and women of mature years that they have never seen that sight to us so sadly common—a drunken person.

I have spoken of two classes of persons in Maine who denounce the prohibitory law as a failure—one class, those who do so from selfish motives, and demand the repeal of the law; but this is not a very formidable class. The cry of repeal has been many times raised, but never made much headway. It is only a few years since one of the political parties of the State made repeal a plank of its platform and on that plank they were able to elect less than half a dozen members in a House having a membership of more than one hundred, and the repeal scheme was an ignominious failure.

That prohibition is the settled policy of Maine is very generally admitted, and it would be suicidal on the part of any party to make its repeal an issue.

The other class is made up, as I have already stated, chiefly of prohibitionists. By this, I do not mean members of the prohibition party, but professed friends of prohibition without respect to any party affiliations. They condemn prohibition as a failure, because it does not everywhere stop the sale of liquor, close all the saloons, and make sobriety universal throughout the State. It seems to me that such are very unreasonable, as well as inconsistent and unwise. They don't condemn the law against stealing as a failure, although thieving may be committed in different parts of the State on every day in the year.

The worst foes of prohibition—those who are really doing the most mischief—are not those who openly denounce the law because they hate it and would have it repealed. Little do the professed prohibitionists think of the harm they are doing, unwittingly it may be, when they put themselves in the way of being quoted, as they are quoted throughout the country by the enemies of prohibition, who say, "Why, even the prohibitionists of Maine admit that prohibition is a failure."

There is no failure on the part of the law. It is everything that could be asked for to attain the end in view—the suppression of the drink traffic, and the punishment of those who are law-defiant. Many of those who are elected or appointed to administer the law are failures, because they do not enforce it, and many of the prohibitionists themselves are failures also (I dislike to say it, but the truth must be told) because they do not give to the officers of the law the aid and support which as good citizens it is their duty to give.

A case in point let me narrate. A lady in Portland, a widow, lived in a house which she owned, having a family of several children, among whom was a grown up daughter and two young sons just coming into manhood. A party purchased the adjoining property, opened a store, and in a back room he established a bar for the sale of liquors. The apartment where this illegal business was carried on was in full view of the windows of the lady's house. The lady was indignant at the scenes which were daily enacted before the eyes of her daughter and her sons, and she resolved, if possible, to have the nuisance suppressed. She was diffident about going to the public authorities, but resolved to lay the whole matter before a friend of hers, a prohibitionist of some prominence, and get him to intercede for her. She put the whole case before him. He assured her of his sympathy, how very greatly he regretted the unpleasant circumstances under which she was placed, but that the party who had purchased the property and of whom she complained was one with whom he had business relations and whom he would not like to offend, and that any interference on his part would be a loss to him in his own business; therefore he would have to be excused from doing anything for her. This man was a coward, the meanest kind of a coward. All his professed interest in the cause of prohibition was nothing to him when his own selfish interests lay in the other scale. I do not know how many such prohibitionists there may be in Maine; I would not like to think that there are many. But I must be candid, and the truth must be told, even if somebody is offended. I have great reason to believe, from the testimony presented, that the cause of prohibition in Maine is greatly injured and its enforcement hindered and retarded by the apathy and indifference of many of its professed friends, and their unwillingness, as in the Portland case already cited, to do the simple duty which devolves upon every good citizen to aid to the extent of his ability in the enforcement of the law.

The people of Maine have upon their statute books the best laws enacted by any State for the suppression of the drink traffic, and the encouragement and education of the people in habits of sobriety. In very few of the other States have the friends and advocates of temperance any such backing. The laws in many of the States serve the protection rather than the suppression of the traffic. Whatever advance is made along temperance lines elsewhere, is made against fearful odds, against a strongly entrenched and powerful foe. We do not mean to say that the people of Maine have no foe to encounter. The liquor traffic is everywhere a relentless, law-defiant and unscrupulous foe to the highest and best interests of the community, and the drinking passion will always and everywhere resist restrictive legislation, and be fruitful in expedients to avoid and evade it. But in the prohibitory law, and in the public sentiment of the people which sustains it, the prohibitionists of Maine, and the whole people of Maine, have everything to encourage and stimulate them—not only on account of the advance so far made, but because of the rare opportunities which they enjoy of keeping their State not simply abreast, but in harmony with the motto of the coat-of-arms of Maine (Dirigo) in the very forefront of this great reform.

HOW WE MAY BE GREAT IN THE EYES OF GOD AND MAN.

BY IDA BELLE BALDWIN.

And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed Him.—Matthew 20: 29.

"A great multitude followed Him." Was it because He was a king? Was it because He was a great ruler? Christ was neither from a worldly point of view. Why, then, did the people follow Him? Because He served them. "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant," were the words of Jesus. If we wish to be great we must serve others. We find this true in Christ's time; yes, and long before His life on earth, and up to the present age, we find this rule the same, that if we wish to be great we must serve others.

Why was Paul considered great? Why was he so loved by the people? Was it because of his wealth? Was it for his education, his beautiful word pictures? No; but because he served them. He spent his life for the good of others; he was willing to lose and did lose his life that he might serve Christ and help humanity.

Paul had as much human power; he had as much authority while persecuting the churches and putting the Christians to death; but did they love him? did he have a great multitude follow him? Why do we consider him one of the greatest men of Bible times or modern? To us Paul is one of the grandest characters the world has ever known, and why? Because he served us. In what way has he served us? we may ask. We answer, in living the life of sacrifice that he lived; in writing the books he wrote, by which we get much of our faith and religious belief that we now have.

Would we be great, then let us serve others. Ask a boy why he loves his mother so, and he will invariably say, "Oh, she was so good to me; she has done so much for me"; and in his great heart of love he crowns her queen and thinks her the greatest and best woman that ever lived. And why? Because she served him; because she spent her life for his happiness.

Would we be called great? Would we have others feel that we are needed—that their lives would not be what they are were it not for us? Then we must minister unto them; we must serve them—be self-sacrificing; work for them.

In our revival work, if a great good has been done in our church by a man of God; if we are greatly benefited by his labor, we praise him and hold him up as a great man, and rightly we should. But is it because he is a great man? Is it that he is far above us? He may be these, and yet is it not rather that he has served us; that he has done us good? It is this that makes him great in our eyes. Have these three or four weeks that the minister has been amongst us been weeks of leisure to him? Has he sought alone his own pleasure and ease? Far from it. To him they have been weeks of hard work. It has been a strain on both mind and body. It has been a wearing away of his whole physical being. He returns to his home and perhaps suffers as many more weeks through illness as a result of his labors among us. But what the result? What the great reward? A harvest of souls; and he has the blessed assurance that he has done the Master's will. We call him great, and why? Because he has served us. And the text might well be applied to him—"And a great multitude followed him," for indeed we did follow him. We followed him with our love and prayers, and with the high tribute of calling him "great." And we think he will have great joy in heaven on account of the souls that have been brought to Christ through his work.

Is this greatness to be desired? Should we wish to be called great? "Let no man despise thee" are Paul's words. It is our duty to live a life of love and sacrifice for others, so that "no man will despise us." We should live so that people will love us; so that they can love us. We sometimes hear it said that we should not have this desire to be great—that it is worldly. But did Christ condemn it? When the mother brought her two boys to the Master, desiring that they might sit one on either side of Him in His kingdom, did He condemn her? Those who heard her did, but did Christ? He did not grant the mother her request, but He gave her and the sons a lesson—a receipt whereby they might become great. It was not in the way the mother had planned, not in the way she had asked. Christ does not always answer our prayer in our way, but He did not condemn the mother. He told how her boys might be great; that "whosoever will be chief or great among you, let him be your servant." Then if Christ does not condemn this desire, why should we? Surely in Christ's way, in the way He has laid down, it is not wrong to wish to be great and good. His way—that of serving others.

The text, "And a great multitude followed Him," is the result of His teaching and of His life. All through His life he carried out His own teaching.

He has set the example of serving others. He has served the people, and behold, "a great multitude followed Him," and they follow Him to-day and call Him "great." He was great; He is great to-day, and it is through His beautiful life of serving others. "Whosoever will be great let him serve." Then it will be as the text says, "A great multitude followed him."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE GRACE OF LIBERALITY.

BY LEWIS E. STOUT.

Perhaps there is no stronger teaching in all Scripture to encourage the grace of liberality than 2 Cor. 8: 7-9: "Therefore, as ye abound in everything, in faith and utterance and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich."

I think it would be well for our church to examine herself closely to see whether she is showing forth this grace in a way that satisfies our Lord. If Jesus were to send the Friends a special message on this subject, would He not say, as He said on another occasion: "These things ought ye to have done and not to leave this other undone"? Do we really act as though we believe that all we have, or hope to have, is God's? But no matter how we act or what we believe, the written Word plainly tells us that we are but stewards. "The earth is the Lord's." "Every beast of the forest is Mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills, saith the Lord."

My soul was deeply stirred recently by listening to an address on education by Bishop Fowler, of the M. E. church. The great financial cry of that church at present is, "A Twentieth Century Fund of Twenty Millions." One branch of the Presbyterians in Canada alone is asking for one million. Why should not Friends have a Twentieth Century Fund? I believe Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings could not inaugurate a greater movement than to raise the cry, "Fifty thousand for Earlham College!" with which to pay off the indebtedness and add a few thousand to the endowment fund. Who will be the herald, Spirit-anointed, to lead in a movement like this?

When I think of the many ministers among Friends who have given not only their time and talent, but all the money they had, in service for Christ and the Church, and when I think that little more than a quarter of a century ago many Friends were conscientiously opposed to foreign missions, on the grounds that supporting a mission enterprise was encouraging a hireling ministry; and when I see the many missionaries we now have in the field, and the many servants whom the Church has found "worthy of their hire," I am made to praise God that we have abounded so much in the grace of liberality. But our abounding is not yet in its fullness. The demand for us to move forward is as imperative as it was a quarter of a century ago.

The membership of a certain church has this harvest garnered in twelve thousands bushels of wheat. This should mean twelve hundred bushels, or about eight hundred dollars, for the Lord's work. This probably represents less than one-half of the annual material increase of this church. I think I am safe in saying the annual givings of this meeting amounts to about five hundred dollars. This leaves eleven hundred dollars withheld from the Lord's treasury. And yet this same church has a yearly meeting reputation for liberality! What, then, must be said of the churches which have abounded less liberally? "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." Perhaps we do not ask largely enough of the Lord. Perhaps we do not preach the grace of liberality with as strong faith as we should. Let us have a Twentieth Century Fund. We have yet sixteen months in which to act.

EXTRACTS FROM DR. WAYLAND HOYT'S TRACT, ENTITLED, "THE PASTOR'S TRACT WORK."

"A sacramental moment came to me the other day, whose strong, sweet shining I cannot cease to thank God for to life's latest day—and yet through a channel, how strangely long and winding, did it come to me! Humanly speaking, it was because in the year 1784 Isaac Milner, a Cambridge Senior Wrangler, and his companion on a journey to the continent declared to William Wilberforce that Doddridge's "Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul" was one of the best books ever written, and saw to it that the book was taken and read together on the journey. The reading of that book changed, under God's hand, the wealthy, witty, worldly William Wilberforce into the Christian and the philanthropist, and it was his son, Canon Wilberforce, who brought me that vision-moment, as I met him in Philadelphia the other day.

"Think a little of what has sprung out of the giving of that book by Isaac Milner more than a hundred years ago—the Christian William Wilberforce, the mighty movement for the freedom of the oppressed of which he was the leader, a line of Christian sons and all their work, all the other outraying influences, and we may trace such results in all directions from books and tracts which have been blessed of God.

"William Wilberforce writes his "Practical Christianity" and that leads Thomas Chalmers into the clear shining—and what has not Thomas Chalmers done?

"Luther's preface to his "Commentary on the Galatians" thrusts a beam into the darkness of John Bunyan, and in the path of that beam Bunyan begins to see the Progress of the Pilgrim.

"Surely the pastor has a duty to do in the direction of tracts. If he can, let a pastor write some. Also, the pastor should see to it that his church is a far larger centre of tract distribution."

Evil always relaxes the fiber of character. It weakens and disintegrates wherever it touches. There is no strength, no manliness in evil, though some foolish novices think so. In the individual, in society, in the nation, wrongdoing is weakness, and righteousness is strength. This is a rule with no exceptions, and with no possible evasion.

The International Lesson.

THIRD QUARTER.

Lesson XIII

Ninth Month 24, 1899

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them.—Psa. 34: 7.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 18.—Gracious invitations. Hos. 14: 1-9.

Third-day, Ninth mo. 19.—Daniel in Babylon. Dan. 1: 8-21.

Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 20.—The handwriting on the wall. Dan. 5: 17-31.

Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 21.—Daniel in the den of lions. Dan. 6: 10-23.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 22.—The new heart. Ezek. 36: 25-36.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 23.—Returning from captivity. Ezra 1: 1-11.

First-day, Ninth mo. 24.—Encouraging the builders. Hag. 2: 1-9.

The lessons of the past quarter have been a practical illustration of the words of the apostle Paul: "Whosoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that through patience and through comfort of the Scriptures we might have hope." (Rom. 15: 4.) And again: "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." (2 Tim. 3: 16, Revised Version.) Under circumstances greatly varying in character—lessons of God's purposes for man; of His support in times of trial; of His faithfulness in performing His promises; of the universality of His invitation—have been presented. Should not all these nerve us to work, encourage us to patience, and inspire us with hope?

If the first lesson, which is an invitation extended to an earlier generation, be omitted, the historical period covered by the lessons of the quarter occupies about ninety years (605-515 B. C.). Judea and Jerusalem came under the control of Nebuchadnezzar about the year 605 B. C. (Jer. 25: 1; 46: 2), and at this time the captivity is generally reckoned to have begun. At this time also it is thought that Daniel and his companions were carried into captivity in Babylon (Dan. 1: 1-4).

The last lesson described the earnest words of Zechariah shortly before the completion of the Temple, declaring that it would be finished. This was accomplished in 516 or 515 B. C.

In the introductory lesson from the prophet Hosea there is the "gracious invitation" given to a rebellious and self-willed people—an invitation rejected, and the rejection followed by a permanent captivity. Israel never came back as a people.

"Daniel in Babylon" purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself, and it is shown that "when God reigns in the heart He will rule the life."

"The Hebrews in the fiery furnace" illustrates the comforting and encouraging truth that "our God whom we serve is able to deliver us,"—deliver in the trial, as well as from the trial.

The fear-inspiring picture of "the handwriting on the wall" teaches that, though men may flatter themselves to the contrary, sin and disobedience inevitably bring about their legitimate results, and that "God is the judge."

"Daniel in the den of lions" illustrates the truth of the words of the Psalmist: "The Lord is thy keeper."

The prophet of the Exile saw the necessity of repentance, and through Him came the promise, "I will put my Spirit within you."

The invitation comes to all—the "River of Salvation" is broad and deep. "Whosoever will let him take the water of life freely."

In the "Returning from Captivity" we see that "God sends deliverance when His people are ready for it: those who accept the invitation can say, The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

In the "Rebuilding the Temple" we are taught, by an object lesson, that the spiritual temple, which each one should build, must be holy. "The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

The prophets "Encouraging the Builders" is intended to cheer all workers for God. God will keep His promises, and though human strength may be small, God's strength is mighty.

"Be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work, for I am with you." "Despise not the day of small things," saith the prophet. God's work is not limited by human limitations. He will give "Power through the Spirit." "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." These words were true in the days of Zechariah; they are true to-day. Is their truth attested by personal experience?

BOOK REVIEW.

"The Praise Hymnary." A collection of Sacred Songs. Compiled and arranged by Thomas J. Morgan, D.D., LL.D., William A. May and Phoebe M. Haynes. Silver, Burdette & Co., New York, Boston and Chicago. A good collection of hymns for use in schools, Sabbath schools, or families. It contains about five hundred selections and a large proportion of these are old and tried hymns, such as have been found to express most perfectly the longings and the adoration of the human soul. There are also many of the newer hymns which seem to have been selected with care. Among numerous patriotic hymns Rudyard Kipling's Recessional is given, set to an air by Sir Arthur S. Sullivan. The music is arranged in a compact form, and the printing, both of the music and the words, is clear and easily read.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

TO A YOUNG FRIEND.

God in His goodness, guard from ill,
Thy waking and Thy resting hours,
Edith, as thou to Him thy will
Dost yield, with all thy nascent powers;
So may He rain celestial showers,
And cause the heavenly dew to dwell
Upon the consecrated flowers
Of thy heart's garden. Fare the well.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR NINTH MONTH TWENTY-FOURTH, 1899.

GIDEON'S BAND.

Judg. 7: 1-23.

Second-day, Ninth mo. 18.—Saul's band. 1 Sam 10: 17-27.

Third-day, Ninth mo. 19.—David's band. 1 Chron. 11: 10-19.

Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 20.—Christ's band. Mark 3: 14-19; John 15: 16.

Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 21.—Working in God's way. Josh 6: 1-20.

Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 22.—Not by might nor power. Zech. 4: 1-10.

Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 23.—Whatsoever he saith, do. John 2: 1-11.

This topic comes up for consideration just at the time when thousands of churches and Endeavor Societies are starting in for the work of another year. Committees are being appointed, workers called together, plans laid, assignments made, and all other arrangements necessary to get the Lord's army on the march. But it will turn out as it always has: that only a few will really press forward and do the work. The fearful and trembling, the ease-loving, will turn back, and the men of Ephraim will come up by and by and quarrel because they were not consulted. Now, Which class are you going to join? is the practical question of this lesson.

The first practical point is that we must learn to depend on God. "The people are too many for me,"—not because He does not have need of a host for His service, but because they had not learned the lesson of absolute dependence on Him. We can do nothing simply because we are the largest Endeavor Society, or have the most brains or social position. We must have God or all is in vain, and what is more He must have us absolutely in His hand, under His control, both for constraint and restraint. Not even the "truth" will save us. We must be true ourselves, which is infinitely more than having the truth. If you are fearful and unbelieving you not only injure yourself, but you hinder the man next to you. It takes his time to wait for you or to get you in line when he ought to be at the front.

The second test at the brook reveals the men who are habitually considerate of their own ease. They sprawled down in a most unsoldierly way for a drink of water, while three hundred men never slackened their march, but caught up the water in their hands as they went.

What little things reveal character! Now, there are many Endeavorers who really mean to do good work the coming year, but they are habitual ease lovers. An interesting book, a rocking chair, a chimney corner, a few choice friends, some special entertainments, a stormy evening, and they go sprawling down as ingloriously as Gideon's men. A few will go on through all difficulties and accomplish some work while such as these "take it easy." O shame and sorrow that the followers of Him whose life was a passion of devotion to the will of His Father have learned to take it easy.

Nobody is of any account for God who is not eager for the fight. Christians who have to be driven or coaxed to their work will never accomplish anything. However, it is true that many of us have engaged in the Master's service with fear and trembling as to our ability to do anything, but with service has come strength and courage and eagerness for further service. It is not to discourage such as these, but if possible to awaken the careless that the strongest words need to be spoken as to the sin of indifference. "Cursed is he that doeth the work of God negligently," is the word of the Lord in Jeremiah. "Cursed be the deceiver that hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a blemished thing." The world gives its best to its pursuits, pleasures and ambitions. The Christianity that does less for its Lord can never conquer the world. Only a more absorbing passion can move it.

These men of Gideon went into the fray with a shout, and with shining lights. They broke their pitchers that the lights might shine. It is with a possible reference to this that Paul says: "We have this treasure in earthen vessels," and it is only in the continual sacrifice of the ease and comfort of life that the light is made to shine forth. Let us go to our work with the shout of triumph. No battle was ever won by the wailings of the discouraged or the murmurs of the discontented.

Who will join in the vow unto the Lord that I will give myself unreservedly unto Him for His service; that I will relinquish my own love of ease and find my delights in his service and fellowship; that I will be among the number, whether few or many, that can be depended upon; that I will bear with the failures or shortcomings of others in a Christlike spirit; that I will seek to help them—not so much by reproof as by heartily serving the Lord myself; that if possible I will be in that inner circle that the Lord can depend upon; that I will not murmur under reproof or misunderstanding.

THE SCULPTOR.

Thought is a sculptor. Lo! his hand
Graves lasting grooves on round, soft face,
With lines of cunning and command,
Of lust, of laughter, grief or grace.

He from the marble of the flesh
Evokes the angel of the Man;
"Canst make this foul block fair and fresh?"
We plead; he promptly cries, "I can."

Yet of that waiting marble know,
Oh, soul, 'the sculptor, bidden by thee,
Can shape a thing of shame and woe
Whereat hell laughs, "'Twas carved for me."

It is the chisel of thy will Wherewith his fadeless art is wrought.
Consummate, deathless is his skill;
Oh, soul, beware the sculptor, Thought.

—"Christian Endeavor World."

Joy is a Christian requirement. Christ has given us His joy, and we are expected to dwell in its atmosphere. A melancholy disciple is always one who has strayed, somehow, from the joy of his Lord.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

In Mt. Pleasant and in the old yearly meeting house, places hallowed by the marked and oft-repeated manifestations of the Divine presence, the yearly meeting convened on the 24th of Eighth month.

The business meeting at 10.30, which had been preceded by an informal prayer meeting to invoke the Divine blessing on the services this year, began with thanksgiving and testimony. Rejoicing in the Lord, abiding in Him, walking in His will, daring to obey regardless of circumstances, expecting the supply of all our needs if faithful, yielding at once to Him, and entertaining no doubts, were the subjects of brief, impressive exhortations. Among those engaged in vocal services were J. Pennington, J. S. Kimber, Ezra G. Pearson, Emma Coffin, Isaac L. Kinsey and J. Walter Malone. It was a time of heartfelt worship, in which Jesus was exalted.

Business was taken up at 11.20. Delegates were present from each quarterly meeting, though many of those appointed were absent.

The visiting ministers this year are Joseph Stanley and Charles D. W. Hiatt from Indiana Yearly Meeting; William P. Pinkham and J. S. Kimber from New England; Ezra G. Pearson and Emma Coffin from Iowa; Flora Holiday from Western; Maud Milner (Christian Worker) from Wilmington Yearly Meeting, all of whom were cordially welcomed. The reading of the epistles from London Yearly Meeting, and a small amount of routine business, completed the work of this session.

At 3.30 the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight opened with a precious season of prayer, the entire meeting uniting in this service upon their knees. J. S. Kimber spoke instructively from Hosea 14: 5-8, emphasizing the quiet waiting upon the Lord. The visible part of our life may be small, like the lily; the hidden part—the quiet communion—should be a root like Lebanon. By this genuine, even, triumphant, godly life, the children will be attracted and will return; the sinner will be led to cry out, "What have I to do any more with idols?" Saved from idols and "seeing Him" and "observing Him," they will bring forth fruit, "finding their fruit in Him."

Reports were received from the quarterly meetings. These were followed by earnest exhortations to abstain from unfavorable criticisms of one another, or of the exercise of a meeting.

8 p.m. Devotional meeting. Byron Rees preached an earnest and pointed sermon from Luke 3: 16, showing that the baptism with the Holy Ghost is an experience subsequent to conversion, and the work which it is designed to accomplish. This service was used by the Spirit in bringing several to seek the baptism thus clearly proclaimed.

Sixth-day morning, 8.30. A quiet season of prayer, in which the Holy Spirit's presence was distinctly manifest, was followed by an impressive and searching sermon from J. Pennington, based on the text, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Progress, guidance, faith, peace, holiness, abiding and fruitfulness are all conditioned on prompt, faithful, habitual obedience. Many claiming sanctification are not living in perfect obedience, and are therefore not justified. Questions which they desire God's children to settle, God himself would settle if they were but obedient.

The season of consecration and prayer which followed was definitely blessed to many souls.

10.30. A short time of prayer, testimony and exhortation seemed a sweet preparation for the business. The delegates reported in favor of W. M. Perry for presiding clerk of the yearly meeting, Asa Pim for recording clerk, Emma B. Malone for reading clerk, and Charles H. Hall for announcing clerk. William J. Harrison had acted as clerk for some twenty years, but had requested to be released from further service in that position. The clerks were instructed to prepare a minute expressing the meeting's high appreciation of his faithful and devoted service.

Epistles from Ireland, New England, New York, Baltimore and North Carolina were read, and elicited an interesting discussion, especially on the freedom of ministry among the members. The statistical report showed the number of meetings, 45; male members, 2,357; female, 2,841; total membership, 5,198; ministers, 105; elders, 188; meetings without ministers, none.

The state of society, as shown by the summary answers, was freely considered. Integrity in conversation and in business was strongly urged, and faithfulness in laboring with, and, if need be, in testifying against those who walk contrary to the plain teachings of the moral law.

8 p.m. The devotional meeting, as usual, opened with song. Lena Stanley, who expected to start on the morrow for China, spoke a few parting words. "In view of going there is no sorrow, and I do not wish for pity; all is glory." She wished all to remember the words of Jesus, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and earnestly exhorted all to a clean, holy life. Four young men feelingly sang the hymn, "There is Honey in the Rock." Vocal prayer followed. Emma Coffin preached earnestly and plainly from the text, "Your Iniquities have Separated Between You and Your God." An altar service followed, and a brief time was spent in testimony, many participating.

Seventh-day, 8.30. In the meeting on Ministry and Oversight Emma B. Malone was engaged in earnest exhortation to faithfulness. Much of the criticism of the ministry is sadly true. Watchfulness, self-denial and self-sacrifice become us. We need to be so conformed to the image of Christ as to have the same sympathy, tenderness and charity. We must also be willing to suffer, that we may reign with Him.

Joseph Stanley spoke on "Not Handling the Word of God Deceitfully." There must be such cleanness of heart as to make deceitfulness impossible. Let us undergo the examination. Believe. Do not modify God's word nor ask Him to modify it. A blind man may say, "I see nothing in my way," but how much better to be able to say, "I see my way clearly."

Frederick Ryan asked a question respecting certain mistaken teachings on Sonship. An interesting discussion followed, which was continued on Third-day morning following, in a way to be very helpful to all present.

The devotional meeting at 8.30 was again led by J. Pennington, and was greatly blessed to many.

10.30. A song by R. E. Hudson vividly presented Jesus as our sin-bearer. Vocal prayer was followed by words of assurance from Ezra G. Pearson. "We can, as individual Christians, live the Christianity which God demands of us. All you have to do is to do now what God demands now."

Epistles were read from Indiana, Western, Iowa, Canada, Kansas and California.

An interesting and highly satisfactory report of the evangelistic work was read by the superintendent, J. W. Malone. The summary showed: Series of meetings held, 65; meetings in these series, 1,199; professed conversions in these meetings, 610; in missions, 150; professing to be reclaimed, 280; to be wholly sanctified, 201; applying for membership, 275. The treasurer's report showed $875 expended in this work by the committee.

Belle Gates gave an interesting account of her call and effort to establish a home for aged and disabled workers. The report of the committee was heartily approved, and a liberal subscription taken for the work the coming year.

The report of the Yearly Meeting's Committee on Indian Affairs, and that of the Associated Executive Committee, were deeply interesting. Frederick Ryan gave an encouraging report of the work of himself and wife as evangelists among the Indians.

8 p.m. The meeting was in the interest of the Christian Endeavor Societies. The time was occupied chiefly by Alfred T. Ware, of Mt. Pleasant, in an earnest plea for thorough education.

First-day. The four successive meetings for worship were large and the Gospel was preached with clearness and power, many souls finding rest in Christ.

Second-day, 8.30. The devotional meeting was addressed by J. W. Webb, of Portsmouth, Va., formerly a Methodist minister, but now a Friend. His clear, strong ministry on the general apostasy, the coming of the Lord, the preparation of the bride, the obligation to preach the gospel to every creature, met a warm response, many seeing and feeling their obligations as never before. There was a general prostration before the Lord, and many renewed their covenant of consecration, or accepted its wider obligations as now revealed.

A voluntary offering of $67 was made for the work of evangelization in Southeastern Virginia.

10.30. A period of fervent devotion was followed by the reading of a letter of loving greeting from John Henry Douglas, and this by the reading, at his request, of 1 Cor. 13. The loving message awakened many precious memories of this dear servant of the Lord, and of the grace which has made him such.

A communication respecting the Ecumenical Council of Missionary Boards was referred to the Missionary Board. Frederick Ryan continued his account of mission work in the Indian Territory, and a collection of $33 was taken for that work.

The Committee on Education and Bible Schools made an interesting report. Addresses were made by William P. Pinkham, Byron Rees and William G. Hubbard. Confidence was expressed that the academies of Friends in Ohio Yearly Meeting are free from the misleading doctrinal influences found in so many institutions. Emma B. Malone proposed that the work of Education and that of Bible Schools be placed under the care of separate committees and superintendents. The suggestion led to recommendations intended to give to each subject the separate consideration by the yearly meeting which its importance demands.

A communication from Cleveland Monthly Meeting, containing a report of the work of the Bible Training School for the past two years, and requesting the yearly meeting to authorize the transfer of the property occupied by the school to a Board of Trustees, who shall have the management of the institution, was read, and the transfer approved.

8 p.m. An interesting temperance meeting, opened with Bible reading, prayer and song, was addressed by Dr. J. C. Jackson, State Chairman of the Anti-Saloon League, who presented forcibly the objects, work and claims of that organization as an instrument for the suppression of the liquor traffic.

Third-day, 8.30. The devotional meeting was conducted chiefly by J. Pennington, and was a time of blessing to many.

10.30. The minutes of the Representative Meeting, and reports of the Committees on the Mosher Fund, and on books and tracts, were read and approved. A short time was given to a loving memorial service respecting David J. Lewis, whose beautiful, saintly life, whose passion for souls, and whose faithful service of Christ leave such a blessed memory with his friends and acquaintances. The remainder of the session was given to missions, and the deep Christian fervor which had characterized the yearly meeting from its opening seemed to culminate at this time. Reports of the various forms of work under the care of the Board, and of the yearly meeting's missions at Nanking, China, and Nowgong, India, were heard with marked attention. The work of the Board had evidently been owned and blessed by the Head of the Church, and had been thorough, painstaking, intensely earnest and eminently prudent.

Very short, touching appeals were made by Willis Hotchkiss, just returned from his work in Africa, and by Esther Baird and Martha Barber, formerly connected with the work in India. The committee stated that, in addition to the $1,200 pledged by the Endeavor Society, $2,200 should be raised at this time. Cards were distributed, and in a most quiet and orderly manner a subscription was taken amounting to about $2,342.

8 p.m. This was a meeting on missions, and was addressed in a most clear and impressive manner by Willis Hotchkiss, who based his appeal on 1 John 5: 19, 20: "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding."

Wilbur A. and Julia B. Estes were introduced by J. S. Kimber, who spoke of their excellent religious influence in Oak Grove Seminary, their call to the work in China, and of this call as a marked answer to the prayers of the Ohio Board. Each of these dear friends and Dr. De Vol, of Glens Falls, N. Y., briefly addressed the meeting. These three are expecting to start soon for China.

J. Pennington, on behalf of the meeting, gave them a solemn charge; Emma Coffin addressed the meeting on its obligations to them, and E. B. Malone offered prayer in their behalf.

A call was extended to those wishing now to set themselves apart for any work to which the Lord was clearly calling them, and to those who would now consecrate themselves wholly to the Lord. Slowly, thoughtfully, and apparently without excitement, some twenty-five came forward, at least four of these thus publicly dedicating themselves to the work in Africa. This meeting will long be remembered by many.

Fourth-day, 8 a.m. The devotional meeting was largely given to testimony. The latter part was occupied by W. P. Pinkham in practical teaching on the abiding life.

9.30. This session was occupied chiefly in the usual routine business. The interest of the Endeavor Societies was shown in their having raised $1,200 for missions the past year, and pledging to do the same the coming year, and all this without resort to any questionable methods for raising the money.

Pertinent words of counsel, exhortation and thanksgiving were spoken by many, and under a deep sense of gratitude and joy and hope in the Lord the meeting concluded.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The Greek Patriarch of Alexandria is dead at the age of 103.

It is stated that the temples of India are to be lighted by electricity, the example having been set by the great shrine of Siva, at Kochicaddie, near Mutwal, in Ceylon.

With its proposed Twentieth Century Fund of $1,000,000, the Methodist Church is planning to build in the next three years 2,000 churches—i.e., one for each year of the era.

Dwight L. Moody's School for Boys, at Mt. Hermon, which opened recently, has an enrollment of nearly five hundred students. Hereafter the school will be in session practically the entire year, the total vacation period being only one month.

The proposed installation of electric lights at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, the expense of which an American volunteered to bear, has been abandoned on the plea that this kind of illumination would not harmonize with the new decorations.

The Convocation of the Church of England has carried a resolution to the House of Bishops asking that a revised burial service, or a new form, be provided for cremations. There has been a rapid growth of public opinion in England in favor of cremation as against burial, particularly among people whose opinion has especial weight in the church.

Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, who has just returned from an extended trip abroad, says in regard to Leo XIII: "His mind is as vigorous as ever, and altogether he is a wonderful old man, who will probably live in the full possession of his faculties for years to come. He is still much interested in public affairs, and has a high regard for the United States."

The commonly accepted belief in Jewish circles that no Israelite becomes a Christian, except for sordid reasons, appears to be refuted completely by statistics. The summary of the accessions made to the Christian Church from Jews since the beginning of the present century shows a total of 204,540, while the present average additions per year are 5,250. The average, furthermore, is increasing each year.

The election of Professor Hadley to the Presidency of Yale marks a departure in the management of that institution. Hitherto every Yale president has been a Congregationalist minister, who accordingly had charge of the religious exercises of the students. The new president is a "layman," and hence has delegated the duty of preaching and conducting the devotional exercises to certain members of the faculty.

According to statistics given in the Jewish Year Book, compiled by Prof. Cyrus Adler, there are in the world to-day 10,728,491 Jews, distributed as follows: Russia, 5,700,000; Austria Hungary, 1,860,106; United States, 1,043,800; Germany, 567,884; Turkey, 350,000; Roumania, 300,000; Morocco, 150,000; British Empire, 148,130; Abyssinia, 120,000; Netherlands, 97,324; France, 72,000; Tripoli, 60,000; Tunis, 45,000; Algiers, 43,500; Italy, 38,000; Egypt, 25,200; Persia, 25,000, etc.

What is said to be the "only Christian daily newspaper in the world" is to be found in Montreal, where it was established over half a century before the author of "In His Steps" painted the imaginary difficulties of such a journal. The paper, the "Montreal Witness," has been in existence fifty-four years, and has a constituency of 200,000 readers. It has from the first refused advertisements of strong drink, tobacco, theatres, and quack medicines, and thus sacrifices at least $50,000 a year. And yet it is a splendid success.

There will be no Parliament of Religions at the Paris Exposition, but instead a Congress for the scientific study of religion. It is said that the Congress will treat religion purely from a social and historic point of view. The program has been outlined as follows: (1) Religions of the uncivilized races of America before Columbus; (2) Religions of the extreme Orient; (3) Religions of India, and (4) of Persia; (5) Semitic religions, including Egypt; (6) Religions of Greece and Rome; (7) Germanic, Scandinavian and Slavic religions; (8) Christian religions. The Congress will meet the first week of September, 1900. The opening and closing sessions will be in the Exposition Building; the rest in the Sorbonne.

Much depends upon the personal bearing of the believer. It is an argument to look upon some faces. Doubt is unrest; faith is repose. Doubt is trouble; faith is peace. All natures in real repose are restful, so Christ said to men, with an infinite meaning, "Come unto me." It was enough to touch His life, for He lived among the eternal realities. He thought in one world and spoke in another. He made men feel the presence of the things of which He testified.—William J. Tucker.

News from the Field.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

CORRECTION.—In THE AMERICAN FRIEND of Eighth month 31st, the report from Motor should have been twenty souls were blessed and helped of the Lord, instead of thirty; also, that three united with the Friends there. EDWIN LOFT.

The ten days' Tabernacle Meeting, held at Milo, Iowa, by Edwin Loft and wife, closed Eighth month 27th. Eighteen souls were saved, renewed and sanctified, and some came forward in the last meeting and promised to live Christian lives. Although the work was strongly opposed by the churches there, yet a good work was done, and we hope some day the few Friends that live at Milo will have a meeting of their own.

EDWIN LOFT.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Emeline H. Tuttle, of Dover, N. H., has removed to Woonsocket, R. I., and was present at Smithfield Monthly Meeting, held in that city, Eighth month 31st. She will attend Woonsocket Meeting in the future when not engaged in Gospel work elsewhere.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Salem Quarterly Meeting was held at Scott's Mills, Eighth month 18th, 19th and 20th. There was a large attendance from all the monthly meetings. President Newlin, Herbert and Sadie Cash, Evangeline Martin and Amanda Woodward, from Newberg, were in attendance. It was a time of great spiritual uplift. Thomas Newlin and Herbert Cash were very much favored in preaching the Gospel. I am glad to be able to say that Salem Quarterly Meeting has a growing experience. Sadie Cash, our Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Christian Endeavor, was at Rosedale on Sabbath, Eighth month 27th, in the morning. She preached from the text, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," and in the evening she gave a very inspiring talk to a large company.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

The sessions of Kansas Yearly Meeting for 1899 will be held at the Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas, beginning Fifth-day, Tenth month 5th, and continuing until Tenth month 12th. Members of the Reception Committee will meet passenger trains and direct Friends to the University, where boarding places will be assigned. Direct street car connections to Friends' University Place. Excellent boarding and lodging, very reasonable, at places convenient to the University. Those desiring to attend and wishing to secure entertainment, please write at once to Mattie E. Stanley, Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Indianapolis, Ind.—At the coming session of Western Yearly Meeting it has been decided to set apart considerable time for the consideration of the work of the Home Mission and Temperance Committee. The temperance phase of the work will be taken up at the meeting on Second-day night, 18th inst., when an address will be delivered by a worker in the temperance cause of National fame, at which time also a report of the work during the past year will be submitted by the yearly meeting's superintendent, Frank H. King.

The Home Mission phase of the work will be considered at the session of Third-day morning, 19th inst., when the yearly meeting's superintendent, Frank H. King, will preside, and the following topics will be discussed by workers selected from different portions of the yearly meeting:

- First. "Home Mission Work; What it Is; its Scope and its Relation to the Church."
- Second. "The Proper Organization of Home Mission Boards."
- Third. "Home Mission Work in Cities."
- Fourth. "Home Mission Work in Rural Districts."
- Fifth. "Home Mission Work in its Relation to Temperance."

Sixth. "What we have Done and what we have Failed to do."

Seventh. Open discussion on the quarterly meeting reports.

It is earnestly hoped that there will be a large gathering at the two sessions named above of those who are interested in the work of Home Missions and Temperance, both from Western as well as from other yearly meetings.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Glens Falls Quarterly Meeting was held at Glens Falls, Eighth month 26th and 27th, and proved a season of refreshing to those privileged to attend. M. M. Binford, of Brooklyn, spoke at the meeting held on Seventh-day from 1 Corinthians 15: 58. His message was one of encouragement to the church, with admonitions to stability and fidelity in the work of the Lord, with the assurance that such service would be owned and blessed of God.

Elmer D. Gildersleeve, of Poughkeepsie, emphasized the various points brought out in Micajah M. Binford's address, and assured us that God is faithful to His promise, and if we labored in His cause it would not be in vain, but it must be "in the Lord."

Our pastor, H. R. Keates, who had been away for a short rest, returned in time to take part in the service, and his words were cheering to all our hearts.

On Sabbath there was a full attendance at morning meeting. Elmer D. Gildersleeve spoke on the "Love of God," prefacing his remarks by singing as a solo, "Jesus Loves Me." He was followed by Joseph G. Alexander, of London Yearly Meeting, who took up the same theme. Both spoke in a very tender spirit, and the presence of the Lord was graciously realized.

At the close of the meeting there was a public reception of members. Our pastor briefly referred to the distinguishing views of our Society, urging fidelity to the doctrines which bind us together as a people. After prayer all came forward to welcome into our fellowship those just received into membership.

In the evening a Young People's Meeting was held, many taking part, amongst them our friend, Joseph G. Alexander, who was on his way to Buffalo to attend a Conference on Arbitration. We were glad to greet him in the love of Christ and wish him God speed.

On Fourth-day, 30th ult., Glens Falls Monthly Meeting was held at Hudson Hill. There was a good attendance, and the spirit of the Lord rested upon us richly. H. R. Keates spoke in the morning meeting from 1 Corinthians 5: 21, showing that the scheme of man's redemption by vicarious atonement was to the end that we might be delivered from sin and made holy. That this was not a matter of personal choice, but without exception every believer must submit himself to God for the infilling and abiding of the Holy Spirit, without which there can be no maintenance of the true Christian life.

At the afternoon session nearly all present bore testimony to the saving power of Christ, some whose voices have been long time silent in meeting coming out into the liberty of joy and thanksgiving. To God be all the glory. J. L. H.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Elwood Scott has been taking baths at the Spiceland Sanitarium for several weeks, and his health has been steadily improving from the first and now seems almost as well as before his serious illness nearly three years ago. His many friends will be glad to know of his improved condition, and that he is able to enter the open door for Gospel service again.

Ella J. Davis visited Long Lake Quarter in the interest of Bible School work in Seventh month. Very helpful institutes were held, which were gladly attended by many besides Friends.

Phariba Stevens, of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, and Fannie Elliott, of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, are now making a tour through the yearly meeting, holding conferences with workers, strengthening weak and organizing new societies. This plan is proving a good one.

Lewisville Meeting, of Dublin Quarter, has been specially favored during the past year. A series of meetings held in Fourth month by Daisy Barr was one which many will long remember—an occasion for the mighty shout of victory and wonderful rejoicings among the faithful. The interest has been steadily maintained up to the present time. The way opened to secure our dear young friend named above to come among us as our pastor, and our work is moving grandly. The women Friends met at the parsonage Ninth month 2d, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the minister's birth, and enjoyed a pleasant time of Christian sociability. Substantial tokens of good will were left behind them. The Lord opened the heart of a Friend to donate an elegant set of pulpit chairs recently, and a large sum has been subscribed and paid to repair the church. We have a flourishing Christian Endeavor and Bible School, and—not the least thing—THE AMERICAN FRIEND is read and loved by our membership, for all of which we return thanks to the Giver of all good. Friends with a message for us are always welcome.

Dublin Quarterly Meeting was held at Rich Square the 26th and 27th of Eighth month. Several ministers were present. Those chiefly engaged in the ministry at the quarterly meeting were Elwood Scott and Amos Kenworthy. The Gospel was faithfully preached by these servants of the Lord to the edification of the large gathering of Friends who met from all the meetings of the quarter. Many faithful testimonies were borne to Christ's power to save.

During the business part of the meeting reports upon the yearly meeting debt were read, which showed some $300 yet behind, only $400 having been raised. Many thought they could do no more. Elwood Scott volunteered his services to assist in a new subscription. The Lord blessed the effort and the people had a mind to give. In a few minutes the entire sum was raised and quite a little amount besides their portion to assist in liquidating the yearly meeting debt. Then the whole church sung the doxology and praised God from full hearts.

On Sabbath morning Brother Elwood Scott, who remained with us, preached the word of life with great power again, the text being, "What are these which are arrayed in white robes and whence came they?" (Rev. 7: 13.) Many witnesses for Christ told of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

In the evening Brother Elwood Scott went to Darieth and gave a temperance address at the monthly union services of the temperance organization at that place. E.

Gurney and Elizabeth Schneider Binford started on their trip to Japan on the 30th ult., expecting to visit three weeks at Haviland, Kansas, where Gurney Binford's parents reside. They will then proceed to San Francisco and sail for Tokio, where they expect to remain five years as missionaries, their immediate field of service being some distance from that city.

Verling W. Helm, whose maternal ancestry is sturdy Quaker blood, his grandfather, Nathan Coggeshall, living at Marion, Ind., has recently married, and, with his wife, will go at once to Tokio, Japan, to remain for a period of seven years as Y. M. C. A. secretary for that field. Both he and his wife have prepared themselves for foreign missionary service, and are both graduates of De Pauw University.

Earle J. Harold, graduate of Earlham in 1899, has gone to Haviland, Kansas, to assume principalship of Haviland Academy.

Lucy Francisco, an alumnus of Earlham, has gone to Wichita, Kansas, to serve as instructor in music in Friends' University, her sister Edith accompanying her to attend school.

Lulu Moorman has gone to West Branch, Iowa, for the purpose of teaching the coming year.

Mabel, daughter of Samuel A. and Lydia Ann Stubbs, the former deceased, has been united in marriage with Clarence R. Weinland, and will live at West Elkton, Ohio, where the latter serves as principal of the public school.

Anna, wife of Constantine L. Shugart, he being a minister of Marion Quarterly Meeting, has been laid away to rest, after a lingering and painful affliction. Her sweet spirit had made friends of all who knew her, and her testimony of salvation through the blood of Christ has the universal confidence of her friends. She was in the forty-eighth year of her age.

President J. J. Mills has returned home, accompanied by his family, after an absence of about four months. He is much improved in health, and is starting into his college duties with his usual vigor.

Ella Winslow, who has spent nearly six months among the mission fields of Mexico, has returned to her home at Fairmount, Ind.

As yearly meeting approaches increasing interest attaches to the question of wholly discharging the yearly meeting debt. The reports continue encouraging, and confidence increases in the belief that this burden of long-continued standing will be removed.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A CAMDEN QUAKER MEETING.

There were only two or three of us
Who came to that place of prayer—
Came in a driving snow-storm,
But for that we did not care,
Since in that silence our hearts had risen,
And prayers for His Spirit said,
The Master himself was present there
And gave the "living bread."

We knew his promise to meet "the few";
The thought made us glad and free,
We felt His touch when our heads we bowed;
We heard His "Wait on me."
Nobody saw Him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But peace was His token to every heart,
And why need we ask for more?

And yet to the open-hearted
He gives food to be handed on,
And there came to our midst ere we parted
A stranger to the house of prayer;
And softly the Spirit whispered,
Into the ears of the three,
A message for the wayward brother,
'Twas the Master's "Come to me."

Oh, how warmed were our hearts that morning,
In that quiet house of prayer,
Outside were cold and sin and mourning,
But the Lord himself was there;
He came to redeem the pledge He gave,
Wherever His loved ones be,
To stand Himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but two or three.

HACKNEY.—At her home, near Amboy, Jasper County, Iowa, Eighth month 5th, 1899, of consumption, Ruth Elmira, youngest daughter of Aaron and Jane Hinshaw Hackney (the latter deceased), aged 25 years, 2 months and 21 days. She was a member of Center Monthly and Lynnville Quarterly Meetings, Iowa.

News and Events.

The whole world, outside of France, sympathizes with Captain Alfred Dreyfus in the sentence which has been imposed upon him by the court-martial at Rennes. On the 9th instant the judges of the accused brought in a verdict of guilty, condemning him to ten years' imprisonment. The vote stood five to two. Had it been unanimous he would have been sentenced to twenty years. Application has already been made for a revision of the trial, and an opportunity still exists for President Loubet to pardon the condemned man. Then, too, it is thought by some, among them being Dreyfus himself, that his term of five years on Devil's Island will count for the ten imposed by the present court-martial. In any event, however, there will remain the unsupported stigma which has been inflicted upon the innocent. The iniquity of it all is well expressed by one of the leading American dailies: "After days and weeks of trial, after the exposures and cynical confession of forgeries, perjuries and all manner of wickedness on the part of the prosecution, after the wretched fiasco of the creatures Mercier and Csernuzky, after the straightforward and convincing testimony of Colonel Picquart, Captain Freystaetter, M. Trarieux and others, after the repeated personal assurance of the German Emperor that not one of his agents had ever any dealings with the accused officer, after the unblushing partiality of the judges for the prosecution and their refusal to admit testimony of the highest importance in behalf of the accused; after the resourceful strategy of M. Labori and the impressive eloquence of M. Demange, after a thousand incidents and circumstances indicating the innocence of Captain Dreyfus and the malignant falsity of the charges against him—after all these, the court, by the narrow margin of a single vote, has found a verdict of guilty, with some "extenuating circumstances" of wondrous incomprehensibility, and has condemned the accused to a renewal of his former sentence for at least five years. It is condemnation, but it is not conviction."

The Peary-Harmsworth steamer, Windward, arrived at Brigus, Newfoundland, on the 10th, from her cruise in Arctic waters, reporting all well on board. She will be followed soon by the Peary Arctic Club's steamer Diana. The Windward was ice-bound in Allman Bay, on the west side of Kane basin, about fifty miles north of Cape Sabine, from Eighth month 18th, 1898, to Eighth month 2d, 1899, being in a sort of eddy, undisturbed by wind or current. The season was one of continuous calm, with very little snow, the minimum temperature at the ship being 70 degrees below zero. Lieutenant Peary and the sledges were in the field almost continuously from Tenth month, 1898, to Eighth month of this year, accomplishing much good work in the way of exploration, and gaining important information which will be of value to him for the future of his own expedition. Among other places reached was Fort Couger, the headquarters of the Greely expedition. Here he found the table standing from the last meal and all the other appointments which had remained undisturbed for sixteen years. The buildings were in fair condition, though some of them would not be serviceable much longer. He took possession of all the property, real and personal, in the name of the United States Government, and posted notices to that effect.

The plague continues to increase in Portugal at Oporto, Lisbon, and some smaller places, but not to any such degree as implies as yet a serious epidemic. Strict quarantine and sanitary regulations are being enforced. It is now admitted that genuine cases of the bubonic plague have occurred in Astrakhan, Russia, and the Roumanian Government has in consequence put a quarantine guard on its Russian frontier. In China, also, the plague has some foothold, seventy-three deaths in four days being reported from Newchwang from the disease. Nowhere has the plague been so fatal as at Bombay and Mauritius, where the proportion of deaths to cases has been five out of six, while the epidemic continues this year to ravage whole streets in the lower quarters.

Notes.—The North Atlantic Squadron visited Philadelphia last week in honor of the Grand Army Encampment. Between thirty and forty thousand veterans were in the city to be present at the exercises.—John Y. McKane, the notorious political boss, died last week. He recently served a sentence in Sing Sing prison.—A temporary cession is to be made to Canada by the United States of a part of the Lynn Canal in Alaska.—An apparently credible report has been given out that the employment of women in our government service is to cease.—The Olympia, with Admiral Dewey, sailed from Gibraltar for New York on the 10th.—Yellow fever, which broke out recently in New Orleans, does not threaten to become general in that city. One case has appeared in Jackson, Mississippi.

THE STATION-MASTER'S TROUBLES.

The local agents of railroads complain that the questions asked them every day are of such a nature that they cannot keep their patience on all occasions; and any one who has remained long in the neighborhood of a ticket window may find it easy to believe it.

An exchange describes a portly lady with a great many bundles, who looked as if she had been buying out the stores, in front of the window at a station.

"Has the train for Jungleville gone yet?" she asked.

"No, ma'am," responded the ticket-seller.

"How far is it there?"

"About seventy miles, ma'am."

"What's the price of a ticket?"

"One ninety-eight."

"One ninety-eight!" she repeated. "How does it happen to be that?"

"I don't know, ma'am," answered the ticket-seller, referentially, and with a glance at the bundles, "unless it's marked down from two dollars!"

A TRUE BRAIN

Can be Built by the Right Materials.

The statement is made and is susceptible of proof that brains are built somewhat as a wall or house is built—of certain defined and well understood things.

Wood may be the principal and largest article in a house, but it cannot be formed into a house without the nails, bolts or screws to hold it in shape.

We know that albumen is the bulkiest thing used by Nature in building a human brain; but albumen alone does not make a brain. It requires the small particles of phosphate of potash (like the nails in the house) to form the albumen into what is known as gray matter in brain and nerve tissue.

The albumen exists in large quantities in a variety of food.

The phosphate of potash is found in its truest form in certain parts of field grains. When a man shows brain fag, or a woman shows nervous symptoms, it is prima facie evidence that the phosphate of potash is used up faster than the food supplies it. Therefore either quit the worrying work or get food strong in the natural phosphate of potash, to more quickly and surely replace the daily loss.

That is the especial errand of the famous food, Grape-Nuts.

Good sturdy nerves and a healthy active tireless brain will make a man rich where he is sure to fail when the brain is unable to carry out the behests of the mind.

Remember that Phosphate of Potash as a drug will not do, for Nature takes kindly only to such body builders when presented in food as prepared in Dame Nature's own laboratory.

Grape-Nuts are to be found in all first-class groceries, and once tried the delicious flavor will never be forgotten, while the feeling of increased strength and vigor of brain and nerves will tell its own tale.

SHELTERED.

One bitter cold, stormy day a kind-hearted New York woman who was hurrying home noticed two girls cowering in a doorway. She stopped and spoke to them.

"We are sisters," they said. "Our people are poor, and we came here from Connecticut to get work. We can't find any, and we are homeless and starving."

The woman, we are told by "Leslie's Weekly," took the two girls home, and kept them till she found employment for them. That was more than twenty years ago. From this chance meeting has grown the Night Refuge for Friendless Women, the aims and spirit of which are stated by a placard which hangs on the wall of every police station in New York City:

"Open all night for the reception of those who need succor. No questions asked, no cards or letters necessary to secure shelter and food."

"Sometimes on a bitter winter night more than a dozen women come here for shelter," said a sergeant of one of the police stations recently. "We just point to that placard. They read it and go out, and we know they'll find a bed."

"There was one woman came here during a bitter storm last winter—no coat, nothing but a thin cotton dress and a battered old hat, face all fallen in, looked as if she hadn't eaten anything for days.

"She was going to ask me something, when she caught sight of that pasteboard. She clutched hold of the rail, brushed the hair out of her eyes, and began to read, with her hand at her forehead, stupid-like. Then she turned to me and said:

"Say, is there such places as that?"

"Yes," said I.

"Where they give food and a bed just because yer need it?"

"Yes," I said again.

"And don't ask yer no questions?"

"No."

"Don't want a certificate of character or references from yer last place? Don't want ter know who yer are or what yer've been, so long as yer hungry and poor?"

"I told her that was about the size of it. Then she turned and said, 'I'm glad I saw that sign. I aint got any hope, but I'll try it. I've been turned down everywhere I went, and I was just going to see if the North River was any kinder.'

"She went out," the sergeant added, "and I saw no more of her. But I heard afterward that they took her in, and found work for her somewhere."

The same woman who found the two girls cowering in the doorway, and who established the Refuge, still presides over it.

"It's all as simple as the alphabet," she modestly says of her noble work. "We keep the latch-string always out. We never ask the poor creature who needs help what her errors and blindnesses may have been. The fact that she is out in the snow, knocking at the door, shows that she has paid for her folly. To us she is just a sister-woman in need of a woman's sympathy and help and love."

Yes, it is simple—another form of expression of the love described with such marvellous power by the great Apostle and philosopher—the love that "vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, . . . seeketh not her own, . . . thinketh no evil, . . . never faileth."—"Youth's Companion."

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

Co-operates with the CIVIL AUTHORITIES in enforcing the laws, and with the evangelists' CHURCHES in extending the influences of the GOSPEL.

The Chinese Mission at No. 929 Race Street, near a heathen temple, is under the auspices of The Christian League, and seeks to promote the social, moral and spiritual welfare of these strangers in our midst, and invites the co-operation of Christian men and women in this hitherto neglected work.

The Christian League is greatly in need of financial aid, and contributions sent to the Treasurer, Mr. JOHN H. CONVERSE, 500 N. BROAD STREET (Baldwin Locomotive Works), will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXCELLENT SERVICE TO POINTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY, the chief as well as the popular artery of travel between Philadelphia and Washington, and all points South and Southwest, maintains a superb service of magnificently equipped trains, which leave Philadelphia daily at 7.20 a.m., 5.34 p.m., and 6.55 p.m., reaching, without change, all the chief Southern cities.

The Washington and Southwestern Vestibule Limited, which has long been famous as one of the handsomest trains in America, now has an added feature of attraction in the form of a beautiful Library and Observation car. This will be very much appreciated by the travelling public, as it affords an opportunity of viewing, under the most favorable circumstances, the charming sub-scenery of the historic Piedmont region, as well as the uplands of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The car is for the use of all passengers holding Pullman tickets on the train, and is handsomely furnished with easy, richly-upholstered, movable chairs. It also has a wide, fully-covered extension platform at the rear, capable of accommodating quite a large number of people, who may prefer to travel in the open air and enjoy the unobstructed view of the whirling panorama.

The Washington and Southwestern Limited leaves Philadelphia at 6.55 p.m., daily, and is composed of Pullman Drawing-Room

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sleeping Cars, to Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Memphis, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, La. In addition to these it carries one first-class thoroughfare coach, as well as a well-appointed Dining-Car, in which meals are served between Philadelphia and New Orleans. In this connection it is worthy of note that the Southern Railway is the only railroad in the South operating a system of dining-cars, and the menu and meals upon them are maintained at the highest standard.

The Washington and Chattanooga Limited of the Southern Railway, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., is another handsome train. It carries through Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans, La., via Lynchburg, Va., and Bristol, Tenn. Combined Café, Parlor and Observation Cars are operated between Radford, Va., and Attalla, Ala. Meals are served in the Café Compartment at all hours on the European plan. Luxurious chairs in the Parlor Compartments are available for passengers at a moderate charge, the observation portion of car affording a most comfortable location for viewing this magnificent scenery. Passengers occupying Pullman cars have use of this car without extra charge.

The New York and Florida Express, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., carries Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., via Charlotte, N. C. Connections are made at Columbia, S. C., with the Charleston Division for Charleston, S. C., and at Trenton Junction for Aiken, S. C.

The United States Fast Mail of the Southern Railway, leaving Washington, D. C., daily, at 11.15 a.m., connecting with train leaving Philadelphia at 7.20 a.m., is one of the most popular trains operated in the South. This is composed of thoroughfare coaches and Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars between Washington, D. C., and New Orleans, La., Jacksonville, Fla., Charlotte, N. C., Augusta, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., with Pullman Sleeping Cars between Salisbury, N. C., and Memphis, Tenn., and Dining-Car between Washington, D. C., and Spartanburg, S. C. Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will be pleased to furnish rates, time-tables, and any further information.

LITERARY NOTE.

Walter H. Page has resigned the editorship of "The Atlantic Monthly," and has accepted an invitation to take a prominent post in the direction of the literary work of the allied houses of Harper & Brothers and the Doubleday & McClure Company. His successor in the editorship of the "Atlantic" is Bliss Perry, known in literature as the author of two novels and a number of essays and stories. Since his graduation from Williams College, in 1881, Bliss Perry has been in the department of English, first at Williams, and afterwards at Princeton University, where he was lately appointed to the Holmes Professorship of English Literature.

A CONVERT FROM INFIDELITY.

Over against Mr. Ingersoll's sad career may be put such a remarkable conversion as has recently taken place in Toledo, O. On Sunday, July 23d, a lawyer named M. O. Waggoner joined the United Brethren Church, and the "Daily Blade" of the following day gives these interesting facts:

The circumstances surrounding his change of heart are interesting, and, in some respects, novel. Mr. Waggoner had for some time previous been struggling with the conviction of the fallacy of the position which he had taken in regard to religious matters. This conviction had so preyed upon his mind that he was on the verge of prostration. At the solemn hour of midnight, and all alone in his room, he arranged a complete religious service for a gramophone, of which he happened to be the possessor. The numbers which he successively placed in the machine consisted of hymns and Scriptural selections, including Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow, the Twenty-third Psalm, and Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me.

"It was during the production of the last-named hymn," says Mr. Waggoner, "that light came into my soul, and I felt the consciousness that my sins had been forgiven."

Mr. Waggoner is known as one of Toledo's brainiest lawyers and most forceful writers, and in the field of infidelity he has had a considerable following. His conversion to Christianity is expected to have a wide influence on those who have followed his teachings in the past. Although about seventy-four years of age, he is a remarkably well-preserved man, which is due in part, no doubt, to the fact that he has never used tobacco, liquor or coffee, and that he has followed strictly the laws of nature.

Mr. Waggoner has a complete library of works on infidelity. He says his books are the devil's works, and he proposes to place the entire library in front of the United Brethren Church and there reduce it to ashes. This is to be an event of the near future. Mr. Waggoner will not go into evangelistic work, as many converted infidels have done, but will labor quietly among his neighbors and associates to the end that all may see the light as he sees it.

GETTYSBURG, LURAY, WASHINGTON.

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

Over the battlefield of Gettysburg, through the picturesque Blue Mountains, via Hagerstown and Antietam, and down the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley to the unique Caverns of Luray; thence across the rolling hills of Northern Virginia to Washington, is the route of this tour—a section of the country intensely interesting from both a historic and a scenic standpoint.

The tour will leave New York 7.00 a.m., and Philadelphia 12.20 p.m., Saturday, September 16th, in charge of one of the company's tourist agents, and will cover a period of five days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the trip throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $25 from New York, $24 from Trenton, $22 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents, Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

NATIONAL EXPORT EXPOSITION, PHILADELPHIA.

Reduced Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The National Export Exposition, which opens at Philadelphia on September 14th, and continues until November 30th, will be the most interesting and important event occurring in Philadelphia since the Centennial Exhibition in 1876. In addition to its valuable commercial exhibits it will present many features of popular interest and amusement. The United States Marine Band, Sousa's Band, the Banda Rossa, Innes' Band, Damrosch's Orchestra, and other celebrated bands will furnish music alternately, and a Midway Plaisance, equal if not superior to the famous World's Fair Midway at Chicago, and comprising a Chinese Village, a Chinese Theatre, acrobats, and customs; an Oriental Village, London Ghost Show, Hagenbeck's Wild Animal Show, Blarney Castle, and many other unique presentations, will furnish abundant and diversified amusement. Arrangements have also been made for Mandolin, Guitar, and Banjo Concerts, and for a grand chorus from the German Singing Societies.

For this occasion the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion ticket from all points on its line, to Philadelphia and return, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip plus price of admission. These tickets will be sold during the continuance of the Exposition and will be good for return passage until November 30th.

For specific rates and additional information apply to nearest Ticket Agent.

"A QUAKER EXPERIMENT IN GOVERNMENT."

President Sharpless, of Haverford College, will issue early in September the second and concluding volume of his History of Quaker Government in Pennsylvania, on which he has been actively at work for some years. The first volume was issued in the spring of 1898 under the title of "A Quaker Experiment in Government," and reviewed the first seventy-five years of the government of Penn's commonwealth. In the present volume, which is entitled, "The Quakers in the Revolution," the story is carried into the more stirring and better-known scenes of the Revolutionary War, and crosses the track of several of the most popular of recent historical romances. The Quakers, under stress of a stormy trial of their principles, became distinctly interesting and not unheroic figures, and their history in this period is well worthy the further attention of the novel-writers. It is also true that the plain, unvarnished truth about them is not only highly instructive, but far more entertaining than most novels. Those who have become interested in them through the pages of romances will be glad to follow them into actual history in President Sharpless's interesting volume.

"EVERYBODY'S MAGAZINE."

A new two-cent magazine illustrated periodical, to be known as "Everybody's Magazine," has been launched by John Wanamaker. The magazine for September, the first issue, presents a very creditable appearance, and promises good things for future numbers. The publishers in their announcement take occasion to say:

"We enter the magazine field with a certain modest, but (as we believe) worthy mission. It is nothing more and nothing less than an effort to furnish interest and amusement to a certain very large class of readers who desire their interest quickly and their amusement easily. 'Everybody's' is not to be a medium for the exploitation of anything heavy, and readers who desire ponderous essay or acrid argument must look elsewhere. But we shall try to put it at the very head of publications that have frankly no other motive than to satisfactorily fill a leisure hour."

"Everybody's Magazine" is published in New York city, at 74 East Ninth St. The subscription price is $1.00 per year.

Cleveland Bible Training School.

CONDUCTED BY

J. Walter Malone and Emma B. Malone.

This institution was not designed to be, nor does it aspire to be, a theological seminary. Such a purpose would be contrary to the spirit of Quakerism. It is intended to meet the needs of a large and increasing class of persons who are clearly called to Christian work, and who feel the need of a more thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, of acquaintance with the various forms of soul-saving effort, and of association with experienced workers.

The School has enthusiastic classes in Consecutive Bible Study and in Scripture Doctrine. It finds for its students abundant opportunities for service in connection with the Friends' Missions, the city rescue missions, visiting the sick and the needy, conducting children's meetings, mothers' meetings, Bible classes, etc.

It has classes in English and in Elocution for the cultivation of proper expression. Also, classes in Ancient History, Church History, and Bible Geography; and short courses in Psychology, Ethics, and Christian Evidences.

It keeps constantly in view, as necessary for effectual service:

I. A clean, pure, fully-justified life. II. Complete consecration to God, including both submission and dedication. III. The baptism with the Holy Spirit for perfection of character and service, and for the proper understanding of the Scriptures. IV. An ever widening and deepening knowledge of the Scriptures. V. Earnest Desire and effort for the salvation of others.

One thought pervades the entire work, viz.: That it is for God, and that His own Spirit must direct it.

The expense of attendance, including tuition, board, washing, heat, and light, is $3.00 per week, or $100 for the school year.

THE WOOD-THRUSH AT EVE.

At the wood-edge, what time the sun sank low,

We lingered speechless, being loath to leave

The cool, the calm, the quiet touch of eve,

And all the glamor of the afterglow.

We watched the purple shadows lengthen slow,

Saw the swift swallows through the clear air cleave,

And the bats begin their wayward flight to weave,

Then rose reluctantly, and turned to go.

But, ere we won beyond the warder trees,
From out the dim deep copse that hid the swale

Welled of a sudden flute-like harmonies
Flooding the twilight, scale on silvery scale,

As though we heard, far o'er the sundering seas,

The pain and passion of the nightingale.

For Sale.

Eleven-room house at Union Springs, N. Y. Five minutes' walk from Oakwood Seminary. Very pleasantly situated on a hill-top, affording a beautiful view of Cayuga Lake.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

FOR RENT.—To a small family, a well furnished twelve-room house, centrally located, in exchange for gentleman's board. Address, E. M. M., office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

BOARDING.—Three or four Friends can find a pleasant home with good board, in small adult family of Friends, at 2026 Mervine St., Philadelphia. A quiet, pleasant part of the city, convenient to several trolley lines.

I HAVE a very desirable property of twenty acres in the east-side of Wilmington. Splendid orchard. Thirteen inch wall brick house, slate roof, stone foundation, seven rooms, large doors and windows, large rooms, most excellent well of water, cistern, new barn, good land. Fine for poultry farm, fruit garden, or home for family who want the advantages of a location near a Friends' College, and to live near the great center of Friends in Ohio. W. S. Irvin, Wilmington, Ohio.

STUDENTS, Teachers and others wishing employment in agency work for the summer should address the UNION BOOK AND BIBLE HOUSE, M. Z. KIRK, Manager, Denver, Colo.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY—142 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia. On and after Ninth Month 1st, 1899, Friends' library will be open on week-days from 11.30 a.m. to 2 p.m., and from 3 to 6 p.m.

A FEW Boarders can be accommodated at the quiet, pleasant home of G. N. and W. B. Jones, at College Park, near San Jose, California. Each season here has its fruits and flowers.

ALL THINGS—Monthly, 16 pages. New Theory of Prophecy that involves doctrine, experience, government, science and history. Illustrated by charts. One year 50c. First four months 12c. in stamps.

VINCENT WOOD, Tecumseh, Mich.

WANTED.—Situation as waiterman, good house-servant, where faithful services would be appreciated; will go anywhere; English, single; moderate salary; undeniable references; also an honorable discharge from U. S. Army Hospital Corps as nurse attendant during the late War. Henry Colpus, 1346 South Thirteenth Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED.—Every one to have Peonies in great clusters of 5 to 9; all colors, double and single. They are deservedly the most popular flower grown. The largest, hardy as an oak, free from disease, with no insect enemy. You will have these if you send me fifteen cents for twenty seeds, by mail, and plant this fall. When established they will outlive you. Seeds of double and single Hollyhocks, Cinnamons, Shirley Poppies and Sweet Williams added for twenty cents. Sarah A. Pleas, Dunreith, Indiana.

QUAKERS AS MAKERS OF AMERICA.—This booklet has proved very popular, and has had a wide sale. Our second edition is now nearly exhausted. So long as the booklets last they will be sold as heretofore for 10 cents the copy, postage paid.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

WE CAN still supply our readers with Spurgeon's Address on George Fox for 10 cents per copy, postage paid. This address on the founder of Friends is by all odds the most eulogistic and pleasing ever delivered by anyone outside the denomination.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

WANTED.—Anyone with anything to advertise to send us 25 cents for an insertion of a five-line advertisement in this column telling Friends what it is. Fifty cents for two insertions, 75 cents for three, $1.00 for four. Extra lines above five, 5 cents each. Special rates for the quarter year, half year and year, furnished on application.

THE SOUTH.

Thousands of Visitors in North Carolina Mountains.—Crowd Increases Yearly.

The mountains of Western North Carolina have indeed been a refuge this summer. From every State south of Maryland and east of Ohio the tourists have poured by the thousands, and to-day the counties west of the Blue Ridge in North Carolina are thronged with visitors who have fled from the torrid rays of the sun in the home land to the shades of these great mountains.

The cooling waters of the French Broad, Swannanoa, Davidson and Mills Rivers, the Pigeon, the Tuckasee, the Tennessee, Hiwassee, Nantahala, Toe, Cane and other rivers and creeks have been sought by the invalid, the pleasure-seeker and the sportsman, and from the Blue Ridge to Smoky Mountains every mountain glen, and gorge, and valley, and country side, has been filled with those looking for a cooler spot, a deeper shadow.

And none have been disappointed. There has not been a night this summer, between Mitchell's Peak and Chunky Gal, when sleep was not comfortable under more or less covering.

It seems safe to say that between 15,000 and 25,000 people are now in our mountains, and still they come. And this throng increases as the years go by. What formerly was confined to Asheville has now spread until it covers every one of the twelve counties lying west of the Ridge, to say nothing of the half dozen or more on the eastern side of the mountain.—"Asheville Citizen," Asheville, N. C.

NEW YORK UNDER TAMMANY RULE.

"New York Under Tammany Rule" is the title of an informing article which Frank Moss, counsel for the Mazet Investigating Committee, has written for "The Saturday Evening Post," of Philadelphia. After summarizing the notorious methods of Tammany rule, whereby the leaders enrich themselves at the expense of the taxpayer, and run the city of New York as "wide-open" as any Western mining town, Mr. Moss accounts for the helplessness of the law-abiding majority and suggests a means for the overthrow of the Croker regime. This article is one of a series dealing with the municipal affairs of great American cities. It appeared in "The Saturday Evening Post" of September 9th.

THE TALLEST OFFICE BUILDING IN THE WORLD.

Towering high above the other "sky scrapers" in New York city is the Park Row Building, which lifts its twin towers 390 feet into mid-air, and unfurls its two flags over the city at a height of 447 feet above the sidewalk:

This monster structure, of twenty-nine stories, contains 950 offices, has 2,095 windows, and cost $2,400,000. It weighs 20,000 tons, and has a foundation the depth of which is 54 feet. The estimated number of occupants is 4,000.

The Park Row Building is considerably the tallest commercial building in the world; and it may surprise many of our readers to know that it stands upon a foundation of sand.

The territory of Alaska cost $7,200,000. Up to date the fur companies have taken more than $33,000,000 worth of sealskins. They have paid into the Treasury more than $6,000,000 as royalties, with $1,340,533 in dispute, says the "Saturday Evening Post." No estimate of the whale fisheries is accessible, but the value of the product is roughly placed at $2,000,000 a year, and the total of $20,000,000 since Alaska was ceded to the United States. The salmon fisheries yielded $2,977,019 in 1897, and nearly $4,000,000 in 1898. The exact figures are not yet known. Since annexation, the total output of the salmon fisheries has exceeded $30,000,000. In a letter to Congress the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries estimated the value of the Alaskan fisheries, excluding whales and seals, at $67,890,000. The gold output up to 1897 exceeded $15,000,000. The total for 1898 is estimated at $6,000,000, although the exact figures are not obtainable.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD	902

ON AN UNJUST JUDGMENT.

The grand question still remains. Was the judgment just? If unjust, it will not and cannot get harbor for itself, or continue to have footing in this universe, which was made by other than One Unjust. Enforce it by never such statuting, three readings, royal assents; blow it to the four winds with all manner of quilted trumpeters and pursuivants, in the rear of them never so many gibbets and hangmen, it will not stand, it cannot stand. From all souls of men, from all ends of Nature, from the Throne of God above, there are voices bidding it: Away, away! Does it take no warning; does it stand, strong in its three readings, in its gibbets and artillery parks? The more woe is to it, the frightfuller woe. It will continue standing for its day, for its year, for its century, doing evil all the while; but it has One enemy who is Almighty; dissolution, explosion, and the everlasting Laws of Nature incessantly advance toward it, and the deeper its rooting, more obstinate its continuing, the deeper also and huger will its ruin and overturn be.

In this God's-world, with its wild-whirling eddies and mad foam-oceans, where men and nations perish as if without law, and judgment for an unjust thing is sternly delayed, dost thou think that there is therefore no justice? It is what the fool hath said in his heart. It is what the wise, in all times, were wise because they denied, and knew forever not to be. I tell thee again, there is nothing else but justice. One strong thing I find here below: the just thing, the true thing. My friend, if thou hadst all the artillery of Woolwich trundling at thy back in support of an unjust thing, and infinite bonfires visibly waiting ahead of thee to blaze centuries long for thy victory on behalf of it, I would advise thee to call halt, to fling down thy baton, and say, "In God's name, No!"

THE FOOL'S PRAYER.

BY EDWARD ROWLAND SILL.

The royal feast was done; the king
Sought out some new sport to banish care,
And to his jester cried: "Sir Fool,
Kneel now, and make for us a prayer."

The jester doffed his cap and bells
And stood the mocking court before;
They could not see the bitter smile
Behind the painted grin he wore.

He bowed his head and bent his knee
Upon the monarch's silken stool;
His pleading voice arose: "O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"No pity, Lord, could change the heart
From red with wrong to white as wool;
The rod must heal the sin; but, Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"'Tis not by guilt the onward sweep
Of truth and right, O Lord, we stay;
'Tis by our follies that so long
We hold the earth from heaven away.

"These clumsy feet still in the mire,
Go crushing blossoms without end;
These hard, well-meaning hands we thrust
Among the heart-strings of a friend.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept—
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
The word we had not sense to say—
Who knows how grandly it had rung?

"The faults no tenderness should ask,
The chastening stripes must cleanse them all;
But for our blunders—oh, in shame,
Before the eyes of heaven we fall.

"Earth bears no balsam for mistakes;
Men crown the knave, and scourge the tool
That did his will; but Thou, O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool."

THE GOOD FIGHT OF FAITH.

AN old man—"Paul the aged,"—who was "ever a fighter," is writing to a young man who is just learning what it means to be a Christian soldier in the Roman Empire in the first century. His message has the nature of a battle call—"Fight the good fight of Faith,"—and for himself he says, "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the Faith." "The fight of Faith," what does that mean? What is this exultant cry, "I have kept the Faith?" It means, of course, that "the Faith" is not something which can be kept as one keeps a jewel or a money bag, or as one keeps a pressed flower between the leaves of a book. It is something which must be struggled for, fought for and won to the very end of life.

The easier way is to have the church decide what "the Faith" is, and to have it fixed once for all, so that there shall be no necessity for struggling for it or fighting for it. The individual has then only to take it and hold it. This course the historic church took. But it paid a tremendous price for the peace and ease. It kept the Faith as the mummy tombs kept the Egyptian wheat. Its members had no necessity to fight the good fight of Faith, and their religion became a dead, nerveless, unproductive thing, a something put on from the outside like a coat, instead of something vital, springing out of the heart and permeating the whole personality.

Paul's battle call embodies a fundamental law of the spiritual life. Settle down to a life of slippered ease, with no fight for Faith, no struggle for Truth, no course to run, no goal to press toward, no reach beyond the grasp, and the soul's religion loses its color and its sap as the pressed flower does. What is more pitiable than the Christian who has no onward life, who knows that he is a Christian only because he remembers the date of his conversion, and who has no clearer evidence than his signature to the creed of his church? Paul would certainly not call this "keeping the Faith." "Keeping the Faith" for him is always bound up with ACTION. It cannot be separated from fighting the good fight and running the course to the finish.

What should we think of a mother who should discover a method of keeping her baby always a baby—who should hold up the poor dwarfed and stunted thing and should say, "See, I have kept my child!" No, the way to "keep" a child is to let it take its true life-course, to let it battle with the obstacles which beset us all in this world, and so let it win an ever-increasing power. It is a course which has its dangers. The child may tumble, it may get bruises, it must have its bitter cries and its pains; but it can be a man with a man's strength in no other way.

The whole question turns upon this point: Is Faith to be something passive or something active? Is it something done once for all or a never-ending action like breathing or heart-throbbing? Is it the medal won by a single victory and kept in a case, or is the unconquerable spirit of the fighter who never lays down his weapons, but goes from victory to victory. Paul takes the second view. It is the throb of the heart, it is the act of the soul, it is the spirit which wrings victory after victory from the enemy—in fact, faith itself is the victory.

A SACRIFICE TO THE HONOR OF THE ARMY.

It is a mistake to suppose that Captain Alfred Dreyfus was condemned as guilty (in spite of the lack of evidence of guilt) by the military court at Rennes because he was a Jew. There is, to be sure, a very strong anti-Jew party in France, and the race feeling is bitter; but it was not this which condemned the captain whose name is now a familiar one around the globe, and those who explain the situation on a basis of race hatred lose the real significance of this criminal and barbaric decision of a court which had decided its case before it began to hear testimony.

He has been offered up as a living sacrifice to the "Honor of the Army," that monstrous god who has altars in every country, and who must be appeased—not by gold and slain beasts, but who, like Moloch, demands living human victims.

Five years ago Dreyfus was made a scapegoat to bear away the rottenness and corruption of the army chiefs. They believed that they could cover up the evil that existed if a victim were found, and so, through jealousy and malice, this unpopular Alsatian Jew was selected and the web of forgery and falsehood woven about him. His story is only too well-known until he came before the military court at Rennes, where the whole world has followed his trial—one of the most celebrated in all history.

If the court had found him innocent it would have meant that the army chiefs were guilty. It had to brand one man or the whole military system of France. It had to choose whether it would make a monstrous sacrifice of one victim, or let the world see that the French army had its rotten spots which could no longer be covered up. The honor of the army was at stake. It was a head-on collision between the honor of the army and justice to an individual, and justice was for the moment ground under the wheels. The indignation of the world has followed the decision, as it ought, but the indignant editors and ministers and general public do not seem to see that standing armies and military systems cannot exist without victims. Individual justice has never had more than scant recognition in any country when the alleged honor of the army was at stake. Let any poor, innocent, unfriended man get in the way of those red chariot wheels and what hope is there for him? If a country is to worship such a god at all, it must expect to give victims when they are asked, and this is only one glaring instance which has at length shocked the moral sense of the world.

The menace of a standing army and of an imperial military system is infinitely greater, more subtle and far-reaching than most persons realize or dream of. It is not simply a drain on the country's revenue; it is not merely a call and conscription of its young manhood; it not only compels each workingman to carry a soldier on his back, but it gives the nation a brutal fetish to worship—a monstrous god—and it paralyzes the healthy moral sense of a people and substitutes false "glory" and "honor" for truth and justice and righteousness.

A NATIONAL CONSCIENCE.

A SOUND, safe, enlightened individual conscience is not the creation of a moment, but it is the mature fruit of right thought, right emotions, right volitions and right actions. Many a man with a "good ordinary conscience" finds his inward compass needle swung from its true polar bearing and veering to an unsafe point because of a sudden passion, or a warping habit, or a fixed prejudice. Such a conscience cannot be called either "sound" or "safe."

But if the creation of a thoroughly reliable individual conscience is so slow and difficult, much more so is the formation of an enlightened public, or national, conscience. Strangely enough, a nation will take a course and execute acts amid general applause which would shame and shock nearly every individual of the nation if they should be asked to do the same sort of a thing as men. It is hard to explain this "depravity of a crowd," but it is surely a fact. The mass of the French people seem entirely unmoved over the injustice which has been wrought upon Dreyfus, and there is no long, loud protest from the heart of the people against the injustice, since there is apparently no sensitive conscience formed in the hearts of these people.

The Colonial Secretary of Great Britain has for weeks been following a course which, if pursued to the bitter end, as it is likely to be, will destroy the Boer Republic, in South Africa, will drive these honest, simple-minded, liberty-loving peasant people to the wall and give their lands to selfish, ambitious and money-grasping adventurers. Of course the English people have argued themselves into believing that they have a "case," but it is a much clearer case of dull conscience. For did the English nation have as clear a sense of moral right and fairness as Frederic Harrison—a distinguished Englishman—shows in his noble protest to Lord Salisbury, the Boers would not have need to fear being crowded to the wall.

We do not need to go far from home for our examples. We have been busily engaged for more than six months in the work of killing Filipinos and burning their towns. When the story is told with all "the extenuating circumstances" and all possible allowances it is an awful tale. We may say that "these wretches began it," and "we have clear rights to their islands," and all that, and yet it is a most pitiable affair—a dreadful piece of work which never ought to have been!

But how much has it stirred our national conscience? A little group of men have carried on a more or less unwise method of agitation against the war, and some democrat leaders have tried to make political capital out of an opposition to the policy of the present administration, but the mass of our people has given no sign of an uneasy conscience, and there is no great heart of sympathy for these poor, misguided mortals who are suffering so much at our hands.

The case is still worse when the public conscience is examined on the subject of the work of the American saloon. It sometimes seems as though there were no conscience at all. No statistics appall it, no tale of woe moves it, no total of horrors drives it to action. If there were an adequate public conscience the liquor traffic could not exist one month!

EDITORIAL NOTE.

THE world has seldom seen a greater prophet of righteousness than Thomas Carlyle. He sometimes spoiled his great message with dyspeptic wailings, but in the main his heart was sound and his vision clear. The passage from his "Past and Present," written in 1843, which appears on our cover this week, is the voice of a true prophet, and it is well to read it in connection with recent events in France, and to remember it always in our own acts and the acts of our own country.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

George Adam Smith, Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis in Free Church College, Glasgow, Scotland, has been called to the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Chicago. His decision is not yet given.

The eighty-third annual report of the American Bible Society shows that the total receipts during the past year were $352,617, of which $100,268 came from private donations. The total issues for the year amount to 1,380,892 copies, of which 719,622 were distributed in foreign lands.

The Japanese government is taking steps to discourage religious teaching in the schools of Japan. By a recent regulation of the Educational Department of the government provision is made that the youth in schools where religion is taught may be drafted as conscripts for the army. This will seriously affect, if it is carried out, all the schools of Mission Boards.

The "Independent" continues its attacks on A. B. Simpson's methods of raising money and carrying on mission work. The "Christian Advocate" (Methodist) has also taken a similar position, and its last issue contains a vigorous editorial on the whole movement led by Dr. Simpson.

The latest enterprise of D. L. Moody is the proposed reproduction of the largest Northfield Conference in Chicago next month. The August Bible Conference at Northfield this year, as conceded by all who attended, was the best ever held there. It had the greatest attendance and the most deep and scriptural teaching; especially is it said that the number of ministers present exceeded that of any previous season. D. L. Moody's plan is now, as far as possible, to hold a similar Convention in Chicago during the first part of Tenth month, beginning with the first Sabbath in the month. The principal speakers announced are G. Campbell Morgan, of London, whose preaching and teaching at Northfield has increased in power and popularity; J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., of New York, a leader in the Winona movement and prominent elsewhere in evangelistic work; R. A. Torrey, Superintendent of the Bible Institute; Prof. W. W. White, of international renown as a Bible teacher, and W. R. Newell, the leader of the Moody Bible classes held in Chicago for the past two winters. D. L. Moody, of course, will be present also.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Large numbers of Endeavorers and others came on Second-day to attend the opening praise meeting and reception of the Christian Endeavorers, which is regularly held Second-day evening of yearly meeting week. It was a time of rejoicing and blessing. The regular business meeting of the Endeavor Unions followed the next morning.

At the devotional meeting, Third-day, Ninth month 5th, at one o'clock, Isom P. Wooton, Allen Jay, Charles W. Sweet and others gave short messages of cheer and counsel, with song and praise intermingling. Among others, Aunt Mary Marshall, 94 years old, praised God for the privilege of coming to yearly meeting.

Yearly meeting for business met at two o'clock. Larger numbers of delegates and members were present than is usual at the opening day. The Printing Committee, in reporting the past year's business, announced that arrangements have been made to have the minutes of this year printed and ready to ship within seven days after the close of yearly meeting. Their promptness was commended.

A request from Mt. Vernon concerning the suppression of the liquor traffic was referred to the Representative Meeting, and a question of interpreting the discipline bearing upon secret societies, presented by Lynn Grove Quarter, was referred to a committee. Also a request from Pleasant Plain concerning provision being made for the aged and needy among our ministers was referred to a committee.

John F. Hanson sends a message of greeting and encouragement from his present field of service—Stavanger, Norway. The meeting directed a reply.

Fourth-day morning.—Leanah Hobson and Allen Jay preached able sermons, the former from the text, "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

Afternoon.—From the delegates' report the clerks were reappointed as follows: Stephen M. Hadley, presiding clerk; William Jasper Hadley, recording clerk; Mary T. Thomas, reading clerk; John Fry having been appointed announcing clerk at the opening session.

Those present at this session and arriving later with credentials were Miriam Johnson, Elisha H. Janeway, Susie B. Sisson, Kansas; Leanah Hobson, Lydia Reynolds, Martilia N. Cox, Western; Allen Jay, Franklin Meredith, Mary Moon Meredith, Charles L. Jessup, Indiana; George A. Lupton, William J. Thornbury, Jesse Lloyd, Arthur B. Chilson, Willis R. Hotchkiss and Clinton Reynolds, Ohio.

James Wood and Emily H. Wood, from New York Yearly Meeting, were present without credentials.

The London General Epistle was read and listened to with much interest. At the request of a Friend, James Wood explained the great carefulness with which English Friends prepare their epistles, showing also incidentally how this care and thought, which is given to all their public documents, has given them such great influence upon the English government, and also with the governments of Europe. At the recent Conference at The Hague greater consideration was shown the delegation of English Friends than to any similar body. He also called the attention of Iowa Friends to the fact that they are the nearest meeting to the persecuted and peace-loving Doukoborts, who have recently settled in Manitoba, and constitute a most interesting field for Quaker missionary effort.

Fifth-day morning.—The Book and Tract Committee report the distribution of several hundred bound volumes during the year, and also a considerable number of tracts and papers.

A large part of the forenoon was devoted to the pastoral and evangelistic interests of the church. Zenas L. Martin, general superintendent, has visited within all the quarterly meetings but one. The secretary's report included the following statistics: Number of meetings, 117; number of pastors, 71; number of series of meetings held, 101; number of reported conversions, 673; number of reported renewals, 434; number of reported sanctifications, 376; number added to the church, 492; number of young people who show evidences of a call to the ministry—males, 22; females, 14.

A number of meeting houses have been repaired during the year, and five new ones have been built at a cost of $8,300. An indebtedness of nearly $200 was reported beyond the appropriation allowed the committee the past year. A subscription was taken in cash and pledges amounting to $229.

Z. L. Martin referred to the devotion and sacrifice shown by the pastors and workers in the yearly meeting. During the past year he had been in some of the richest homes in the world—the homes of some pastors whose support furnished by their churches hardly allowed them the bare necessities of life. Yet they go forward uncomplainingly in their labor of love and devotion.

I. P. Wooton referred to the need felt years ago in the yearly meeting for an adequate supervision on the part of the church of its own work, and to the steps which were taken to secure this end. He had watched the progress of this work with the greatest interest, and is encouraged by the growth and blessing that has attended the pastoral and evangelistic work of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

John Fry called attention to the needs in some of the remote quarterly meetings, especially to the three monthly meetings in Wisconsin.

William J. Hadley urged that quarterly meetings pay their apportionments to the yearly meeting early in order that the work of the committee need not be hindered.

Charles W. Sweet and others referred to the hearty co-operation and sympathy that exists between the pastors and workers and the general superintendent.

Friends in Nebraska sent a communication to the yearly meeting, setting forth the origin and purpose of the recently formed "Nebraska Church and Educational Association."

Of the twenty-two monthly meetings in Nebraska belonging to six quarterly meetings and two yearly meetings, nineteen are the outgrowth of church extension work. Ninety per cent. of the members are such by conviction, and ninety-five per cent. of them never attended a yearly meeting.

Central City College property, recently acquired by the Association, is free from debt. It is the purpose of the managers this year to provide instruction as far as through the freshman year, and add to the course after the first year. About three-fourths of the Nebraska work belongs to Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Herbert J. Mott explained that the Nebraska Association of Friends did not ask to be adopted or endorsed by the yearly meeting, but the report was sent as a matter of information. The new organization in no wise interferes with the regular relations of the monthly, quarterly and yearly meetings.

The public meeting of the Endeavor Society on Fifth-day evening was an occasion of intense interest and blessing. Arthur Chilson gave the opening address. Willis R. Hotchkiss, who has recently returned from four years' service in east Central Africa, spoke with deep feeling of the field, its needs, and God's care and blessing. The meeting was moved in an unusual manner. Charles Sweet followed in a brief, earnest exhortation.

Sixth-day morning.—The various Standing Committees reported by the General Nominating Committee were appointed.

The Committee on Suppression of the Liquor Traffic made a satisfactory report, which was followed by a discussion, showing great interest in this work.

In considering the report of the committee concerning the question of interpreting the paragraph of discipline referring to secret oath-bound societies, the decision was reached that the discipline is sufficiently clear and needs no further interpretation.

Higher education was considered the latter part of the session. Reports were read from Ackworth, New Providence, Le Grand, Pleasant Plain, Earlham and Chapel (Missouri) Academies. The reports from Penn College show a constantly increasing patronage and support, with the former high standing of the institution maintained. The financial condition is still very embarrassing, and further and extensive help is greatly needed. Of the 401 students the past year, Iowa furnished 365; Kansas, 12; Nebraska, 6; Indiana, 5; Missouri, 5; South Dakota, 4; Illinois, 2; Montana, 1; Indian Territory, 1.

The reports show higher intellectual attainments and deeper spiritual life in the College than ever before. President Rosenberger referred to the following additional subjects offered the ensuing year: The English Bible, Comparative Religions, History of Missions. These subjects, together with the missionary and evangelistic work carried on by the students in Oskaloosa and vicinity, will prove of especial interest to those preparing as Christian workers in the home or foreign field.

Irving C. Johnson, M. Stalker, Cyrus Beede, Enoch Lewis and B. F. Andrews were appointed as the Yearly Meeting Directors of Penn College.

President Rosenberger gave an interesting report of the educational conference at Providence, R. I.

James Wood spoke on "The Importance of Education in the Society of Friends." Other things being equal, an educated man or woman can do everything better than one who is not educated. Man's entire nature—physical, mental and spiritual—must receive due attention.

"Friends of the Truth" was the first name applied to our Society. Friends have furnished three times their proportionate number of members of Parliament as compared to any other denomination. George Fox believed in an educated ministry of both sexes. Besides a school for boys, he established a girls' boarding school, the first one in the world, outside of the Catholic nunneries.

Allen Jay referred to a conversation in which John Bright had stated it as his conviction that it was as much his duty to take part in politics and in the affairs of the government as for Allen Jay to preach the Gospel. God loves this nation. Friends must advance and take a more prominent part in the matters of state, as well as in matters of a strictly religious character. Thirty-one years ago he had done his first work as a "beggar, and had been begging ever since." At that time he had taken up $1,000 in fifteen minutes in the men's meeting for aid in North Carolina Yearly Meeting, and in a few minutes in the women's meeting upstairs he had received $400 for that same work. "Friends, I don't know as you give as well as your fathers did!"

Friends often do not love and appreciate and work for their home academies as they should. Keep up a school of high standard; give the children a taste of education in the home academy and then they will want to go to college. "Education will not make a preacher, but it will make a better preacher of one whom God has made."

The committee from last year to consider the subject proposed a new plan for raising funds for yearly meeting stock, the leading features of the proposed plan being, (1) a uniform assessment of 50 cents for all members over 21 years old, and 10 cents for members under 21 years; (2) a special treasurer in each monthly meeting to receive such funds and receipt for them, using blanks furnished by the yearly meeting; (3) each quarterly meeting to be responsible for an amount equal to its present apportionment. After some discussion the subject was referred back to the committee.

Charles L. Jessup, of Indiana, addressed the temperance meeting in the evening. Subject: "The Quakers, Slavery and Temperance." Many of those present regard it as the most able and convincing address within their knowledge. After the address a Friend arose in the audience and said he would give $50 to have that address given in his home meeting. A lecture tour was subsequently arranged for Charles L. Jessup in Iowa, in care of D. B. Cook, whom meetings wishing to secure him should address, at Earlham, Iowa.

The officers appointed for the Sabbath school work are Anna Draper, general superintendent; Lewis T. Hill, president; Mary H. Lewis, secretary and treasurer; O. E. Dixon, member executive committee.

The reports show but a little over half of our members in the Sabbath school. Special attention has been given to three subjects the past year: (1) Bible Training Classes; (2) Graded School Work; (3) The Home Department.

Charles S. White spoke on the need of studying God's word. L. Maria Deane emphasized the fact that the Bible is the word of God.

William Marshall returned a minute given him three years ago with a report of his work in South America. He showed the great need of a pure Gospel in South America, priest-ridden as it has been for centuries. The doors of Bolivia, heretofore absolutely closed to Protestant teachers, seem just now able to be forced open a little, and one or two workers have possibly just entered that country. H. E. McGrew and T. C. Kenworthy were appointed to send a letter of greeting to Rufus Garratt, who has recently deemed it right for him to take up work under another denomination.

The report of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions was listened to with great interest, largely taken up as it is with matters pertaining to mission work in the West Indies.

Superintendent Arthur H. Swift sent his annual report of the work in Jamaica. There are now three monthly meetings in Jamaica, with a membership of 332. The net increase the past year is 51. The three monthly meetings have raised the past year about $540. There are six day schools, with 348 pupils. Glen Haven School has a total enrollment of 111, and Seaside, 100. Fourteen Sabbath schools are reported having 760 scholars.

The Penn Peru Board report that they have closed up their work in South America for the present, and urge that all contributions go now through the Foreign Board toward work in Jamaica and other of the West Indies.

The treasurer's report shows about $3,900 contributed the past year by Iowa Yearly Meeting toward the Jamaica work, besides the amounts raised on the island and amounts contributed outside the yearly meeting. An indebtedness of nearly $400 reported last year has been paid, and the new year is begun free from debt. Special success appears in the new Girls' Training School. Twenty-one girls are in the school, conducted by Alsina M. Andrews as matron. Most of these girls—Creoles and East Indians—have been converted since entering the school. The reputation of the school is already well-established, and applications of students have been refused for lack of room. How Miss Andrews has carried on this work up to this time, with no assistant and with such signal success, is a marvel to many.

The yearly meeting authorized the Joint Mission Board (made up of the officers of the Foreign Board and the Women's Board) to take up work in Cuba and elsewhere in the West Indies, in conjunction with other yearly meetings, as soon as in their judgment it is practicable to do so, the thought being that the urgency of the matter demands immediate action by the several yearly meetings interested, and that a temporary arrangement should be effected at once for opening and maintaining the work until such time as the American Board may be authorized by the various yearly meetings for carrying on work in the field, and that this work should then be placed in the hands of this board.

James Wood, in a short address, showed clearly the relation and responsibility of American Friends toward the West Indies. He referred also to the substantial aid that Captain Baker, the president of the Boston Fruit Company, has rendered to Iowa Friends in their work in Jamaica, and to his desire that Friends follow up the Boston Fruit Company in those parts of Cuba where the company will locate its operations.

At the close of a short missionary address by H. E. McGrew, in less than fifteen minutes a collection was taken in cash and pledges amounting to $450.

The Evangelistic Committee report the same organization as that of last year, viz: Zenas L. Martin, general superintendent; William Jasper Hadley, president; Anna Draper, vice president; L. Maria Deane, secretary; Hiram Hammond, treasurer.

Seventh-day afternoon.—Anna Draper and H. E. McGrew were elected as members of the Summer Training School Board, and Gilbert Bowles was chosen to fill the unexpired term of Levi Rees. A number of Friends spoke, stating the advantages offered in the Summer School, and urging that a much larger number attend in the future.

The committee on the subject of aid for aged ministers propose a plan for accumulating a fund, subscribed to by ministers and others, the income to be disbursed by a committee of three, one of whom shall be the superintendent of pastoral and evangelistic work.

Willis Hotchkiss, of Ohio Yearly Meeting, presented a plan for opening an industrial mission in East Central Africa, near Victoria Nyanza. He also asked the meeting to appoint two members of an advisory board as contemplated in their plan. William Jasper Hadley and Susie J. Martin were reappointed as the Iowa members of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and also to serve as members of the proposed Advisory Board for Africa.

The delegates reported about the usual appropriations, amounting in all to $1,945, and urged that one-half of this amount be paid to the yearly meeting treasurer by Second month 1st, and the balance by Eighth month 1st, 1900.

William Wildman was reappointed treasurer of the yearly meeting.

The statistical report shows a little lower membership reported this year than last.

Charles S. White deplored this loss in numbers as indicating lack of life and power in the meetings. Several others accounted for the lower numbers reported from the fact that a large number of monthly meetings have this year dropped from their lists of members large numbers of those whom they have failed to locate after diligent efforts to find them.

James Wood said that he had heard much about Iowa Yearly Meeting, and had heard fears expressed that the present pastoral system would produce a domineering spirit among the ministers. Since being in the yearly meeting he had detected no indications of this domineering spirit, and was convinced that it did not exist. He was pleased to observe the spirit of humility and devotion so generally manifested—devotion to the service of the church and of Christ. "Who serves the church serves the Head. Who serves the Bride serves the Bridegroom."

On the Sabbath, meetings were held both morning and afternoon in the yearly meeting house—in the tent and at two stands in the yard, and in the evening Friends preached by invitation at nearly all the churches in the city. The crowd upon the grounds was estimated as high as 10,000 people, and the best of order prevailed. The collections taken at these meetings go toward the Church Extension work.

Second-day morning.—The closing session was mainly taken up with reports of committees and words of farewell.

John Henry Douglas sent to the meeting a message of love and greeting by Eli G. Parker.

Several spoke of the absence of certain of our aged Friends, and a minute of love and greeting was directed to be prepared for them.

The sessions of the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight were occasions of wise counsel and timely teaching.

At the opening meeting on Fourth-day morning Isom P. Wooton and Allen Jay spoke especially counseling the ministers and workers, and at a meeting appointed for the purpose Allen Jay further addressed the young preachers and workers.

At the session on Sixth-day afternoon James Wood gave a deeply spiritual and intensely practical address on "The Duties of Elders."

Devotional meetings were held, from two to four in number daily, according as the business program of the yearly meeting allowed time for them. The Christian Endeavorers conducted a six o'clock prayer meeting, except Fifth-day morning, which was observed as "Quiet Hour." All these occasions were times of great blessing.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

MY EXPERIENCE IN THE CIVIL WAR.

BY EDWARD C. COOK.

Finding an old roll of letters addressed to my wife during the closing year of the Civil War, I felt that it might interest some readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and honor Him who preserved and protected me, for me to tell some of His gracious dealing with me in that time of peculiar trial.

During the summer and autumn of 1864 I lived with my young wife on a rented farm some miles north of Coal Creek, in Keokuk County, Iowa.

The country was then new and wild. Not a neighbor's house, nor fence, nor acre of cultivated land, save that around our own dwelling, could we see.

The fear of a draft to fill Iowa's quota of troops hung as a dark cloud over the people, yet I felt little fear.

Thoroughly educated in the principles of Gospel peace and Christian non-resistance, I could not join in the strife of war. If drafted, I expected to ask, in accordance with a provision kindly made by Congress to meet such cases, to be assigned to service in caring for the Freedmen; but even if the worst should befall me, I felt that it would be blessed to join that army of sufferers for conscience' sake of whom I had read from early childhood. Afterwards I remembered a wise piece of advice once given: "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast as he that putteth it off."

Near the first of Eleventh month I was notified that my name had been drawn. I had no trouble in proving my right to the provisions of the law for "non-combatants," and received a certificate of such proof from the provost marshal, who also placed a note to the same effect against my name on the rolls. I had to report at Grinnell, Iowa, on the 18th, to be sent to Camp McLellan, near Davenport. There I was told to await an assignment. Five days before the dreaded day our second little boy was born. Ere this we had begun to realize that we were in trouble, but tried to meet it bravely. We were poor and far from relatives or friends who could assist us. A kind family coming into the adjoining settlement seeking a home, I arranged with them to move in with and care for my wife and little ones till they were able to be taken to our relatives near Springdale.

It was a tearful parting, yet we had no fear that I would not get the position I asked. I was forced to put on the uniform, in consenting to which I afterwards felt I had made a serious mistake.

Arriving with many others at the camp, I sought the officer in charge and presented my precious certificate. He received me coldly; said all he could do was to send me to the front, and told me I must wait for my assignment till I reached a regiment; and a day or two later ordered me to take a rifle and go on guard, and on my refusal seemed greatly enraged, threatening me with severe punishment; but afterwards, hardly daring to carry out his threats, as I thought, told me he would send me South with the first squad of recruits, which he fulfilled.

I wrote at once to Brinton Darlington, of Muscatine, a prominent and energetic Friend, who was my stepfather, asking him to take steps at once for my relief, which I felt sure he would not be slow to do. But, suspecting no foul play with my letters, I put all I wrote while I remained there in the camp mail box, only to discover after I returned home that they were all retained till I was safely sent South.

For four very long and weary months to me I received not a word from my wife or friends, or saw a person I had ever seen before. Though I wrote to my wife as often as once a week, and she promptly answered, yet moving from point to point her letters did not reach me. Neither could my friends, who, through that generous and efficient friend of the suffering, Francis T. King, promptly carried my case before Secretary Stanton, reach me with the relief they secured. Dear noble man! He made several trips to Washington on my account, and afterwards positively refused the return of his necessary expenses.

Eleventh month 25th found me with one hundred and thirty other recruits assigned to the Ninth Iowa Infantry on the cars under guard as prisoners on the way to Nashville, Tenn.

Naturally of a very sensitive and timid disposition, I did not escape intense mental suffering at times as the clouds thus settled around me. Yet often the blessed Master fulfilled His gracious promise, "As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you." My bosom swells with emotion and tears come to my eyes even now as I remember one day, when overwhelmed with fears, I took my little hymn book and asked Him to cause it to open to something that would be a message to my soul from Him. Wonderful to me was the answer, as several times in succession it opened to words that seemed to have been written especially for my condition, and when at last I read,

Forward, and fear not—the billows may roll,
But the power of Jehovah their rage can control;
Thro' the sea and the desert thy pathway may tend,
But He who has saved thee, will save to the end.

I cried through my tears, "Lord, it is enough." Again, while on the cars going South, a guard, seeing my Bible in my hand, took it and returned it again, pointing to the words of the ninety-first Psalm, "A thousand shall fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee." He did not know my condition, but I was sure he was directed by One who did.

Reaching Nashville just as the Ninth Iowa, under Sherman, had started on the famous "march to the sea," and General Hood, with his hungry Confederate army, was marching up on the strength of two ears of corn a day to attack Nashville, with the promise of plenty whenever they should surmount its triple line of defences and enter the city, we could go no further, and found ourselves domiciled in The Zollikoffer, an immense brick building, said to contain 365 rooms, built by General Zollikoffer for a hotel, but confiscated and used for exchange barracks. Into this were crowded between 5,000 and 6,000 men, who, from various causes were away from their commands, mostly unarmed.

Our "hotel" accommodations during the two weeks or more spent there were not the best. Much of the time we were unable to get water, except to drink, and were piled around like hogs. Filth and vermin reigned. When hungry, we would be obliged to "fall in" ranks a long way from the one dining hall, and stand an hour or more before we could reach the door and partake of our scanty meal of a slice of bread, a piece of boiled pork and bowl of coffee, or sometimes bean soup. Oh, the glories of war as I saw them! Camp life is ever a fearful school of vice.

Through those long halls could be seen hundreds of men seated on the floor around blankets on which they were playing cards, laying them down with that spiteful slap that always tells so clearly the demoralizing nature of the game, while around them lay the little piles of money, "put up just to make it interesting," while foul language of every sort seemed like a fog to fill the air; and one could scarcely think sometimes, even in the silence of night, without such words seeming to follow you like vultures of darkness.

Soon after reaching Nashville we heard the roar of artillery at the battle of Franklin, and General Thomas fell back and occupied the defences around us, closely followed by Hood, who besieged the city; and on Twelfth month 5th we were marched out on the Capitol grounds to be armed and organized to assist in its defence.

I used every opportunity to present my case to officers in command, sometimes receiving in return abusive language, sometimes silent contempt, and sometimes they were so kind as to tell me they were sorry for me, but could not help me. But my help was alone in Him whom in my weakness I was trying to obey. The day passed away and all were armed except myself and a few others. The supply of arms was exhausted, and I was left to go back to my "hotel," now nearly empty of its boarders, and remain till the evening before the battle, when we that were left were taken to the inner line of defences ready to be used if needed.

For two days the awful storm of battle raged in front of us, but was not permitted to touch us. Almost under the shadow of Fort Negley, we could see the shells from its mortars flying with a hiss through the air, and hear the yell of the charge and awful crackling of rifles. I have never heard other sounds so terrible as the yell of the battle charge. I could easily think the bottomless pit was near, and I heard in mighty chorus the shrieks of demons and lost souls. But no! It was only the sons and brothers of a Christian (?) nation striving in desperate madness to mangle each other's bodies and destroy each other's lives.

The next day, though the rain poured down incessantly, we marched toward Murfreesboro in pursuit of the flying foe. Every thread of our heavy winter clothing was wet, and our knapsacks, canteens and haversacks, containing two days' rations, pressed us down into the mud like leaden weights, and the aching of limbs and shoulders would have seemed unendurable had there been a way to escape it. About dark, the rain ceasing and a freezing wind blowing up from the north, we stopped to spend the night in the woods as best we could. So tired and stiff was I that I felt tempted to lie down and perish rather than make any further exertion, but the thought of loved ones left behind lent renewed energy, and, succeeding in starting fires, managed to pass the night more comfortably than we expected.

However, the Lord fulfilled His promise, making this work for my good, for it caused a lameness in my ankle, so that when, five days later, I got off the cars that carried us from Murfreesboro to Huntsville, Ala., I could not walk, and was sent to convalescent camp at Chattanooga, where some weeks of rest and half rations made me ready for a long trip to Goldsboro, N. C., via Cincinnati, Annapolis and the ocean.

Now a word on the pleasures of military traveling: South from Murfreesboro we were crowded into box cars, sitting on long seats like those in an old Friends' meeting house, and so densely packed that if the men wished to reach the door they must walk on the back of a seat, or, losing their balance with the swaying of the car, come down with full force on some one's knees. I remember sitting so conveniently near the door as to be stepped on many times. However, from Chattanooga back to Nashville I got on the roof of a car, with one arm thrown over the centerboard and feet just at the eaves. There I remember another man and I slept one night, and woke to find that one of our blankets had slipped off over the edge, where we might easily have followed.

On the steamer for Morehead City we were so closely packed in the hold that only part could lie down at once, and when at last I joyfully found myself on my way from there to New York, driven by the rain one night from the boiler deck, I found shelter in a 3 x 4 coal closet, and curled myself up to rest on a pile of coal—the hardest bed I ever tried. But to return: taking a river boat at Nashville, we slowly crept up the Cumberland and Ohio, chilled by the increasing cold, till, stopped by the ice, we found a harbor at Carlton, at the mouth of the Kentucky river.

Here occurred one of those scenes of drunken debauchery which three times during these wanderings made me almost ashamed of the human form. We had to sleep in the hold for warmth, and returning from a stolen trip up town, well filled with Kentucky whiskey, in drunken stupor, they covered the floor so we could hardly get about. After marching back from Carlton to Eminence, and taking the cars there for Cincinnati, the soldiers discovered a car-load of whiskey on the train, and when we reached Covington many were too drunk to walk, and others were worse than wild animals. Through the streets of Cincinnati they marched, yelling like savages. I saw a soldier just before me thrust the butt of his rifle through a costly window. The cost of that glass has never gone into the war statistics, neither did the retrograde movement in the temperance cause, or the increase of crime—in their aggregate costing some millions of millions—which came as legitimate results.

Passing on through Ohio and Pennsylvania, we spent most of one night standing in the streets of Pittsburg, and another in Baltimore, where Francis T. King had then in his hands an order for my release, but he did not know that I was there, and I went on to Annapolis, where we waited a week for an ocean steamer. I especially remember our stay there at Camp Parole as a time when I felt the Divine Presence so blessedly near and had the assurance that my Saviour would go with me and help me to the end. And greatly did I feel the need of Divine support. To be constantly surrounded by thousands, among whom you are as a speckled bird, carrying in your bosom views and principles that not another shares with you, condemned by most and barely pitied by the few, with not a word of cheer from one sympathizing friend in all the world, is a test of faith very severe for one young in religious experience.

A steamer ride on the grand old ocean, and then on the cars across the level pine lands of Eastern Carolina, and we were camped at Newbern.

One peculiarity of my situation was, that being with a large number of men who were away from their command, our officers were frequently changed. Finding myself at this time under a new officer—a stern, ironsided captain, who spoke to be obeyed—I sought an opportunity to present my case. He listened to my story impatiently, looked at my certificate, and turning on his heel, remarked, "All I know is you wear the uniform, and I'll arm you or I'll shoot you;" but "God disposes," and I never saw his face again. The next day our straggling command of about five thousand were reorganized. I found myself in one of two companies of unarmed men, who were assigned to what was known as pioneer duty, such as repairing military roads, building breastworks, etc. Marching forward, we found the enemy's lines at Wise's Forks.

Being ordered out to build breastworks, I refused. Our lieutenant in command, a tender hearted young man, would not punish me for my conscientious scruples, which made the lieutenant commanding the other company so angry that he declared that if Lieutenant Bennet would turn me over to him he would make me do duty or tie me down in the water till I drowned. A soldier standing by remarked, addressing me, "I know what's the matter with you: you haven't a heart bigger than that," holding up his thumb.

A few days after this, after an almost sleepless night from a feeling of impending trouble, I was called up very early to find that while most of my company were detailed to put up telegraph poles, I was left with the other company, which was ordered to repair roads in advance of the artillery, as the enemy's lines were falling back and we were to march to Kingston. Here my courage failed, and leaving my own command I went with an armed company containing some men with whom I had become well acquainted. Two days after reaching our next camping place, seeing the pioneers returning to camp from their day's work, cutting ties for the repairing of the railroad, I rejoined them. The lieutenant, seeing me, exclaimed, "Well, Cook, where have you been?" When I told him he said, "Did they drive you off?" "No," said I, "they used me very kindly." "Did you get starved out?" "No," I replied, "I've had plenty to eat." "Well, what did you come back for?" "To see what you are going to do with me."

"Well, this is what I will do with you," said he; "you must cut so many ties a day, or go back, and I will report you to the general as absent without leave." But before he left for his own quarters he turned to me again and asked why I refused to do duty. Rejoicing at the opportunity, which I could not gain before, I told my story and showed my certificate. He seemed impressed, but silently went his way. The next morning he came and asked me if I was willing to stay in camp and watch that no one stole anything while the others were at work. I told him I would be glad to do so.

From this time till I reached the regiment he was my firm, unwavering friend. Not so with some of his men. First they complained that I drew rations, and said if I would not work I should not eat, but the lieutenant told them I had a right to as good rations as any of them, and I should have them. Then one day, when the lieutenant was away, they talked of hanging me up by the thumbs, saying if the lieutenant would not punish me they would; when out of the crowd stepped a fine-looking young man, and, calling attention to himself, said, "I volunteered in the first company that was raised in my part of Ohio, and I have been in the army ever since. I claim to be as old a soldier as there is here, and I came out to fight for liberty, and liberty of conscience, too; and if you want to do anything to this man you have me to fight first." His bold speech hushed the tumult like magic.

Thus my great Protector shielded me, and not a hand was permitted to be laid in anger upon me. This proved to be the last attempt at persecution, though not the end of my sufferings. With Schofield's command we entered Goldsboro some days in advance of Sherman, whose arrival I anxiously awaited, sure that when I reached my regiment I should get letters from home, and that my friends would find a way for my relief, but when it came, though nearly every man who came with me soon received letters, there were none for me. This, added to the long suspense and threatening clouds that hung over me, nearly unbalanced my mind. I imagined my wife and little ones dead and that I should see them no more. But the darkest time was just before the dawn.

Late one evening, as I had left the campfire for the shelter of my tent, and laid down to rest, a voice called out, "Does Cook stay here? Here's a letter for Cook!" I think there was not money enough then in camp to have bought that letter. Down on my knees, by the flickering light of the campfire, I read, as best I could for my tears, the lines recently written by my wife's dear hand. I never have told, and probably never shall tell, the story of that letter without crying, and now, after the lapse of more than thirty-four years, can hardly write for emotion. Soon after this I received an order to go to the hospital at Keokuk, Iowa. A second order for my discharge was received at the regiment soon after I left, but never reached me. I have reason to believe it found the waste basket at the hospital headquarters.

Soon after reaching the hospital, my wife came to visit me. When we met neither could speak; sitting down together with clasped hands, we could but think of all the way the Lord had led us, and praise Him for deliverance.

Let me, in closing, express two thoughts that press my heart:

(1) While I feel that I was very weak in the hour of trial, I found God faithful.

(2) No tongue can tell, nor pen or pencil sketch, the awfulness of war.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

BY AARON M. BRAY.

The liquor traffic exists because there is a demand for liquor for beverage purposes, hence if you do away with the demand you stop the traffic.

Legally the liquor traffic exists because the law permits it; the law exists because of the character of our lawmakers. Therefore, the individual voter is responsible for the liquor traffic.

At the commencement of the Spanish-American war a young man, a Christian, the son of a Christian mother and an honorary member of the W. C. T. U., enlisted in the army and went forth wearing the little bow of white ribbon which is so well known to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. This young man determined to be true to the principles of temperance. He was detailed to attend the bar in the regimental canteen, and for two weeks he was compelled to serve intoxicating liquor. Who was responsible for this? First, the colonel of the regiment; secondly, the President of the United States, who could have abolished all the canteens by an executive order; third, the individual voters who placed him in his position of trust. How can the individual be free from responsibility? By using the ballot as a sacred trust, and asking the question, Can this man be depended upon as one who will be true to the prohibition of the liquor traffic?

No Christian can with safety vote for men who favor the gold standard or bi-metallic standard if they are also in favor of the continuance of the liquor traffic. Education in the matter of the duty of total abstinence should be pressed with all possible vigor. The substitution of coffee and tea houses for the saloon may help, but the evil will continue until the right kind of ballots are placed in the ballot boxes.

Theoretically, the church is in favor of prohibition. Practically, it is almost unanimously in favor of the liquor traffic. When the church registers her sentiments at the ballot box, as she now does by resolutions, there will sweep over this nation such a revival of religion as has not been seen in a generation. God speed the day!

GOD'S LEADINGS.

BY A. H. HUSSEY.

"I am the Lord thy God, which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldst go," Isa. 48: 17. "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye," Ps. 32: 8. "There are but few Christians who have not made the mistake of supposing that one direction from God to act, in a certain way, is necessarily the right way to act always under similar conditions. Whereas, God is ever guarding us against systematizing His leadings, because a system in the matter of guidance would lead us to independence of God as soon as we learned His rules. All God's dealings with us in grace tend to get us away from rules and systems, and deal with us immediately at all times." "The Lord shall guide thee continually," Isa. 58: 11. In proof of this we only need to read the Bible, and notice the lives of God's people, to see the grievous mistakes and painful failures they have made in this way. And see the condition of the Church to-day and in days past: bigotry, intolerance and ecclesiastical rules and customs govern almost universally; so that the Spirit's leadings have but little place in any person or church.

A. T. Pearson says, "The greatest hindrance to the work of the Holy Spirit is the church organizations and plans, and all are guilty. The Holy Spirit will not work according to plan or rule of churches or men. Ecclesiastical bigotry interrupts spiritual harmony and unity." Rev. F. Chappell, of Boston, gives a suggestion as to why God should vary His leading in work and worship. He says, "In proportion as things or practices grow old, they grow away from spirituality." This may in part account for much of the cold, formal, lifeless worship and preaching and the little power manifested to draw souls to Christ for salvation. There is often a lack of ability in fighting God's battles for souls, because the enemy knows our plan of attack or mode of warfare, and is fortified against it; when if we had some new mode, given by God, as He used to do when His people fought their enemies of old, we might always be victorious. We see that at one time rams' horns were used; another time, pitchers and lamps; then singing; also, the sword; then by ambushment and going in the tops of mulberry trees. Never two battles fought the same way to be successful. Let us learn a lesson from this, and see to it that God is leading us continually in every service, and not be surprised if it is in a new and different way without a precedent.

Mount Pleasant, Ohio.

In "The Missionary Review" for August the editor-in-chief, Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., has an opening article on the "World's Missionary Conference of 1900" in which he says: "One of the grandest gatherings of the age is already convoked for the closing year of this century in the metropolis of the Western world, a notable conference of Christian workers from all parts of the earth, such as has never been seen before on a scale of like magnitude. This ecumenical council on foreign missions, which is to convene in the city of New York for twelve days, beginning Fourth month 21st, will in many respects have had no rival in all church councils, for its main features are unique. It will not only be of intense interest to every denomination of disciples and to every society of missions throughout Christendom, but it will be composed of representatives 'from every nation under heaven,' and its constituency will, therefore, span the oceans and link the continents. Protestant missions from sunrise to sunset, and from equator to poles, will send delegates. No other council of the church has had equal importance, perhaps, since that of Nice, in 325 A.D."

The Book of Psalms or Psalter is a collection of sacred poems written at different times and under various circumstances. There is, perhaps, a thousand years between the time of the composition of the earliest Psalm and that of the latest. The authors are in some cases given, and in some cases no author is named. It should be remembered that the titles must not be considered as part of the text, and that sometimes there appears to be no doubt that the titles are incorrect.

In the Revised Version the Psalms are divided into five books, which end respectively with Psalms 41, 72, 89, 106, 150. To each of these books there is a doxology, such as "Praise ye the Lord," or "Amen and amen." The Psalms were the hymn book of the Jews, and were used very much as collections of hymns are to-day. The use of titles was also similar.

David's Psalms were spoken of just as we speak of "Ripon's Hymns," or "Moody and Sankey's Hymns," meaning David's collection of Psalms, in which some might be by David, but not necessarily all. This fact explains the title a "Psalm of David" prefixed to Psalms which internal evidence shows could not have been written by David.

Psalm 122, which constitutes the lesson, forms the third of a group of fifteen Psalms known by various names. In the authorized version they are termed "Songs of Degrees," and in the Revised Version "Songs of Ascents." They are also called "Pilgrim Psalms," "Songs of the Upgoings," "The Travelers' Hymnbook," etc. It is not known positively what the title does mean. The most widely accepted opinion is, that they were intended for pilgrims going up to Jerusalem. Others believe that some, if not all, were composed or selected, about the time of the return from the Babylonish captivity, for the use of the two hundred singers who went along with the procession. As a whole, the collection does not seem applicable to returning captives, and particularly Psalm 122; but others are remarkably appropriate. Possibly the collection contains Psalms of each character.

The Psalms appeal to all hearts, because they appeal to those emotions which are in every breast. They express the longings, the hopes, the fears, the prayers of every heart. No portion of the Old Testament is so familiar.

1. "I was glad." True religion always begets joy.

"Let us go." This is the right kind of an invitation. "Come with us" is better than "go." The true believer desires that others should share with him the blessings which are his. "House of the Lord." Here, the Temple, which was the symbol of the Lord's presence and where He was to be worshiped.

2. "Our feet shall stand." "Our feet are standing." Revised Version. The singer represents himself as already within the holy city.

3. "That is compact." The meaning is not very clear. It may be that the writer wishes to emphasize the difference between the country and the city; or it may be to declare that Jerusalem is a city well built and well fortified against an enemy.

4. "Whither the tribes go up," etc. This would seem to indicate a pilgrim-like character for the Psalms. The words could hardly have been used of the return from the captivity. Compare Deut. 16: 16. "Unto the testimony of Israel." Better as in Revised Version. "For a testimony unto Israel." "To give thanks." Thanksgiving is essential for spiritual health and joy. Recognizing the source from which all blessings flow brings the soul into a condition in which more blessings can be appropriated. Compare Phil. 4: 6, 7.

5. "For there are set thrones." Jerusalem was at once the civil and religious capital of the nation. "Judgment." Justice is part of the economy of the city of God. Righteousness is in one place applied to the gates of the city. To the Jew the ideal Jerusalem was the place where justice and righteousness should reign. Jer. 22: 2, 3. "Thrones of the house of David." David's successors.

6. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem." That which the Psalmist desires can only come from the Lord. The Hebrew word for peace is shalom; it is the "sallem" in the name of the city, which as a whole means "city of peace." It is as much as to say "pray for peace in the city of peace—let the name be a reality. "They shall prosper that love thee." Those who truly love Jerusalem will love that for which the true Jerusalem stands, and, as a result, will know what true prosperity is.

7. "Peace be within thy walls," etc. Let all those who dwell within the walls know what this true peace is and experience the true prosperity. "Thy palaces." Here, probably, not so much the Kings's dwellings as the homes of the people.

8. "For my brethren and companions' sakes." He was not selfish in His desires and prayers.

9. "Because of the house of the Lord." Better as in Revised Version, "For the sake of the house of the Lord." The Temple, as representing the presence of the Lord—hence for the sake of the Lord in remembrance of what He has done for us, of what He is. "I will seek thy good." The good of the city—Jerusalem.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Rejoice in the Lord."
2. "Be ye thankful."
3. "Bear ye one another's burdens."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH FIRST, 1899.

OUR OWN CHURCH: WHAT CAN WE DO FOR HER?

Psalm 122: 1-9.

(A meeting to discuss denominational work.)

Second-day, Ninth mo. 25.—Christ and the Church. Eph. 5: 22-27.
Third-day, Ninth mo. 26.—The Head of the Church. Col. 1: 12-20.
Fourth-day, Ninth mo. 27.—One body, many members. 1 Cor. 12: 12-28.
Fifth-day, Ninth mo. 28.—The Church at work. Acts 2: 37-47; 13: 1-3.
Sixth-day, Ninth mo. 29.—The Church militant. Matt. 24: 3-14.
Seventh-day, Ninth mo. 30.—The Church triumphant. Isa. 60: 14-22.

It is always worth while to remember that "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." If He could do that with His perfect knowledge of all its weaknesses, then we shall do well to love it and to give ourselves for it. It was not an ideal church that He loved; it was an actual church, just as we find it now in the world.

It is a thousand times easier to find fault, to pick flaws, than it is to set our eyes upon Christ and to press forward toward the mark of the life perfected in love. Pharisaism is natural to men. Sincere, patient, cheery, hopeful service comes only from the spirit of Christ. First of all these, we can learn to love the church. It is doubtless true that many young people do not at first learn to love all the doctrines or methods of the church to which they belong. Some of them lie beyond us as yet, and time will be required for us to come to the understanding of them. But I give it as my thorough conviction, after an experience of many years, that it is best for us to love and thoroughly give ourselves to the truth we do see and understand, and keep out of contentions about matters not yet clear to us.

We can do much for the church by a hearty co-operation with her regular methods of benevolent, educational and missionary enterprise. Something new, something independent, something originated and carried on by some one man in whom we have come to have confidence, appeals strongly to a certain class of people, and leads them to forsake regular church activities for these more striking methods. But it would not be difficult to show how one after another of these new departures have come to grief, either through the lack of ability of the leader, or the incorporation of some principle of action inconsistent with permanent success—not to say, also, sometimes through absolute fraud and dishonesty. Christian Endeavor stands always for faith in the church and loyalty to its regular work, and no Endeavor Society or Endeavorer is loyal that runs off on tangents.

We can do much for our own church by loyalty to its educational institutions. Hundreds of our young people have just chosen their colleges for the coming year. I do not hesitate to say that even at larger expense and a possible poorer equipment the denominational college is the best for them. It is best because it stands for moral and spiritual training, as well as literary and scientific. The most receptive and character-building age of youth needs the formative influence of a Christian college to make life of highest value. A secular institution is one-sided; only the institution pledged to moral and spiritual, as well as literary and scientific culture, is truly broad. Progressive scientific thought needs co-relation to moral and spiritual truth, and a Christian college stands for that co-relation.

We can do much, very much, for the church, locally, where we attend and with which we are identified in membership by a hearty co-operation in all its work and public services. Learn to think of yourselves as a part of it. Avoid that absolutely pernicious habit of speaking of the church as "they." Speak of it always as "we." Learn to appreciate the value of regular services. No Christian life is well balanced that depends chiefly on the emotional, the specially enthusiastic or the unusual in church service. Learn to make the most of your regular service. Fifty-two prayer meetings in a year faithfully attended and rightly improved will count for more in your religious life than any ten days of special meetings. Then learn as well to faithfully co-operate with evangelistic services. It is a sign of a small mind to narrow the scope of your religious activities. Here may come opportunities for special enlargement of your own spiritual life and for winning souls to Christ. Beware of the critical attitude in any department of church life. Love may not be blind, but it is never critical or captious.

We shall love our church more as we know more of its history, of its work, of its purpose, and of its message for the world. That it may have made failures must not be allowed to blind us to the truth about its successes. Study then its history, its great men and women; learn the truth it stands for; know about the work it is doing in the world to-day. Do not use any of this knowledge as a basis for boasting over others, but only as an incentive to faithfulness in your own work.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Friends of Peace:

The war goes on. "The ear is pained, the soul is sick with every day's report." The youth of our own country are falling by thousands—falling in battle, falling through the agonizing ordeal of fevers and wounds and wasting diseases, falling through the dire demoralization always attendant upon army life; and if press reports are to be trusted a four-fold destruction is depleting the islands into which we have carried the war.

We deplore all this, but are we doing all we might do to hasten the coming of a better condition of affairs? We have the right of petition and of protest. Right implies responsibility.

Ought there not to go out from every one of our assemblies—our weekly, monthly and yearly meetings—to the President of the United States and his associated executives, an earnest plea for the cessation of this cruel and most uncalled for war. Individual letters, also, should be sent, but sent in great quantities. Why not invite congregations to agree upon a certain day, or within a certain week, to write personal letters imploring peace. A dozen or two would perhaps be little heeded, but a dozen or two thousand might make an impression, and every one sent helps to make the thousands.

We know that our President was most reluctant to initiate this deplorable contest. Perhaps if Christian citizens had stood by him in such numbers as they should, saying, "Let us be patient; let us overcome evil with good; 'let us have peace,'" he might have been strengthened in the position he desired to hold, and not have been urged into belligerent measures.

We did not precipitate the war, but are we sure that we do not, in our silence and apathy, permit its continuance? And is not our Lord saying to us now as truly as He did to Solomon in olden time, "Ask what I shall give thee?"

And shall we not ask first of Him the wisdom and the courage that we so much need, and then ask of "the powers that be" that hasty steps be taken for the ending of this strife? It is a solemn consideration. Let us give it the attention its importance demands.

News from the Field.

William J. Harrison, who has acted as Clerk of Ohio Yearly Meeting for nearly twenty years, was released from that service this year at his own request. W. M. Perry, of Damascus, was chosen for the place.

The bequest of $100,000 left by John G. Lane to New York Yearly Meeting for educational purposes, is subject to a government war tax of ten per cent., which means that $10,000 of the bequest go into the United States Treasury.

On Fifth-day, the 7th inst., when Philadelphia was full of visitors to the reunion of veterans of the Civil War, a considerable number of strangers attended the Friends' Meeting at Fourth and Arch Streets. On the afternoon of that day and on Sixth-day about one thousand, it was thought, visited the grounds attached to the meeting house.

The "Y— Almanac" for 1900 is now ready. It is edited by our Friend, Frances J. Barnes, of New York city. It is a very attractive booklet, and contains much valuable matter. It is sold for the benefit of the Clara Parrish and World's Y Fund. Price, 25 cents. To be had of Frances B. Yarnall, 1011 Park Avenue, New York city.

We clip the following item from one of our Roman Catholic exchanges: "Our esteemed contemporary, THE AMERICAN FRIEND, may not, and probably did not, have in mind a Catholic community when, in the course of an editorial upon Rev. Mr. Cooke's article on the decline of religion in Protestant circles, it said: 'Go into a community, on the other hand, where the churches have a vital message, and where their members are full of present and expectant faith, and you will find that the whole neighborhood is leavened by such churches. The most irreligious man in the place is forced to believe that there is a force in religion which he himself has not.' That is a very fair non-Catholic description, however, of the religious condition of a Catholic community."

Here is one among the many kind expressions of appreciation which we have recently received: "I feel as though I want to give my appreciation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. I do not see how any one that is interested in the work of the church, as he should be, can do without it. I like the paper throughout. I very much enjoy the editorials. May the Lord bless you in the work."

We have received the following letter from E. J. Rees, of Johannesburg, South Africa:

"Johannesburg, S. A. R.

"Rufus M. Jones.

"Dear Friend:—We have been greatly surprised to learn, from a clipping taken from THE AMERICAN FRIEND, that there are about fifty Friends in South Africa, and that the establishment of a meeting in this city was under contemplation. We are inclined to think there is a mistake somewhere, as we have no knowledge of any such intention. Neither do we think there are so many as fifty Friends in this part of Africa who could be relied on to walk according to the doctrines that Friends teach.

"Certainly there is not material here in the city of Johannesburg for the establishment of a meeting for worship according to the principles of Friends. When Brother Roberts, together with myself and wife, reached here in the first days of May, three months ago, we learned presently that there were two who were nominally Friends, having been brought up in homes where Friends' principles governed. Besides these, we found one, and one only, who could really with justice to Friends be called a Friend. There was then at the time mentioned, including our party, a total of six Friends of all kinds in this modern Babylon. Since that time the only active Friend here at the time of our arrival has gone home to England, seven thousand miles distant. Brother Roberts is at present at Springs, thirty-six miles away. One of the nominal Friends has also left the city. To sum up: There is at this time in this city only myself and wife and a man whose parents were Friends.

"Suppose there were fifty Friends in all South Africa. It will give you an idea of the situation if you imagine that there were only fifty Friends in America, and these were scattered over the area of the United States east of the Mississippi River. Now, if you will take out of the States mentioned about nineteen-twentieths of the railroads, you will arrive at the situation in which fifty Friends in South Africa would find themselves in the matter of establishing a meeting.

"We do not know who is responsible for this information, but we certainly think that the information is not reliable. Indeed, we have found that most of the information in America concerning this part of the world is very unreliable. Many things that we accepted without question before we left America had to be given up as unreliable when we reached this part. It is our purpose when better acquainted with the state of things here to make some effort to give information along certain lines that concern the work that lies near our hearts in leaving our homes for this distant and in many respects inhospitable land."

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Paris, Canada.—A meritorious work ended. The Gospel Canvas Tabernacle Meetings, which have been conducted for the past three weeks by Evangelists Noah C. McLean and wife, Cora E. McLean, who are laboring under the auspices of the National Evangelistic Association of Christian Workers or Friends of Jesus, closed a few days since. These services have been a great spiritual uplift to our town. The faithful preaching against sin, together with Cora McLean's singing, have accomplished wonders.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Danville Quarterly Meeting was held at Mill Creek, Hendricks County, Ind., the 2d and 3d of Ninth month. We were favored with the presence of John Henry Douglas, who was present during all the sessions of the quarterly meeting. His preaching at the Meeting of Ministers and Elders was peculiarly appropriate and full of deep spiritual instruction. His services again in the quarterly meeting on Seventh-day were evidently under the direction of the Holy Spirit, and the meeting was brought into much tenderness of spirit, and many testified to God's goodness and to blessings received.

On First-day morning there was a full house, notwithstanding the excessive heat and dust. Our dear Brother J. H. Douglas was again enabled to preach Christ as a complete deliverer from sin. We feel that our quarterly meeting has been greatly blessed by the coming of our brother.

A very interesting meeting, First-day afternoon, was held in the interest of home missions and temperance work.

NEREUS M. HODGIN.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

San Jose, California.—Last Seventh and First days were given to special meetings on the subjects of peace and missions. Although the attendance was not large, we are assured by the many kind words and expressions that much good was done.

At the peace session Prof. Augustus T. Murray gave the principal address, on "The Present Outlook for Peace." He said that, although the nations were so well equipped and though there never were such formidable guns, warships and engines of destruction, no nation, from an economic standpoint, could afford or would dare to go to war; and yet he felt that there was a higher reason—the moral sentiment was getting to be such that a great war was improbable. He believed that the Conference at The Hague not only was a great success, accomplishing more than the most sanguine might have hoped, but was a fit omen of what may be accomplished.

Levi Gregory read a paper on "Armament a Challenge for War," citing that if one man carries arms others will claim the need of self-protection and arm to meet the foe. Then on the smallest insult—perhaps all imaginary, lest the others should shoot first—quick shots are fired and one or more are hurried into eternity.

Two sessions were given the subject of missions. R. Esther Smith, of the Yearly Meeting Board of Missions and superintendent of the Silent Workers' Mission Work, in San Francisco, was the principal speaker and rendered excellent service. Her paper on "Personal Responsibilities and Missions" was full of suggestions and encouragements. She said that each one could do something for others—not only for those about us, but to those in foreign lands. If we could not go we could send. The condition of the workers and work at Kotzebue Sound was given, and subscriptions for the course were taken. An interesting letter from I. H. Cammack, president of the Board, was read. Appropriate selections were given by May Humphrey, Sylvia and Lida Gregory. The meetings for worship were seasons of blessing, R. Esther Smith being much favored in the ministry. Some present had never heard a woman preach the Gospel. We feel that much good seed was sown.

Late word from Stoney Ford, Colusa County, shows that our workers there are faithfully bearing the news of life and salvation to those around them. Alonzo Feeler recently went to a summer resort up in the mountains, sixteen miles from Stoney Ford. The Gospel had never been preached there. The only place for a public gathering was a dance platform. There he obtained privilege to preach early Seventh-day evening, although a dance was planned to follow the meeting. The Lord so blessed the service and hearts were tendered so that no dance was held that night. The service on First-day was also owned of the Lord, so that two persons claiming to be Christians asked for prayer that they might have a deeper, better experience, and another, the fiddler, asked for prayer that he might become a Christian.

There are many open doors about us, and the laborers are so few. If the Master calls to this field will you "go or send?" We feel that the Lord is blessing our work here.

LEVI GREGORY.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

F. J. Harris, a worker from Indiana, has been visiting meetings and families in the limits of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and expects to attend the approaching yearly meeting.

The Friends at Hugoton, Kansas, are endeavoring to raise funds to pay for the meeting house belonging to La Fayette Monthly Meeting. Remittances should be sent to Anna L. Hockett, Cor., Hugoton, Kansas.

Leavenworth, Kansas.—About one year ago I wrote telling of our meeting here, and now I feel like calling attention to it again. The Lord has wonderfully prospered us, and under the labors of our dear pastor, Susie Fox, and through the great power of the Holy Ghost, we have increased in numbers and Christian love until it seems to me, as I look around me, we are like the disciples of old—all of one accord, in one place. We are united. Everyone is willing to do his part, each one esteeming others better than himself, in honor preferring one another. Our meeting for worship is well and regularly attended, as is also our week-day prayer meeting, the Spirit manifesting itself in songs, prayers and warm, glowing testimonies.

On the last Seventh-day in Eighth month seven of our number drove fifteen miles to attend our quarterly meeting, held at Springdale, Kansas. Although the weather was rainy and bad, there was a good attendance, and the Lord gave us a great spiritual feast. We all stayed and held services that night, and although it threatened rain the meeting was well attended and great interest manifested, the Lord richly blessing many that were there. After meeting we drove home, passing through a very severe storm, arriving home at 2 o'clock a.m.

Among the business transacted was a minute given Calvin Kesinger and his wife, Mary M. Kesinger, members of our meeting here, liberating them to visit places of biblical interest in Palestine, returning via Isle of Patmos, Smyrna and London Yearly Meeting. At our request the quarterly meeting adjourned to meet here at Leavenworth Eleventh month next, and if we are worthy we expect to have a quarterly meeting set up here.

Now, in closing, I wish to say to Friends who are looking for new locations, or a place to work in God's vineyard, that you would do well to visit us.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Tennyson Lewis, who has been faithfully engaged in pastoral work at Anderson, Indiana, is undergoing a severe trial in the prolonged illness of his wife.

Chester, Indiana.—Simpson Hinshaw, a minister of the Gospel, from Winchester, Ind., delivered a series of lectures on the Bible, Temperance, History and Astronomy, at Chester, on the evenings of Ninth month 1st and 2d. These lectures were interesting and instructive, and were made more impressive by the beautiful illustrations which he gave with the stereopticon, those on the Bible being especially fine. We cannot estimate the amount of good done by the lectures. They were given under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society. A small admission fee was charged, the Christian Endeavor Society receiving a share of the profits. Quite a nice sum was realized, which was used for the spread of Christ's kingdom through the Christian Endeavor work.

We would recommend Brother Hinshaw's lectures to all Endeavorers as something that will be interesting and beneficial to all classes of people.

E. K.

Anderson, Indiana.—The meeting at Anderson is doing good work, increasing in membership and interest. The First-day meetings are most blessed times with the felt presence of the dear Master. The meeting has unanimously called Tennyson Lewis, who has been laboring with them as pastor the last year, to remain another year, and great harmony and love exists between the church and pastor at that place.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE ITEMS.

Knightstown, Indiana.—A unique and interesting pamphlet, entitled "Reflex Influence of Missionary Effort," comes from the pen of Rev. J. H. Bombarger, D.D. It is well worth the price asked for it—five cents.

The reports of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union Conference, held at Marion, Indiana, last May, are ready for distribution. Each auxiliary is entitled to one free on receipt of postage—two cents. They are for sale to individuals at seven cents each.

The Superintendents of Proportionate and Systematic Giving and Literature of the Women's Foreign Missionary Union have prepared a new and enlarged edition of the "Catalogue of Literature on Christian Beneficence." They can be had for four cents each. The above may all be ordered of Flora P. Mills, Knightstown, Ind.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

Southern Quarter.—Marlboro Monthly Meeting was held on Eighth month 5th. We had the acceptable company of Amos Davis, of Iowa. His preaching was unto three classes—Christians, Elders and the Church as a whole, and the Church was shown its needs from the Gospel standpoint. Southern Quarterly Meeting was held at Marlboro on the 25th, 26th and 27th of Eighth month. Edward W. Hughes and wife, of Ohio, and Mary M. Hobbs, of Guilford College, were in attendance, beside a large number of our own members from the other monthly meetings. On Seventh-day E. W. Hughes preached a searching Gospel sermon to the church. Mary M. Hobbs read an excellent paper on "Education," also a paper from the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight. First-day a large crowd were on the grounds. E. W. Hughes preached from a wagon, his text being "He Saved Others; Himself He Cannot Save." The crowd drew near and were most attentive and quiet. Several hymns were sung. E. W. Hughes offered prayer first.

Elwood Cox led the meeting in the house. After a basket dinner we had a mass quarterly temperance meeting, which was entertained with home talent in recitations, etc., and addressed by Mary M. Hobbs and Edward W. Hughes, who each spoke very forcibly of this great evil and legalized sin of our nation.

LILLIAS MARRIAGE LOWE.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Greensboro, Ninth month 9th. Mead A. Kelsey, minister of Deep River Quarter, at High Point, led in prayer. A member at Greensboro sang a few lines of a hymn and expressed appropriate words along the line of the hymn. He was followed at once by Mead A. Kelsey, in a similar vein, by an excellent sermon of much power and acceptability. He was followed by Thomas E. Anderson, a minister from High Point, in a few brief remarks. Sarah W. Newlin, minister, with minute from Maine, was in acceptable attendance. Since our yearly meeting she has been some among Friends and their meetings in the mountain section. During the meeting for worship half of those present made some vocal utterance in ministry, prayer, song or testimony.

The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight convened at 10 o'clock a.m.; the meeting for worship at 11 o'clock; after that an intermission, during which Greensboro Friends furnished refreshments for all; and at 1.30 o'clock the meeting for business convened.

Aside from the usual business incident to the first meeting after yearly meeting there was nothing, except that of the committee from the yearly meeting to visit different, and, in fact, all parts of the yearly meeting, especially the newer meetings, to hold conferences or meetings with the monthly meetings to continue from day to day as seems best for the purpose of presenting the principles and practices of Friends with such other religious service as way opens for. The clerks of the monthly meetings were appointed to co-operate with the yearly meeting's committee in arranging the time of the monthly meetings, so as to meet the convenience of the committee in going from place to place.

The five ministers of the quarter, with five visiting ministers, were in attendance.

Mary E. Cartland, a minister, has had her membership transferred from High Point to Greensboro, and James R. Jones, a minister, has requested his membership transferred from Greensboro to New Garden Monthly Meeting at Guilford College. The change in both cases is in consequence of change of residence. The united testimony in the quarterly meeting and outside of it is that the meeting was an unusually favored one by the presence and power of the Spirit, the liberty in the love of the Gospel—a typical Friends' meeting.

Calvin Osborn and Eliza H., his wife, who have been superintendent and matron of Friends' Orphanage of North Carolina Yearly Meeting for the last four and a half years, have resigned. Their labors have been very much appreciated.

HELEN KELLER'S TRIUMPH.

Surely no other human being has ever encountered so many and great obstacles in acquiring an education as Helen Keller. The hardships of students combating poverty or delicate health, or compelled to receive instruction in a foreign tongue, are as nothing compared with Miss Keller's handicaps in taking her examinations preparatory to entering Radcliffe College this fall. No particle of their severity was abated for her. Indeed, on the contrary, they were made unintentionally difficult. To sit in total darkness and silence, with no idea of the time, with no touch of a friendly hand,—for neither Miss Sullivan, her constant companion, nor her master, Mr. Keith, was allowed to communicate the questions to her,—these were sufficiently difficult conditions. But her labor was unnecessarily increased by the college authorities. They had the examination papers written out in Braille characters by a man who had never seen Helen, and who, it was discovered too late, used a different system of writing for the blind from that to which she was accustomed. Helen Keller did not hesitate or draw back even at this, but puzzled out the unfamiliar, punctured points as best she could, and wrote her answers on her typewriter, passing triumphantly in every study, even "with credit" in some. Her intellectual achievement is, however, almost overshadowed by the girl's indomitable moral courage in surmounting difficulties. Does she not put to shame every slothful and easily disheartened soul?—"Congregationalist."

WELL FED, WELL BRED.

Proper Food Makes Brainy Men and Beautiful Women.

To know just what to eat is a problem for many people who find their strength and health not keeping up to a proper stage. From food we must expect our bodily nourishment and not from drugs. True, a physician's care is required at times, but the true physician will always seek to put his patient on properly selected food and drink.

A food expert has discovered Grape-Nuts by experimenting on the treatment of grains to artificially pre-digest the starches (the principal part). Grape-Nuts as now made by the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., of Battle Creek, Mich., and sold by grocers generally, is a delicious dainty, suitable particularly for the brain worker, as it quickly supplies the parts of food the body needs to supply the daily loss produced by brain work. Unless the right food be furnished and properly digested, the individual discovers a gradual failing and some form of disease sets up.

Users of Grape-Nuts discover that they assist in the digestion of cream and other food, and that a "well fed feeling" follows their use.

STOOD HIS GROUND.

"Can you hollowgrind this razor?" asked a customer who had stepped into a razor-grinding establishment presided over by a hard-headed man with bristling hair and an aggressive look on his face.

"You want me to hollowground it, I suppose?" he said.

"No, sir," rejoined the other. "I want you to hollowgrind it."

"If it's ground hollow ain't it hollow-ground, sir?"

"If you grind it hollow don't you hollowgrind it, sir?"

"Do you think you can come in here and teach me anything about my business? I've been hollowgrounding razors for twenty-five years—"

"No, you haven't. You've been hollow-grinding them."

"Do you reckon I don't know what I do for a living?"

"I don't care whether you do or not. Will you hollowgrind this razor?"

"No, sir, I won't! I'll hollowground it or I won't touch it."

The customer reflected a moment.

"See here, my friend," he said. "Can I have it ground hollow here?"

"Certainly."

And they compromised on that basis, each feeling that he was a little ahead.—"Youth's Companion."

HOW KIPLING BECAME A PROHIBITIONIST.

Rudyard Kipling tells how in an American concert-hall he saw two girls made drunk by their companions. Kipling had not been a total abstainer, but of that scene he wrote:

"Then, recanting previous opinions, I became a Prohibitionist. Better it is that a man should go without his beer in public places, and content himself with swearing at the narrow-mindedness of the majority; better it is to poison the inside with very vile temperance drinks, and to buy lager furtively at back doors, than to bring temptation to the lips of young fools such as the four I have seen. I understand now why the preachers rage against drink. I have said, 'there is no harm in it, taken moderately,' and yet my own demand for beer helped directly to send these two girls reeling to God alone knows what end. It is not good that we should let liquor lie before the eyes of children, and I have been a fool in writing to the contrary."

WITH GOOD INTENTIONS.

Bernard Smith gives the following illustration of the importance of tact:

"It is of no use to us, whether Sunday school teachers or preachers, to imagine that we are thoroughly equipped if only we mean very well. Years ago I read in an Americanized Æsop of an old elephant who accidentally trod on a partridge, with fatal results. The tears came into her eyes at the sight of the motherless brood of fledgelings close by. 'Poor orphans,' quoth she, 'and I am a mother myself—I who have slain their mother. But they shall not perish. I will take the mother's place and sit on them!'"

The elephant had the best of intentions, but she displayed a deplorable want of tact.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXCELLENT SERVICE TO POINTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY, the chief as well as the popular artery of travel between Philadelphia and Washington, and all points South and Southwest, maintains a superb service of magnificently equipped trains, which leave Philadelphia daily at 7.20 a.m., 5.34 p.m., and 6.55 p.m., reaching, without change, all the chief Southern cities.

The Washington and Southwestern Vestibule Limited, which has long been famous as one of the handsomest trains in America, now has an added feature of attraction in the form of a beautiful Library and Observation car. This will be very much appreciated by the travelling public, as it affords an opportunity of viewing, under the most favorable circumstances, the charming sub-scenery of the historic Piedmont region, as well as the uplands of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The car is for the use of all passengers holding Pullman tickets on the train, and is handsomely furnished with easy, richly-upholstered, movable chairs. It also has a wide, fully-covered extension platform at the rear, capable of accommodating quite a large number of people, who may prefer to travel in the open air and enjoy the unobstructed view of the whirling panorama.

The Washington and Southwestern Limited leaves Philadelphia at 6.55 p.m., daily, and is composed of Pullman Drawing-Room

Sleeping Cars, to Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Memphis, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, La. In addition to these it carries one first-class thoroughfare coach, as well as a well-appointed Dining-Car, in which meals are served between Philadelphia and New Orleans. In this connection it is worthy of note that the Southern Railway is the only railroad in the South operating a system of dining-cars, and the menu and meals upon them are maintained at the highest standard.

The Washington and Chattanooga Limited of the Southern Railway, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., is another handsome train. It carries through Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans, La., via Lynchburg, Va., and Bristol, Tenn. Combined Café, Parlor and Observation Cars are operated between Radford, Va., and Attalla, Ala. Meals are served in the Café Compartment at all hours on the European plan. Luxurious chairs in the Parlor Compartments are available for passengers at a moderate charge, the observation portion of car affording a most comfortable location for viewing this magnificent scenery. Passengers occupying Pullman cars have use of this car without extra charge.

The New York and Florida Express, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., carries Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., via Charlotte, N. C. Connections are made at Columbia, S. C., with the Charleston Division for Charleston, S. C., and at Trenton Junction for Aiken, S. C.

The United States Fast Mail of the Southern Railway, leaving Washington, D. C., daily, at 11.15 a.m., connecting with train leaving Philadelphia at 7.20 a.m., is one of the most popular trains operated in the South. This is composed of thoroughfare coaches and Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars between Washington, D. C., and New Orleans, La., Jacksonville, Fla., Charlotte, N. C., Augusta, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., with Pullman Sleeping Cars between Salisbury, N. C., and Memphis, Tenn., and Dining-Car between Washington, D. C., and Spartanburg, S. C. Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will be pleased to furnish rates, time-tables, and any further information.

FRENCHMEN'S LOGIC.

To illustrate the assumption that a Frenchman reasons very differently from an Anglo-Saxon, the following story of an incident in the streets of Paris is told by a contributor to the New York "Tribune":

"I was riding one day in the Bois de Boulogne, when there was a tremendous disturbance just ahead of my carriage, and I saw two thoroughly angry tourists standing in the street, rubbing their heads and denouncing somebody in language which presently proved them to be Americans. Two empty cabs were standing near, the drivers of which were hurling objurations at each other.

"My driver stopped to take his part in the excitement. I succeeded in getting him to go on after a while, but not until he had found out what it was all about. I asked him what the trouble was.

"Why, you see, monsieur," he said, "Gaspard ran into Pierre's cab and scraped some of the paint from the wheel. Pierre was angry and swore at Gaspard, whereupon Gaspard said:

"If you don't keep still I will hit your customer on the head with my whip!"

"Pierre answered:

"If you hit my customer, I'll hit your customer!"

"Then Gaspard hit Pierre's customer a sharp rap on the head, and Pierre resented the insult by hitting Gaspard's customer as hard a blow as he could!"

"And it did not strike the assembled Frenchmen that this was anything else than a fair retaliation."

QUAINT TITLES.

The following are some of the curious titles of old English books:

1. "A Most Delectable Sweet Perfumed Nosegay for God's Saints to Smell at."

2. "Biscuit Baked in the Oven of Charity, carefully conserved for the Chickens of the Church, the Sparrows of the Spirit, and the Sweet Swallows of Salvation."

3. "A Sigh of Sorrow for the Sinners of Zion breathed out of a Hole in the Wall of an Earthly Vessel known among men by the name of Samuel Fish" (a Quaker who had been imprisoned).

4. "Eggs of Charity Layed for the Chickens of the Covenant and Boiled with the Water of Divine Love. Take ye out and eat."

5. "Seven Sobs of a Sorrowful Soul for Sin."

6. "The Spiritual Mustard-Pot to Make the Soul Sneeze with Devotion."

Most of these were published in the time of Cromwell.

POLLY AT THE TELEPHONE.

The peculiar charm of parrots is that when they do mischief it is generally amusing mischief, something that yields a good story. Probably the druggist who figures in a Chicago "News" anecdote is even prouder of his pet than he was before the pet alienated a customer.

The parrot is large and green, alert to hear, and prompt to prove that he remembers. His cage hangs near the telephone, with the result that Polly has become quite proficient in "telephone talk," and furnishes much amusement to customers who have time to stop and listen.

The other day a stylishly dressed young woman came rustling into the store and asked permission to use the 'phone. The druggist pointed to the rear of the store, and she started in that direction. The store was rather dark, and when she heard some one apparently talking into the receiver, she seated herself to wait.

"Hello, central—hello, hello—yes, give me four-double-eight express. Yes, hello; who is that? Oh, yes; what? yes; hello; I say; no, I didn't get that; is that so; well, good-by; ring off; hello, central; hello, hello; give me—" and so on, and so on, through several repetitions.

Then the young woman rose and advanced with a stately air to the clerk, and asked if he thought "that person" intended to use the telephone all day.

"Why, that's only the parrot. He—"

But the front door had slammed before he could finish his sentence.

THE OLD HOME HAUNTS.

There's a sound that rings in my ears to-day,

That echoes in vague refrain,

The ripple of water o'er smooth-washed clay,

Where the wall-eyed pike and the black bass play,

That makes me yearn, in a quiet way,

For my old fly-rod again.

I wish I could wade by the water's edge,

Where the fallen leaves drift by;

Just to see, in the shadow of the ledge,

How dark forms glide, like a woodman's wedge,

Through driftwood piles and the coarse marsh sedge,

And to hear the bittern cry.

I'm longing to paddle the boat to-day,

Through water-logged grass and reeds;

Where the musk-rat swims, and the cat tails sway;

Where the air is cool, and the mist is gray;

Where ripples dance in the same old way,

Under the tangled weeds.

Oh, it's just like this on each misty day,

It's always the same old pain

That struggles and pulls in the same old way,

To carry me off for a little stay

By the water's edge, in sticky clay,

To fish in the falling rain.

GETTYSBURG, LURAY, WASHING- TON.

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

Over the battlefield of Gettysburg, through the picturesque Blue Mountains, via Hagerstown and Antietam, and down the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley to the unique Caverns of Luray; thence across the rolling hills of Northern Virginia to Washington, is the route of this tour—a section of the country intensely interesting from both a historic and a scenic standpoint.

The tour will leave New York 7.00 a.m., and Philadelphia 12.20 p.m., Saturday, September 16th, in charge of one of the company's tourist agents, and will cover a period of five days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the trip throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $25 from New York, $24 from Trenton, $22 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For itineraries and full information apply to ticket agents, Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

NATIONAL EXPORT EXPOSITION, PHILADELPHIA.

Reduced Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The National Export Exposition, which opens at Philadelphia on September 14th, and continues until November 30th, will be the most interesting and important event occurring in Philadelphia since the Centennial Exhibition in 1876. In addition to its valuable commercial exhibits it will present many features of popular interest and amusement. The United States Marine Band, Sousa's Band, the Banda Rossa, Innes' Band, Damrosch's Orchestra, and other celebrated bands will furnish music alternately, and a Midway Plaisance, equal if not superior to the famous World's Fair Midway at Chicago, and comprising a Chinese Village, a Chinese Theatre, acrobats, and customs; an Oriental Village, London Ghost Show, Hagenbeck's Wild Animal Show, Blarney Castle, and many other unique presentations, will furnish abundant and diversified amusement. Arrangements have also been made for Mandolin, Guitar, and Banjo Concerts, and for a grand chorus from the German Singing Societies.

For this occasion the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion ticket from all points on its line, to Philadelphia and return, at rate of a fare and a third for the round trip plus price of admission. These tickets will be sold during the continuance of the Exposition and will be good for return passage until November 30th.

For specific rates and additional information apply to nearest Ticket Agent.

WHAT OTHERS THOUGHT.

Lewis Carroll, author of "Alice in Wonderland," told with keen relish of a rebuff given him by a little girl who knew him only as a learned mathematician.

"Have you ever read 'Through the Looking-Glass?'" he asked her, expecting an outburst of delight.

"Oh, dear, yes!" she replied. "It is even more stupid than 'Alice in Wonderland!'" Don't you think so?"

Wordsworth could not conceal his chagrin when he heard that his neighbors, the farmers, described him as "a daft, idle body, who went moaning about the hills and had not wit enough to raise a field of oats."

The following anecdote of Henry Clay was told by one of his personal friends:

While making the journey to Washington on the National Road, just after his nomination as candidate for the Presidency, he was traveling one stormy night, wrapped up in a huge cloak, on the back seat of the stage-coach, when two passengers entered. They were Kentuckians, like himself. He fell asleep, and when he awoke found them discussing his chances in the coming campaign.

"What did Henry Clay go into politics for?" said one. "He had a good bit of land; he had a keen eye for stock. If he had stuck to stock-raising he'd have been worth his fifty thousand. But now he doesn't own a dollar."

"And," the great Kentuckian used to add, "the worst of it was, every word of it was true!"

It was characteristic of the man that at the next stopping place he hurried away and took another coach, lest his critics should recognize him and be mortified at their unintentional rudeness.—"Youth's Companion."

Cleveland Bible Training School.

CONDUCTED BY

J. Walter Malone and Emma B. Malone.

This institution was not designed to be, nor does it aspire to be, a theological seminary. Such a purpose would be contrary to the spirit of Quakerism. It is intended to meet the needs of a large and increasing class of persons who are clearly called to Christian work, and who feel the need of a more thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, of acquaintance with the various forms of soul-saving effort, and of association with experienced workers.

The School has enthusiastic classes in Consecutive Bible Study and in Scripture Doctrine. It finds for its students abundant opportunities for service in connection with the Friends' Missions, the city rescue missions, visiting the sick and the needy, conducting children's meetings, mothers' meetings, Bible classes, etc.

It has classes in English and in Elocution for the cultivation of proper expression. Also, classes in Ancient History, Church History, and Bible Geography; and short courses in Psychology, Ethics, and Christian Evidences.

It keeps constantly in view, as necessary for effectual service:

I. A clean, pure, fully-justified life. II. Complete consecration to God, including both submission and dedication. III. The baptism with the Holy Spirit for perfection of character and service, and for the proper understanding of the Scriptures. IV. An ever widening and deepening knowledge of the Scriptures. V. Earnest Desire and effort for the salvation of others.

One thought pervades the entire work, viz.: That it is for God, and that His own Spirit must direct it.

The expense of attendance, including tuition, board, washing, heat, and light, is $3.00 per week, or $100 for the school year.

"FLAG No. 5!"

In the meeting-room of Division 46 of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at Albany, New York, is a simple yet touching and appropriate memento of as brave an engine-driver as ever put hand to throttle. This engineer, Edward Kennar, ran engine 238 on the Western Division of the New York Central Railroad. The "Century Magazine" tells the story of his heroism:

GOOD REASONS FOR USING COMPOUND OXYGEN.

It has been in use for more than twenty five years. It is well tried. Thousands have testified to its wonderful curative powers. Hundreds of Physicians have used it in their practice, and recommend its use. It can be used at home and without interfering with business or employment. It can not harm the most delicate patient. Treatment also includes consultation. For the cure of chronic diseases. Send for book of 200 pages, free.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN,
1112 Girard St., Phila., Pa.
San Francisco, Ca. Toronto, Canada

"One April night, as Kennar's train was speeding toward Batavia, the locomotive headlight suddenly flashed upon a mass of moving earth and rock on the track. The train was rushing toward a landslide, of which there had not been the slightest warning. The whistle shrieked "Down brakes!" but it was too late. No. 238 plunged into the heaping debris, and a moment later lay wrecked at the foot of the embankment.

Pinned down by tons of steel and writhing in the agony of death, was Kennar. Suddenly he seemed to pull together what of life there was left in him. Slightly raising his head, he shrieked—it seemed almost in anger—at those who had gathered about to help him if they could:

"Flag No. 5!"

"With those words on his lips he died.

"No 5" was the west-bound train which usually met Kennar's near this point. The warning which he, forgetting his own agony, had given with his dying breath, recalled No. 5's peril to the train-hands; and hurrying back to the track, they were in time to flag it."

It is said that once Mendelssohn came to see the great Freiburg organ. The old custodian refused him permission to play upon the instrument, not knowing who he was. At length, however, he reluctantly granted him leave to play a few notes. Mendelssohn took his seat, and soon the most wonderful music was breaking forth from the organ. The custodian was spell-bound. He came up beside the great musician, and asked his name. Learning it, he stood humiliated, self-condemned, saying, "And I refused you permission to play upon my organ!" There comes One to us, and desires to take our lives and play upon them. But we withhold ourselves from Him, and refuse Him permission, when, if we would yield ourselves to Him, He would bring from our souls heavenly music.—"Christian Index."

“THERE is a vast difference between an unsupported assertion and a demonstrated fact.”

Our assertion that Pure White Lead made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion is far superior to White Lead made by patent or quick processes, has been demonstrated by the experience of competent, practical painters everywhere. Comparative tests made by employees or parties interested do not prove anything.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

It is not merely that we have the lovely and perfect example of One who has lived our earth-life and resisted its temptations, and so has shown us how to live. This He has done; but were this all, He would be to us only a guiding memory, a sacred ideal. It is what He is that saves us; it is His abiding presence with us as an intimate, unfailing friend, whose life is so one with His Father's that the friendship He gives us is the very friendship of God. It is no imagination. Christ does draw us to his heart and hold us there in a union so close that His standards become our standards, His sympathies our sympathies, and the overflow of His love goes out through our lives toward all of our fellow-beings.—Lucy Larcom.

The apostle's injunction, "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," is very simple, and yet to the thoughtful believer the question arises, How is one to nourish one's own spiritual life? Many specific answers to this question might be given, each one of which would go far toward assuring it. But there is a general answer that is sufficiently explicit to meet all the conditions of the case. It is cultivating fellowship with God. It is retiring often and habitually into the still places where God is found, and the mind is illuminated, and the soul is replenished out of the divine fulness, and the whole spiritual nature is quickened. There is no other way than this, or its equivalent, to hold the soul in poise when there is so much to disturb in the round of daily activity. There is no other way to guard against the disturbing and benumbing influences of buying and selling and getting gain. There is no other way to withstand successfully the allurements of pleasant surroundings, and the temptations to go too far in the way of self-indulgence. It is in retirement with God that fresh fountains of light, and love and joy are opened.—"In His Steps."

VICTOR HUGO ON IMMORTALITY.

"I feel in myself the future life. I am rising, I know, toward the sky. The sunshine is over my head. Heaven lights me with the reflection of unknown worlds.

"You say the soul is nothing but the result of bodily powers; why, then, is my soul the more luminous when my bodily powers begin to fail? Winter is on my head and eternal spring is in my heart.

"The nearer I approach the end, the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the worlds which invite me. It is marvelous, yet simple. It is a fairy tale, and it is a history. For half a century I have been writing my thoughts in prose, verse, history, philosophy, drama, romance, tradition, satire, ode, song—I have tried all. But I feel that I have not said the thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave I can say, like so many others: 'I have finished my day's work,' but I cannot say 'I have finished my life.' My day's work will begin the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight to open with the dawn. I improve every hour because I love this world as my fatherland. My work is only a beginning. My work is hardly above its foundation. I would be glad to see it mounting and mounting forever. The thirst for the infinite proves infinity."

NEARER THEE.

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee.
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life my weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in Thy employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good Seem my natural habitude.

—Whittier.

LITTLE LIFTS.

"If you were toiling up a weary hill,
Bearing a load beyond your strength to bear,
Straining each nerve untiringly, and still Stumbling and losing foothold here and there;
And each one passing by would do so much
And give one upward lift and go their way,
Would not the slight, reiterated touch
Of help and kindness lighten all the day?"

"There is no little and there is no much;
We weigh and measure and define in vain;
A look, a word, a light, responsive touch
Can be the minister of joy to pain.
A man can die of hunger, walled in gold;
A crumb may quicken hope to stronger breath,
And every day we give or we withhold
Some little thing that tells for life or death."

WHAT WOULD HE HAVE ME DO ?

SHELDON'S now famous book, "What Would Jesus Do?" has called out a small booklet by H. D. Brown, an Englishman, entitled, "What Christ Did." The enormous sale of Sheldon's book is a very clear indication of the kind of religious literature which the reading public want, and though theologians show that its theology is not sound, and literary men show that its style is not good, yet the millions buy it. Criticisms are usually unheeded when the public likes a thing.

Subscribers in Great Britain and Ireland may remit to our agents, Headley Brothers, 14 Bishopsgate Street, Without, London, E. C., England, or directly to this office. Subscriptions and postage, 10s. Payable in advance.

Advertisements, notices and changes of address, should reach the office not later than Seventh-day noon, for the number of the succeeding week. Remittances and letters on business should be addressed to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Checks, Money Orders and Postal Notes should be drawn to the order of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

It is not our purpose to enter into a critical discussion of either of these particular books, but we do wish to say that they present rather a doubtful method of determining what is right for the individual to-day. If we had an easy and certain means of finding out what Jesus would do were He in our place, then the course would be a very safe one. But we must remember that the conditions of life in the year 1899, in America, are vastly different from the conditions under which THAT LIFE was lived in Palestine in the early years of the first century, and we have to be careful how we translate That Life into terms of our present time. Manifestly we are not to wear sandals and a seamless robe because HE did. We are not to keep out of cars and carriages because HE always walked or rode on a donkey, and the same is true of the thousand details of our daily life. We cannot copy Christ's life in the letter, and reproduce it in our own lives, to-day. It would not be best, nor would HE approve of such a course. Almost every condition of life has changed, and we must live in the world as it is now.

The thing we can do, the thing we should do, is to live in the SPIRIT of Jesus Christ, to learn His will for us to-day, and to have our lives animated by the purpose and spirit which are everywhere revealed in Him. It is for this that the Holy Spirit is given to us to lead us into the truth. This is why Christ said, "Greater things shall ye do, because I go to my Father." We are not to stand gazing at a model which is to be literally copied in detail. We are to be entered, baptized, empowered, enflamed, guided by a living, present Spirit, whose purpose is to make a man a king and priest unto God.

There is no short cut to a safe and sure moral and spiritual life. Men will never do right until they are right, and it is no use covering up this fact. The practical question for us all to ask is, What would He have ME do? and the only way we can answer that question is to live in union with Christ Himself, and become familiar with and responsive to the leading of His Spirit, until it sways and controls us. The best man for our times, or for any age, is the man who is so permeated with the Spirit of the living Christ that he sees his course in life, as birds see their way to their nests, and has the sense of power behind him which enables him to go on, whether the way is hard or easy. The supremely good thing is a HOLY WILL.

WHAT IS SACERDOTALISM ?

HERE is a word which is used a great deal, though it is very seldom clearly defined, and very often persons who talk with horror of "sacerdotalism" are really guilty of it. What is sacerdotalism? It is, in the first place, the pretension of priests that nothing can come from God to men except through them as channels, that God acts only through certain ordained and "sacred" agents or vicars. It is, in the second place, and as it is more often used to-day, the pretension that some things can come from God to men only through ordained ministers, and that they have privileges and functions which an ordinary Christian has not.

The old idea, mentioned first, that God reaches men only through ordained men who are "sacred" channels, is a most dangerous one and has been valiantly combatted for four hundred years and disproved by facts of experience. The second idea still lingers among most Protestant denominations.

It was on this point that the early Friends would have no compromise. They held that the only difference between a minister and a "layman" was a difference of gift. They believed that with God there was no class of men which was more sacred than any other class, and no "ordained channel of grace" for Him who has access to the hearts of all men everywhere. A minister was a minister only because he had received a gift of utterance which enabled him to communicate spiritual things with special effect. No oil was put on his head, for he had the Spirit in his heart. No priestly hands were laid upon him, for his was "the mighty ordination of the pierced hands." He received no "authority" to act for God which did not come to the humblest Christian who obeyed the Master's will.

He refused the functions which were set apart especially for clergymen because he felt that such a course would encourage the idea of sacerdotalism—i.e., the idea that a minister was a necessary channel, and possessed by his office of privileges denied to ordinary Christians.

This practical and consistent course has had a tremendous influence and effect in the Christian world, and it is a position which many Protestant ministers now hold, at least in theory. But it must not be supposed that the contest against sacerdotalism has been won. It has not been won. In fact, we are living in a period in which there has been a strong reaction in favor of it. It is one of the corner-stones of the so-called "High Church party," which, as everybody knows, is an ominous movement back toward ecclesiastical authority and back to ritual and form, and it creeps, in a subtle way, into all branches of the church, even into our own branch.

It is certainly the duty of all our ministers to resist it and keep free from it in every way. Each one must decide for himself where his duty lies, and each one must decide what is dangerous and what is not, but no one with his eyes open can well make any compromise with sacerdotalism, or encourage the idea that any separate class of men forms a "sacred channel of grace."

NABOTH'S VINEYARD.

It seems to us that the uncompromising attitude of Great Britain toward the Boers in the Transvaal is too much like the attitude of a well-known king and queen toward a certain Naboth who had an attractive vineyard. Naboth was a "boer" in diplomacy. He was stubborn in his contention that he could not give away his ancestral vineyard and the royal family was resolved to have it by hook or crook. It is manifest from the position of the London Times, and other leading journals, that the real issue is "the supremacy of the Imperial Government in South Africa." The Transvaal is the Naboth's vineyard which stands in the way, and there is but one way to get it—"blood and iron." The negotiations are going on until the troops are massed to strike a crushing blow.

THE EDUCATIONAL REPORT.

THE Educational Conference, held at Providence this summer, decided to print its report as a supplement to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, as was done five years ago in the case of the Oskaloosa Conference. It will be issued next week, and will be mailed free of charge to the address of any person requesting it. It will be a great convenience to the publishers if those wishing it will send their names at once. It is published in this way, as it is the most economical and convenient way of distributing it. THE AMERICAN FRIEND, it must be understood, assumes no responsibility for any opinions expressed in the report, and merely carries out the decision of the Conference. The delay in publication was unavoidable, and was occasioned by circumstances beyond our control.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The Catholic priests in Belgium have secured the passage of a law compelling parents to give to their children no names except those in the calendar of saints.

The Christian Scientists are preparing to build two more houses of worship in Chicago—one to cost $100,000, and the other about $65,000. The first will be one of the handsomest edifices of its kind in the city.

The Triennial Council of the Reformed Churches throughout the world met in session in Washington, D. C., on the 27th. There are 300 delegates present, representing thirty-five different churches in many lands.

The American Board has closed its books for the year, and finds itself in debt to the amount of $88,537. The debt at the beginning of the year was $40,291. The disbursements for the twelve months were $692,447, and the receipts, $644,201.

It is asserted that the Zionists have succeeded in gaining the favor of a personage very influential at the Porte, and by this channel have had the plans and proposals of Zionism brought directly under the Sultan's notice on three occasions. No answer of any sort has so far been vouchsafed to them.

The International Congregational Council opened in Boston on the 20th and continued until to-day, when it adjourned. Among the subjects considered in the Council's sessions were details of organization, theological questions, the relation of the churches to the public, educational topics, etc.

The Siamese have shown their appreciation of the efforts of the Presbyterian missionaries by contributing 15,000 ticals ($9,000) for the purchase of a new site for the Christian High School in Bangkok. The king gave 1,600 ticals, and his example was followed by princes of the realm and nobles, who seemed glad to aid in the enterprise.

It is reported that Bishop Seymour, of Illinois, and Dr. Clendenin, of Westchester, New York, both of whom vigorously opposed the ordination of Dr. C. A. Briggs to the priesthood in the Episcopal Church, are about to issue a periodical. This will be called "The Church Defense," and will be used to appeal against the action of Bishop Potter and the theological position occupied by Dr. Briggs.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE SIN OF TALEBEARING.

BY ELWOOD SCOTT.

Talebearing and detraction are old and heinous sins against which we used to preach and write and legislate by acts of discipline, etc., and by queries and answers sought to overcome this terrible evil; but still it is as rank a sin now as it was in the days of our fathers. Unlike many other sins, this is the besetting sin of many a professor of religion, which they often justify—one who often speaks of being saved and kept by the power of God and washed in the blood of Jesus, and among these even are those who would claim to be wholly sanctified, and yet they are found in the ranks of those who are guilty of this terrible sin. They can wilfully steal away the reputation and good name of another, the loss of which is far more keenly felt than if it were his purse or his horse taken from the stable by a midnight thief with but little thought or care, and remembered even with less remorse. The sin of scandal is not committed chiefly by the open sinners of the world and the wicked one, but, sad to say, by those who profess to be followers of Him from whom not one word of scandal ever dropped.

This sin is committed in many ways—not merely by the slanderer who fabricates falsehood respecting his neighbor, but by those who circulate these falsehoods.

A talebearer comes and brings some plausible account of another's misdoings. It may be true, it may be false; the slanderer takes but little pains to know the real truth, but spreads the report far and wide, and in doing so makes himself a partaker of other men's sin, which God abhors.

In the lips of a talebearer and scandal monger almost any act may be twisted and distorted to an evil intent. Joseph may be condemned to prison for attempted adultery, and the proofs of his guilt are held up to the world by the coat left in the hands of his mistress. If the man who repeats scandal is one respected by others, then it adds weight to the falsehood, and the lie walks on stilts and justifies its existence on account of the one from whom the story has come, and so a hundred or a thousand are guilty of taking up a reproach against his neighbor. But, as J. G. Pike says: "It is not merely while circulating falsehood that the guilt of slander is incurred; it is incurred to a dreadful extent by persons who circulate what may be in some sense correct."

The backbiter pleads in excuse for his mischievous conduct: "The account I give is true." It may be so, but it is not all the truth, or it is truth colored or misrepresented, or it is truth which he has no right to repeat.

1st. It is not all true. Some one has done something wrong or something which has the appearance of evil. The slanderer hears of it and away he goes, like a trusty messenger of him who is the old accuser of the brethren and bears the news among the circle of his acquaintances. This he did—not to help or heal the wound, but to injure him farther. It may be true that something wrong has been done, but there may be circumstances connected with it which, if fully known, would call for sympathy rather than the severity of censure. All these circumstances, however, the slanderer does not care to know, or, if he knows them, takes care to omit them. Perhaps, under similar circumstances, his slanderer would have entered into temptation ten times as great, but of which he says nothing. Perhaps he has most deeply repented, sorrowed and grieved, but of this the backbiter too is silent; he does not tell half the truth.

The slanderer sows strife and discord and leaves the persons to whom he bears his tales a cool and deliberate enemy, or so prejudiced that he can see no good in the slandered man or woman.

But if the matter be true he is still a backbiter, for it is truth which he had no right or business to repeat, and which he would not have repeated with the coloring upon it in the hearing of the person concerned.

As J. G. Pike has well said, the Bible by no means represents the guilt of scandal as consisting exclusively or principally of lying. Whether the statement be true or false, if it be calculated to injure the reputation or comfort of another, he who circulates it, except where duty demands it to help, heal, restore and save the individual, is a backbiter.

If we believe something is wrong with an individual we should go to him first of all, or if needful take another spiritual brother or sister who have healing in their wings, and when the work is done, there let it rest forever. The common practice of spreading the mistake of a brother or sister by telling their faults to every member of the church and to the world is a flagrant sin, often far worse than the error or sin it discloses.

There is another darker kind of scandal in which less may be said and yet more mischief done. They are known in the Bible as "whisperers." By half sentences, sly insinuations and affected silence they disclose the malicious feelings of their hearts, and often suggest ideas more false and wicked respecting the person they dislike than is done by the open slanderer. They mean to stab to the heart with a knife concealed in the scabbard of professed innocence. It is true that he who encourages talebearers by listening to them really becomes a partaker of their sins. Slanderers should be universally spurned as unworthy of notice. If it were so who would be a slanderer? He should be looked upon as a worse enemy than a thief or a robber and spurned by all honest men. One short rule is of immense value to all who observe it—"When you can say no good of any one, unless duty before God requires you to speak, say nothing. Then, if you speak, see, first, to whom you speak; second, will it do good or evil to the one of whom you speak; third, see if it is a violation of the law of God, 'Thou shalt not go up and down among thy people as a talebearer.'"

Backbiting is a sin which, in the Scriptures, is ranked with the most atrocious crimes. In the first chapter of the Romans it is made conspicuous in the dreadful picture of the wickedness of an apostate world. "Filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, haters of God."

An eminent writer has said: "Where pleasure is found in hearing of iniquity, or in publishing evil reports of another, the heart must plainly be under the influence of malice or envy or resentment or some disposition akin to that of devils, who take special delight in this sin."

In the epistle to Titus women are cautioned against being false accusers. The original is more impressive—"Be not devils; none is so like him as professors of religion who are backbiters." This fearful, wicked disposition of slanderers is often seen in the manner in which they attack persons eminent for piety and usefulness. Baxter was represented as a murderer, Doddridge as unjust and time serving, Whitefield as all that was impure and vile. Even their Lord was represented by slanderers as a glutton and drunkard.

Political slander is a crying sin. It is the tendency of the times, in order to break down the party in power or to prevent the opposite party from coming into power, to indulge in most slanderous attacks upon each other. To cut the throat and drink the blood of an opposing candidate is the scandal-monger's glory and gluttony of the times. If there are existing evils in a man or party, treat them as we would evils in ourselves or our party, and save the conscience from the hardening process which is sure to follow these flagrant sins, and the nation from disgrace of a weakening influence and an inability to govern and control the people.

"Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people" should be heeded now as much as at any period of time. "The fearfulness of an untamed tongue," says James, "shows it an unruly evil, and full of deadly poison; it is a fire, a world of iniquity, and it is set on fire of hell. He that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil and his lips that they speak no guile."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

IT IS HE.

When I sit in the darkness of sorrow,
And the bells ring a minor refrain,
It is He bids me hope for the morrow
And the consequent exile of pain.

When my friends of the world seem departed,
And my spirit is sadly alone,
It is He who continues true-hearted
In the friendship we formed at the Throne.

When my heart wanders out from devotion,
On the path of some meaningless dream,
It is He who rekindles emotion
And revives the old love's tender gleam.

And, at last, in the day of my going
With the death-angel down at the strand,
It is He who with love overflowing
Will welcome my soul to His Land.

WORK AND LIFE IN PALESTINE.

Eli and Sibyl Jones Mission, Ramallah,
Palestine, Eighth month 10th, 1899.

The twentieth of Seventh month marked the close of the tenth school year of the Training Home, and the girls and teachers went to their homes for the summer vacation. Katie Gabriel says that satisfactory work has been done, and the girls carry to their parents good reports of successful endeavors and earnest application. Two are making special effort to keep up with their classes by studying one subject at home this summer.

The girls who live in Ramallah are very regular in attending our meetings for worship, and come looking neat and tidy. Most of them have been to call on us since the holidays began.

As no class graduated this year, we expect all the scholars to return, and so shall not be able to take any new ones, though many parents have applied for their girls.

The reports from the day schools show that over two hundred children have been in attendance, and that they have committed to memory many precious texts and passages of Scripture. Lessons of cleanliness, tidiness, kindness and truthfulness have been impressed upon their minds, besides the regular studies that are taught.

They are very busy now threshing wheat, which is done in the same manner as of old—oxen or donkeys "treading out" the grain by walking round and round in a small circle over it. (Deut. 25: 4; Hosea 10: 11.) Bible texts come to our minds as we see them at work. "The chaff which the wind driveth away" to one side (Ps. 1: 4; Isa. 29: 5; Dan. 2: 35; Hosea 13: 3), separating it from the wheat as it is thrown up in the air by a man, "whose fan (or shovel) is in his hand" (Matt. 3: 12; Isa. 41: 16), is still a common sight. The open-air threshing floors, shared by all the village, are the same as when Boaz slept there to guard his barley, and probably many others were doing the same, for some one must look after each pile of grain. The people are careful to thoroughly cleanse the floor (Matt. 3: 12) that nothing be lost.

As soon as the threshing is finished the people will go to their vineyards to watch them and to gather the grapes. For the "threshing reaches unto the vintage" (Lev. 26: 5), as Moses said it should, though the Lord's commandments and Sabbaths are not kept. Thus does our loving God continue to pour out His blessings upon us, even when we are unworthy to receive them.

Whole families live in the vineyards, sleeping on the ground or in the little watch-towers, of which very many vineyards have one (Isa. 5: 2; Matt. 21: 33), and the people enjoy this part of the year greatly. They live largely on the grapes, which are finer than most of those grown in the United States.

Very many of the grapes are made into wine, which is in universal use. Drunkenness is not common in the villages, nor openly in the cities. But, sad to tell, civilized foreigners have brought the curse to the country, and the temperance question needs to be vigorously spoken of and strongly upheld. Selah Merrill, the United States Consul, says that there are nearly one hundred and fifty places in Jerusalem where liquors are sold.

On account of the plague in Alexandria all steamers touching at any port in Egypt have to go to Beyrout for fifteen days' quarantine before coming to Jaffa. This causes a delay in the mails, which have been very irregular and slow. But we can willingly endure this if it will keep the plague away from this country. There have been many rumors of epidemics in different places, but, though many cases of typhoid fever have occurred in Acca and Haifa, and of diphtheria in Jerusalem, all other reports seem to be without foundation. Reliable reports from Egypt are scarce. Most probably your papers give better news than we can get.

The locusts which threatened the country have not done as much damage as was expected, and the danger is over for this year. They did not visit Ramallah or the "hill country," but kept principally to the plains. About two hundred of the men of Ramallah were called out by the government to help in destroying them.

Please remember us all in your prayers—workers, girls and people.

"For so the whole round world is every way Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

Sincerely your friends,
WILFRID AND DELLA D. ROWNTREE.

Lesson II.

Tenth Month 8, 1899

HAMAN'S PLOT AGAINST THE JEWS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If God be for us, who can be against us? Rom. 8: 31.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 2.—Esther made Queen. Esther 2: 15-23.
 Third-day, Tenth mo. 3.—Haman's plot against the Jews. Esther 3: 1-11.
 Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 4.—The decree of death. Esther 3: 12-4: 3.
 Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 5.—Sorrow in the palace. Esther 4: 4-17.
 Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 6.—Pride discomfited. Esther 6: 1-11.
 Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 7.—The enemy punished. Esther 7.
 First-day, Tenth mo. 8.—Danger of pride. Prov 16: 5-19."

The right of no book to be in the sacred canon has been so much questioned as that of Esther. From early times, even about the Christian era, some of the learned Rabbis doubted whether Esther properly belonged to the Old Testament. Among Christian scholars there has been still greater doubt. Athanasius, the great champion of orthodoxy; Augustine, Gregory of Nazianzen, and later Martin Luther and a host of more modern scholars, have all pronounced against it.

This opinion has been arrived at for various reasons. The name of God does not occur in the book, and, with the single exception of the fasting of Esther, there are only the vaguest allusions to any religious act or belief—"the point of view is wholly secular." It must be confessed, also, that the morality of the book of Esther is on a low plane as compared with other parts of the Old Testament.

Esther is neither quoted nor alluded to in the New Testament.

The author of the book is unknown, and the date of its composition is thought by all authorities to be late, few placing it earlier than 425 B.C., while others make it as late as 160 B.C.

Of those who admit it into the canon there are two schools of opinion: (1) those who believe that it is an imaginative narrative based on some historical fact; and (2) those who believe that it is truly historical. It must be confessed that the weight of authority at present favors the first view.

The reason why later Jews have placed such value upon the book of Esther is because it accounts for the Feast of Purim and is intensely nationalistic.

According to the statements in the book itself the events described seem to belong to the period between the sixth and seventh chapters of Ezra—some time between 515 and 458 B.C. Some persons fix the time as about 479 B.C., but these are only guesses. Ahasuerus seems to be without doubt Xerxes, the monarch so well known for his invasion of Greece; Shushan is supposed to be Susa, the winter capital of Persia, situated about two hundred miles southeast of Babylon.

The account of the court in most respects corresponds with what is known of oriental monarchs, and the character of Ahasuerus is like that of Xerxes—"vainglorious, pusillanimous, licentious and blood-thirsty."

It will be well to read chapters one and two in order to understand the condition of affairs at the opening of the lesson.

1. "Haman." Nothing is known of this man other than what is told in Esther. "Agagite." It is supposed that this appellation is a term of reproach.

2. "Bowed down and did reverence to." Revised Version. Really, prostrated himself. "Mordecai." A Jew, the hero of the book. He is a cousin of Esther (chap. 2: 15) and had adopted her as his daughter. "Bowed not down." This would have been an act of worship. Mordecai had the courage of his convictions.

3. "In the king's gate." The attendants who waited upon the king when he dispensed justice in the open place before the palace.

4. "Harkened not." Their remonstrances had no effect. "Matters," or "words." "Would stand." Whether his excuses for his action would be accepted. "He had told them that he was a Jew." This was his excuse, or justification.

5. "Then was Haman full of wrath." This was not unnatural considering the character of the man.

6. "Thought, scorn," etc. It was not enough in Haman's view to punish the one culprit. His whole kindred should be punished also.

7. "First month." Of the Jewish year, Nisan, which corresponds to March—April. "Cast Pur." Cast a lot. "Adar." The twelfth month of the Jewish year, corresponding to the time between the middle of February to the middle of March. "Day to day, and from month to month." The meaning is that they cast lots to see what day of the year was the most favorable for approaching Ahasuerus with their request. The lots were all cast on the same day. As is well known, the Jewish feast of "Purim" or "Lots" is said to have been instituted in remembrance of this deliverance in the time of Esther.

8. On the day fixed by the lot Haman states his case before the king. "Diverse from those of every other people." Revised Version. The whole verse is a good description of Jews at all times since their dispersion. They have kept wonderfully separate. Of course Haman exaggerated the case, for, except as to religious observances, it is not likely that the Jews differed more from those around him than at the present day.

9. "Destroyed." While massacres on a large scale have not been unknown in history—as, for instance, that of the Magi at the accession of Darius Hystaspes, and of St. Bartholomew—yet such a one as described seems almost incredible. Others were for the class; this on account of one man.

The dominions of the Persian king covered all western Asia, and to carry out such a decree would have caused a wholesale slaughter, such as could hardly have been accomplished if attempted. The statements in the verse would seem to be oriental exaggerations. "Ten thousand talents of silver." This would be equivalent to about $15,000,000. Haman was probably expecting to get most of this immense sum from the confiscated property of the Jews he hoped to destroy.

10. "His ring." The king's signet carried the authority of the king with it.

11. The king refused the promised money. This statement may have been made to show the great wealth of the king, or his confidence in Haman. The details are doubtless given to emphasize the depth of Haman's subsequent fall.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Do what is right, regardless of consequences.
2. Responsibility for right action in offices of trust cannot be shifted.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 7.—What is that to thee? John 21: 18-22.

One of Horace Bushnell's most impressive sermons was from the theme, "Every man's life a plan of God," and in it he asserts that "God has a definite life-plan for every human person, girding him visibly or invisibly, for some exact thing, which it will be the true significance and glory of his life to have accomplished." The preparation for this life of special service begins often long before the person is conscious of the nature of the service, just as God could say of Cyrus, "I have girded thee though thou hast not known me," and blessed is that life that does not by its wilfulness and blindness thwart the purposes of God.

Is it not true that many persons have never really thought of life as a plan of God? Not simply those who make no claim to Christian life, but many also who desire in a general way to conform their lives to right standards, but are ready to take the responsibility of decisions affecting all of life into their own hands without waiting to know what the plans of God may be. It is a glorious hour in life when any one can lay that life as a living sacrifice at the altar ready for the plan of God. He may not at once reveal that plan; it may please Him as yet to gird that life invisibly, to fit it more perfectly before He reveals the plan; but He never refuses the gift. Our own plans may have to be shattered; we may yet need to learn the value of patient waiting; we may advance only by the Divine order of being "faithful in that which is least," but in due time God "will perfect that which concerneth us." All this is in perfect accord with the fact that opportunity is also a call from God. Opportunity simply means an open door, and if God has opened the door that is enough as an indication of His will. The recognition of His hand in the matter must depend upon the measure of our spiritual consciousness, or that of our friends.

To young people this lesson must appeal with great significance. If life is a plan of God then that plan should be found out early in life, or at least our surrender to God for the unfolding of that plan should be made at once. Sin is literally "missing the mark," and the mark is the plan of God for our life. One cannot afford to build wrong and have it all to tear down again.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held at Des Moines, Iowa, Eighth month 25th to 27th. It was a very precious season of blessing. The General Superintendent of the Evangelistic Work, Zenas L. Martin, was present.

The word truly did have free course and was glorified. On First-day evening Brother Martin gave a missionary talk on evidences of the growth of our missionary work in Jamaica.

Marion, Ind., Eighth month 29th, 1899.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is in a flourishing condition at the the First Friends' Church, and has been steadily growing both in spiritual life and in numbers. About a year ago our Society united in asking the preparative meeting to grant the privilege of building a parsonage on the church property by the side of the meeting house and to join with them in making the plans and raising the money.

Though the meeting had previously failed in a similar effort, it gladly joined the Endeavorers and were soon at work erecting a suitable house. With a little extra effort sufficient money was subscribed to complete the building, and on Tenth month 7th, last year, our pastor moved into it.

The church and grounds are in a very attractive part of the city, and the Endeavorers feel that their work in assisting the meeting to place such a handsome parsonage on the lot has added very materially to the financial and spiritual welfare of the entire church.

The cost of such an undertaking was no small item to overcome, but it was met with energy, and the last debt was almost liquidated when the pastor moved into the house. The total cost of the parsonage was $993.86, and although $29.75 of the amount subscribed has proven insolvent, the deficiency has been met and the entire sum paid.

MISSIONARY READING COURSE.

PLAN.—A Four Years' Missionary Reading Course has been planned for the Christian Endeavor and Women's Foreign Missionary Society. Nine lessons will be given each year. Lesson helps will appear in THE AMERICAN FRIEND and the "Missionary Advocate." The Outlines will be sent in advance to any paper that wishes to publish the monthly lessons with notes.

ENROLLMENT.—All who wish to follow the suggestive readings are urged to send name and address to Gilbert Bowles, 630 North B Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa, or to Eliza C. Armstrong, Center Valley, Ind. It is better to organize classes and let the secretary report the names and write monthly of the progress of the work and ask any questions.

BOOKS.—No certain book will be required. By using the index any book bearing on the subject will be helpful. This fall let some one in each meeting get a list of all books on China. The leader of the class should have charge of these, get acquainted with them and lead others to use them in the preparation of assigned topics. One booklet, useful all through the course, is Ross's "First Hundred Years of Modern Missions." It is given as a premium with the "Missionary Advocate." On China, one of the best and cheapest books is "Dawn on the Hills of Tang." Student Volunteer Movement, Bancroft Building, 3 West 29th Street, New York city. Price, in paper, 35 cents. The "Encyclopedia of Missions," the "Report of the Cleveland Volunteer Convention" and Graham's "Missionary Expansion" (Revell books) will be constant reference.

EXPENSE.—What one wishes to pay for books is the only outlay. Where several club together the best literature may be had at little cost. If three persons are together one can buy a book for the fall term, another for the winter, the other for the spring, and all have access to the books.

EXAMINATION AND CERTIFICATE.—The test questions at the close of each term will cover the Bible lessons and the topics given in the outline. Stamped and addressed envelopes for forwarding examination papers will be sent free to all who enroll. Certificates will be given to all who creditably finish the four years' course. Complete announcements concerning this will be made later.

OUTLINE.

First Year—Bible Lessons on Missionary Motives.

Studies on China, India and Palestine, with special attention to Friends' work.

Second Year—Bible Lessons on Missionary Resources.

Outline studies on the Isles of the Sea: the West Indies, Japan and Madagascar, with the history of Friends' Missions.

Third Year—Bible Lessons on Missionary Methods: Mexico, Alaska and Africa, with Friends' work.

Fourth Year—Bible Lessons on Results. Survey of the world field, with study of special topics.

"THE LAND AND THE PEOPLE."

(Article to accompany STUDY I.)

Geography.—The name China is probably from Ts'in or Ch'in (Does Isa. 49: 12 refer to this?) a leading family which in 221 B.C. conquered all China. The area, with dependencies (4,218,401 square miles), equals all Europe, exclusive of Austria, or ninety-one States the size of Pennsylvania. China proper, comprising one-third of the above, is ten times as large as Great Britain. The surface is characterized by the Great Plain in the northeast; high, mountainous "roof of the world" in the west, and the three large trough-like basins, sloping toward the east, separated by mountain ranges. Three great rivers drain these basins. The Sikiang, with its tributaries, forms a network of communication in the south. In the center the Yangtse-kiang, "the girdle of China," winds for three thousand miles. Ocean steamers ascend it two hundred miles to Nankin, while native boats almost cross the Empire. The Hoang- (yellow) ho (River) filling up its bed with silt, about once in 250 years, and as "China's Sorrow," breaks over the dykes and sweeps away crops, homes and millions of people. The largest lake—in the center—is as large as Great Salt Lake. Near Hankow is the "Sea of Stars," a group of picturesque lakelets dotted with fleets. Chinese scenery has its snow-capped mountains, its fern-decked woods, its village-fringed lakes, its arching bridges, its hill-crowned pavilions, its terraced slopes, its gorges, its sterile plains and its fertile fields. The climate is "fairly healthful." The average temperature for Canton (70 deg. F.) is the same as in New Orleans, five hundred miles further north. Peking is the same as Philadelphia. The moisture varies from the rainless west to seventy inches annually about Canton. In the east the rainy season lasts two months during the summer. The beautiful cold winters of the north renew the vigor of the weary workers.

The Inhabitants.—Origin: Coming from the northwest about 2200 B.C., the Chinese settled along the Yellow River. Among the presumptive evidences that the Chinese came from Babylonia are: the similarity of language, method of computing time, number of (ten) pre-historic periods in both countries, and the native name of each, "The Middle Kingdom." Besides, China is as great in agriculture and astrology as Babylon was. The physical characteristics are well known. Their thick skulls and sturdy—seemingly nerveless—frames can endure heat, suffering and monotonous toil. Mentally they are above the average; while they are methodical, slow, unimaginative and stoical, they are imitative, frugal and submissive to authority. They have tenacious memories and great reverence for learning. They are deceptive, sensual, sullen and arrogant to inferiors; but quiet, polite, and in most things temperate. The number of Chinese is beyond comprehension. "They are a multitude that no man can number." The common estimate is 400,000,000—one-fourth of the world's inhabitants.

Historical Sketch.—Passing by the stories of the mythical Pwanku chiseling out the earth, sun and moon, and the legendary monarchs under whose rule are placed the inventions and the formation of the moral and governmental theories, we find that one hundred years before Abraham started from Ur the Chinese were much advanced in civilization. In the province of Shan Si, on the Hoang-ho River, were the people with government, religion, literature, and some knowledge of science and art. There have been twenty-five lines of Chinese kings, with about 235 rulers. Some interesting facts of Chinese history are associated with the leading dynasties. The first two are uncertain. King Yü divided the country into nine principalities and laid the foundation of feudalism. The third (Chan) and longest dynasty, covering the Tartar raids, had three great philosophers—Confucius, Mencius and Lao-tsu, who lived about the time of the captivity of the Jews into Babylon. The Chin (China) family overthrew feudalism, united the Empire, and one of its kings, Shi Huang-ti, the Napoleon of China, built the great wall, protecting the northern frontier for 1,500 miles, destroyed the books and records, and slew 500 men of letters. The (Han) dynasty reigning at the time of Christ saw the development of art, commerce, literature, government, the introduction of civil service examinations and Buddhism. During the T'ang dynasty (620 A.D. to 908), the "Golden age of poetry," Mohammedanism and Nestorian Christianity entered. Territorial expansion reached south to the sea, west to Persia, and seized Korea on the northeast. The rule of the Sung dynasty (time of the dark ages in Europe) was the "Augustinian age of literature and philosophy," in which the development of the language was completed. After 3,000 years of "home rule" came the first foreign dynasty—the Mongol. To this age belonged Marco Polo's Kublai Khan, ruling from "the Frozen Sea to Malacca," who completed the Grand Canal (now useless) intended to connect Peking and Canton. After a Mongol rule of 88 years came the native Chinese Ming dynasty, in 1368 A.D. During this time the Portuguese entered China and the Jesuits began work in the east. The last of the sixteen rulers during internal rebellion and border invasions committed suicide, and the Manchus were invited to interfere. Thus in 1644 began the present (Ch'in or Pur) dynasty. These foreign conquerors compelled the Chinese to adopt their own method of wearing the hair, so that the queue was once a "mark of bondage." Some of the great Manchu rulers have authorized public surveys, established libraries, and received foreign embassies. The late history of China has become familiar through current literature.

Industries.—In the absence of binding caste, society is divided on the basis of occupation and learning. Below the Imperial household and the descendants of Confucius the rank is as follows: The scholar who reflects credit on his parents, the farmer supplies the food, the mechanic provides shelter, the tradesman is in the place of temptation, and lowest is the soldier, who consumes the produce of others and destroys life.

Officials are distinguished by the dress. There are no lawyers except the magistrates, and very few educated physicians. Trade guilds are organized down to the beggar. Wages are low—six to ten cents per day for common laborers, and twelve to twenty-five cents for artisans. Machinery is scarce. Men or women help the various kinds of beasts to plow or draw loads. "The Chinese are mostly agriculturists." On their small tracts of fertilized, well-tilled land they produce the cereals, many American vegetables and fruits. The opium poppy, tea and silk are important products. Fish, frogs and water fowls feed the millions on the rivers and lakes. Superstition has hindered the development of the rich mines of ores and coal. The fact that the deep shafts now being put down do not disturb spirits is a severe blow at superstition.

Education is highly honored. It is estimated that only ten per cent. of the men and five per cent. of the women can read. One writer states that only one man in a hundred and one woman in a thousand can read. The learned know little of science, the world's history, political economy, general literature and art. The main subjects are Chinese History and the Classics. Memory and patience make up for brilliancy and fit them for the severe civil service examinations. Penned up in little cells, they write long essays on the classics, Chinese law or history. Imagine the surprise when, under the late Emperor, a question was given on Noah and the flood. A single mistake in punctuation brings failure. They grant three degrees, corresponding to Bachelor, Master and Doctor. The latter assures some kind of appointment. The Chinese are awakening, but dense ignorance shrouds the masses.

The Religion of China is conglomerate. Nature worship is prevalent as shown by charms, fortune telling by animals, and worship of sacred animals. Mohammedanism binds 20,000,000 people. It teaches of one God, but it does not call him "Father." Human life is determined by fate, as indicated by Allah's throwing one piece of clay downward, saying, "These to eternal fire," and one upward, with "These to Paradise." The essential thing in Chinese religion is ancestor worship. At death one of the three spirits goes to Hades, one into the grave, and the other into the prepared ancestral tablet, which is placed in the home or ancestral temple to be appeased by offerings. If one will but worship his ancestors he may be a Taoist, Confucianist, Buddhist, or all. The doctrines of Taoism are contained in a book half as large as Mark's Gospel, written by the founder, Lao-tzu, about 500 B.C. Tao is the way, the sum of all being, natural phenomena and moral good. Formerly teaching comparison, economy and humility, it now has its magic, superstition and priestcraft. Confucianism, the "Sect of the Lettered," is largely political and social. It teaches five relations of life—prince and minister, father and son, husband and wife, elder and younger brother and friend to friend. Key words are benevolence, righteousness, propriety, knowledge and truth. Though largely atheistic, it recognizes worship to "Heaven and the Supreme Ruler." Buddhism teaches moral maxims, but exercises most power by its doctrine of transmigration of souls. God is impersonal, unknowable, unapproachable. Man must reap what he sows, for no Saviour redeems. Heaven is annihilation. Truly, "China's millions" need the Gospel.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

FRIENDS' LIGHT ARTILLERY.

The above makes a strange combination of words, but this is an age of military terms. In church work we may learn some useful lessons in strategy, equipment and obedience from the army.

It was at Western Yearly Meeting, Ninth month 17th, at 7 a.m. There had been a great Endeavor meeting the night before. Hundreds were stirred to renewed and better service, and about fifty responded at this early hour to a call of David Hadley, the Superintendent of Evangelistic Work. Stirring hymns were sung, and the superintendent unfolded a plan (born of God) for the campaign of the day.

Provision had been made for able speakers to "Hold the Fort" in the meeting house. Some of the most experienced veterans had been assigned as heavy artillery to "The Tent" and "The Campus" respectively.

Ten thousand people were expected, and they could not all hear the Gospel in these three places.

Three squads of workers—volunteers—were called for to be prepared to go into the field, to plant their battery where the people could be massed, to change location if necessary, and to see to it that every person on the grounds heard the truth in song, preaching, Scripture, prayer and testimony.

These squads were quickly made up; the first had a captain selected from New York, the second from Iowa, and the third from Ohio. There were about ten in each company, consisting of preachers, evangelists, singers and workers, both men and women. They withdrew, and each section prepared themselves by prayer and special consecration.

It was the superintendent's plan to put out a line of skirmishers; also to direct people, induce them to go to some place of meeting, and to do personal work; but few volunteered to do this and it was abandoned. Meanwhile the excursion trains, four-horse loads, carriages, buggies and bicycles brought the assembling thousands.

At ten o'clock the great battle opened. At 10.15, so as to give every one time to become settled, the "light artillery" moved out. No. 1 opened under the deep shade between the tent and campus; No. 2 on the south side of the street; No. 3 far down the main street, under the ample awnings of the business houses. Singing, prayer, exhortations, short, bright and winsome, were given. The great wheel of interested listeners closed in around the dry goods boxes on which the speakers stood. Hand-shaking, personal conversation, testimony and loving entreaty packed the eighty minutes, and thousands who came only to visit and picnic were stirred by the vigorous earnestness of these men and women, who caught them where they were and pressed the claims of the crucified Saviour.

At two o'clock the same general plan was followed by the same workers, but they changed locations, all coming on the grounds. Two other squads could have been well used, and this plan, so successfully inaugurated, commended itself to everybody. A prominent citizen said it was the best managed and best controlled crowd he had ever seen there. "Meetings were better than police." This plan gives the visiting workers, as well as yearly meeting ministers, workers, evangelists and Endeavorers a chance to work. I have seen some people get blue and discouraged from sheer inactivity, and go from yearly meeting lean rather than filled. This may never be so in the future if they are efficiently organized for personal work. George Fox preached in the street and in the fields. How many present day Friends dare follow his example now?

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

It is universal testimony that Western Yearly Meeting of 1899 is the best one ever held at Plainfield. Barring slight exception only, there has never been so much definite teaching, tending to solidify the church in doctrine and produce practical, well-balanced Christian living. The Word has been preached with power, believers have been strengthened in the faith and hope of the gospel, and souls have been borne into the kingdom of our Lord. We have had the encouragement of an unusual number of the Lord's servants from beyond our own limits, thirty-four ministers and workers being present with credentials from other yearly meetings. Many of these have been young people, a fact which has added much to the inspiration of the occasion. Not the youth, however, alone, but the presence of some of the old veterans of the cross has been like a holy benediction to the meeting. Older in the service than others, perhaps, was John Henry Douglas, who, having spent the summer visiting the various meetings of the yearly meeting, came up to the annual feast for a "final round-up," as he expressed it.

Notwithstanding the number of visitors has been large, there has been an entire absence of anything like friction, and each one, possessing the greatest freedom, has simply done his part in whatever service the Master required.

A unique feature of gospel work was the organization for special service, in order to reach more largely the thousands that thronged the grounds on First-day. In addition to the usual regular services on that day, various bands of young Christian workers, organized by the Committee on Devotional Meetings, stationed themselves at different places over the grounds and on the streets of the town, and by song, prayer and preaching, brought hundreds under the influence of the gospel that otherwise would not have been reached.

The attendance of the membership has been beyond precedent, so far as later years are concerned, and there is hope that the home meetings will catch the fire and inspiration necessary for a successful gospel campaign, as those present go back to take up the local work.

During the business sessions the power and presence of God, through the Holy Spirit, has been manifested. Truly, He has given us a good yearly meeting, for which we praise His holy name.

On Fifth-day, Ninth month 14th, the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight held three sessions, which were largely attended. During the year, the burden of evangelistic work had been on many hearts, and there was a fear that in a few instances some of our evangelists were not working to the honor of truth or to the upbuilding of the church. For this reason, perhaps, the program committee had assigned for discussion the topic, "The Present-Day Evangelist," which was treated in a strong paper by Eliza C. Armstrong. She showed very clearly that evangelism is of the Lord, and the church that abandons it will lose power, and ultimately the desire even, for soul winning. At the same time some dangers growing out of the present system were freely admitted, and opposition to the present-day tendency toward sensationalism was strongly expressed. As a result of the discussion, the meeting decided to ask the yearly meeting to reaffirm its declaration of 1895, that local meetings in inviting pastors or evangelists must know that such have the sanction of the Evangelistic Board. This was subsequently done by unanimous decision. A letter from Esther Tuttle Pritchard, who was detained at home by illness, was read, conveying Christian greeting to the meeting.

At the evening session, John Henry Douglas spoke at length on "Why Am I A Friend," interpreting Quakerism to be "Ancient Christianity Revived." His points were established by tracing the history of the church from Pentecost to the present time, showing that God's dealings with the truly spiritual church have always been the same, and that the apostolic idea has found embodiment in the ideal Friends' Church, both as regards doctrine and the manifestation of power.

Sixth-day.—The eight o'clock devotional service was held in the tent, and was in charge of Delia Rees, who preached the Word with unusual power. This service as well as similar ones each day through the yearly meeting, partook of a revivalistic character, and many souls were richly and definitely blessed.

At ten o'clock was held the first business session of the yearly meeting. Minutes were read at this and subsequent sessions for the following persons, whose services were richly blessed: John Henry Douglas, of Oregon; Delia Rees and her companion, Anna B. Macomber, of Rhode Island; Willis R. Hotchkiss, a missionary for five years in British East Africa; Mary A. Hill, of Ohio; Arthur B. Chilson, of Ohio; A. Edward Kelsey, of Rhode Island; Eli G. Parker and wife, of Iowa; Nathan and Esther Frame, of Ohio; Miriam Johnson, of Kansas; Reba Jenkins, of Ohio; Oliver M. Frazier, of Nebraska; E. Howard Brown and wife, of Iowa; Thomas F. Andrew, of North Carolina; Maud Milner, of Wilmington Yearly Meeting; Solomon Haworth, of Iowa; Benjamin H. Hutchins, Indiana; W. Mahlon Perry and wife, of Ohio; Harley M. Moore, of Iowa; Lewis Reynolds, of North Carolina; Alpheus Trueblood, of Indiana; Henry Orville Jones, Indiana; Henry Dalrymple, Indiana; Seth Stafford, Indiana; Sarah C. Hadley, of Wilmington; William P. Haworth and wife, of Kansas; J. Lindley Spicer, of Cincinnati; and Louisa Rush, of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

One of the quarterly meetings asked that the office of superintendent of evangelistic and pastoral work be abolished. As the yearly meeting decided this matter adversely two years ago, the meeting declined to consider it again this year.

At the afternoon session, the delegates reported on officers as follows: Principal clerk, Thomas C. Brown; recording clerk, S. E. Nicholson; reading clerks, Sarah J. King and Melissa Emery; announcing clerk; Lewis E. Stout; railroad secretary, Fowell B. Hill. The reading of the London general epistle brought forth many expressions of appreciation, that this was one of the best ever sent out by London Yearly Meeting.

Rosa E. Brown read the report of Friends' Boarding Home for Girls, located in Indianapolis, and made the happy announcement that William H. Ballard, a member of the meeting in Indianapolis, would very soon erect and equip a new building for the home, in memory of his deceased daughter, to be known as "The Bertha Ballard."

Seventh-day.—The forenoon session was given up to the report of the evangelistic department, presented by the superintendent, David Hadley. While the past year has not been one of great religious demonstration, the reports showed that much fruitage had been gathered, and that the church is alive to the importance of evangelistic and pastoral work. The superintendent reported that nearly $200 had accumulated during the year in the building fund, which was established one year ago. A collection and subscription was taken for the use of the evangelistic board the coming year, and without undue pressure or urging, the sum of $710 was easily secured.

During the afternoon reports were read of the Bible school and educational work, by the superintendent, Robert E. Pretlow, and of Earlham College.

The need of better equipped teachers in the Bible schools was strongly urged; likewise, the importance of Friends patronizing and supporting their academies, of which there are four in the yearly meeting. This latter point was strongly emphasized in the discussion which followed, and it is believed that a greatly increased interest in denominational education will be manifested. The Earlham reports were entirely satisfactory. A deficiency of $1,500 was shown, owing to the interest that is being paid on the building debt. The total attendance last year, not including the summer school, was 244; while President Mills announced that the opening of the present year was one of the most auspicious in the history of the college. The Biblical department at Earlham, under the care of Prof. Elbert Russell, was strongly endorsed in the discussion, and the yearly meeting continues its assistance in maintaining the Friends' Bible Institute, held at Earlham each summer, under the joint management of Western, Indiana and Wilmington Yearly Meetings.

Seventh-day evening was given over to the Christian Endeavor Union for a public meeting, which was largely attended. The meeting was addressed by Prof. Elbert Russell, on "The Message of the Friends to the World." This is not merely a protest against prevailing conditions, nor the maintenance of certain forms, but rather it is the message of Christ to the world; a positive proclamation of redemption from sin and guidance by the Holy Spirit.

The Sabbath day was an ideal one, and brought a large concourse of people, the attendance being estimated as high as 10,000. The day's work began by a strong sermon at the eight o'clock tent meeting by Esther G. Frame, taking as a theme, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." The message came as a fit preparation for the many services of the day that followed, at which, in the house, at the tent, at the reform school, and a number of places on the campus, at least twenty sermons pointed the way of salvation. The day closed with a large meeting in the house in charge of Nathan and Esther Frame.

Second-day.—The state of the church was considered by reading the queries and answers, followed by a discussion in which much excellent advice was given, emphasizing the importance of attending meeting, and cautioning the membership against gossiping and participating in worldly and wicked practices. The statistical reports were quite imperfect, but the total membership was given as 16,179, a slight increase over last year.

The committee on divorce laws reported some progress, and was continued for another two years.

At the afternoon session, Sarah J. King read the report of the Women's Foreign Mission Society. This was an interesting session, the report showing that not only is the Mexican work in splendid condition, but largely through the distribution of literature in Havana, Cuba, from the Mexican mission, two churches calling themselves Friends have been organized in that city, and have asked to be joined with the Mexican meetings, and this without the aid of a single Friends' missionary. It was felt, indeed, that God is opening up a field of work in Cuba for us in a marvelous way.

The yearly meeting decided to join with the American board in opening up new mission fields in the West Indies or Africa, or both, and appropriated $200 for that purpose. The finances of the yearly meeting were found to be in excellent condition, there being more than $2,000 in the treasury. The sum of $5,800 was directed to be raised to meet all expenses the coming year. Joseph R. Evans and Mary T. Pyle were reappointed treasurers.

At the evening session Frank King reported on the home mission and temperance work, which was followed by a temperance address by Lenora M. Lake, of St. Louis. Not only is she a good orator, but additional interest was aroused from the fact that she is a Catholic. The delegates to the Anti-Saloon League convention reported; S. E. Nicholson and Charles L. Jessup were appointed delegates to attend the next one at Chicago.

Thursday.—Some friction was manifested over a proposed appropriation to assist in the attempt now being made to establish in the courts of Indiana the unconstitutionality of the liquor license system and kindred matters, some opposition being manifest in unexpected quarters, but the meeting finally endorsed the effort being put forth, and raised $125 to assist in the work.

By a request of the home mission and temperance committee, the home mission work is given over to the evangelistic board, while the temperance work is constituted a separate department.

The work at Mountain Home, Alabama, was given over to the care of the evangelistic board, bringing that meeting under the care directly of the yearly meeting.

During the afternoon, the committee on books, tracts and peace was read, showing that some progress had been made, and a good deal of literature distributed.

The much vexed question of the alteration of the yearly meeting house came up as the report of the committee. It was agreed to move the partition twenty feet further west, allowing Plainfield Meeting the use of the west third, while the yearly meeting, when in session, will use the eastern two-thirds. The windows will be cut down and the floor remodeled. It was decided to remove the reference library of the yearly meeting to Friends' meeting house on Alabama Street, Indianapolis. It is thought it can be better cared for there, and also a Friends' Historical Society, recently organized there, is allowed access to its volumes.

A proposition was presented, signed by several leading members, asking the yearly meeting to adopt parliamentary usage during its sessions. The proposition was directed to be printed in the minutes, and referred to the meeting next year for action.

At the evening session an interesting address was given by Willis Hotchkiss, the missionary from Africa.

Fourth-day.—During the forenoon there were public meetings for worship in the house and tent, John Henry Douglas, Alpheus Trueblood, Delia Rees and others participating.

In the afternoon memorials were read for Elizabeth D. Reynolds, Isaac Roberts, James J. Harvey, Amy D. Cooper and A. H. Pickering, deceased the past year.

A resolution was passed deploring certain actions of the government in Alaska, and condemning the decision of Attorney-General Griggs on the army canteen.

The evening session was a fitting close to this most excellent week of blessing, many joining in a hearty praise service to the Lord. The heads of departments the coming year are as follows: Superintendent Evangelistic Board, David Hadley, Plainfield, Ind.; Bible Schools and Education, Robert E. Pretlow, Throntown, Ind.; Temperance, Lindley M. Wells, Monrovia, Ind.; Foreign Missions, Sarah J. King, Carmel, Ind.; Books, Tracts and Peace, Evan Hadley, Plainfield, Ind.; Social Purity, Eunice Furnas; Y. P. S. C. E., Irvin King, Bloomingdale, Ind.

One item of interest, partaking of a unique character, must not be overlooked. On Seventh-day evening, Charles E. Newlin presented to the clerk of the meeting a gavel with an interesting history. The mallet was made from the sill of the first Friends' meeting house erected in Marion County, and the handle was made from the railing in the same building. It was an interesting presentation, to which the clerk, Thomas C. Brown, responded fittingly.

MARRIED.

CONNELL—LARKIN—WILLIAMS.—Eighth month 30th, 1899, at the residence of Emma S. Townsend, Martinsville, Ohio, Oscar Connell and Effie Larkin and F. Leslie Connell and Margaret Williams, of Samantha, Ohio.

News from the Field.

Friends' University, at Wichita, Kansas, has opened its second year with most encouraging prospects. The enrollment is three times as large as at the opening one year ago. H. C. Fellow, Ph.D.; Lucy Francisco, A.M., of Earlham, and Laura Kirby, A.M., have been added to the staff of teachers. The opening exercises were attended by 1,200 persons, and were of a very interesting character.

The new audience hall has been named "Russell Hall," in memory of James M. Davis' little son, who died some time ago.

Guilford College has opened with the largest attendance in the history of the college.

Haverford College has received $25,000 from Clementine Cope to establish a Fellowship Fund. The new dormitory just completed at Haverford College has been named Lloyd Hall, in honor of Thomas Lloyd.

A Friend from America, who was present at the last London Meeting for Sufferings, writes to us as follows: "There were several subjects of interest under discussion. The anxiety about the aspect of affairs in the Transvaal, which is felt in all circles here, is keenly shared in by Friends, and was earnestly discussed in the meeting. Finally, H. S. Newman suggested the propriety of the Meeting for Sufferings addressing a letter to Lord Salisbury, as the representative of the British nation, and the idea met with ready acceptance. Five Friends were promptly named to withdraw and frame a suitable letter to be presented for the sanction of the meeting. In about half an hour the Friends chosen for this important service returned, and their letter was read. With some slight changes it was fully approved."

The following clipping from the London "Daily News" gives a resumé of the letter to Lord Salisbury:

APPEAL FROM THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

"The Executive Committee of the Society of Friends has forwarded to Lord Salisbury a minute in which it is stated that after recognizing the many difficulties which have beset the government, and which still tend to hinder a satisfactory settlement, the society recalls with gratitude the successful efforts of Lord Salisbury and his colleagues on former occasions to secure peace when the obstacles seemed no less formidable. The minute states that no good end could be gained by an appeal to arms, which could not be better secured by friendly negotiations. It was difficult to contemplate without horror the prolonged evil results of a conflict which might arouse long-lived hostility between the English and Dutch races, and prejudicially affect the well-being of South Africa. The society desired to strengthen the hands of the government, believing that by patience, wisdom and tact the government might be successful in securing the blessings of peace, and to this end offered a prayer to Almighty God."

From a personal letter full of encouragement recently received we print the following paragraph: "I want to say how much I approve of the editorial in the last issue—'Why it Should Mean Much to be a Friend'—and the sentiments contained are so much in accord with my own mind that I want to say so. I believe, as thou says, we ought to be fully persuaded of our own interpretation of Scripture, and then that we have a positive message to proclaim, antagonizing no one, attacking no one, exalting ourselves above no one, yet giving a ringing message of what seems to us the true reception of the religion of Jesus Christ. Our prayers go with thee in thy work."

The Friends' Historical Society, of Indianapolis, was organized in that city last winter and has already proved a useful, valuable and interesting organization. Its purpose is to collect and preserve valuable documents and records of the Friends, and to collect and publish important facts bearing on the history of Friends in Indiana. This Society hopes also to stimulate the organization of other similar societies. The first annual reunion of this Society was held at Plainfield, Indiana, Eighth month 26th, and was a most successful and enjoyable occasion. The following program was given:

10 o'clock a.m.—Historical Sketch of White Lick Quarterly Meeting, David Johnson, Mooresville; Historical Sketch of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, Seth Mills, Valley Mills; Recitation, "Drab Bonnets," Marcia Furnas, Camby; Historical Sketch of Plainfield Quarterly Meeting, Cyrus May Hobbs, Bridgeport; Short Reminiscences, two minute speeches.

Dinner.

1.30 p.m.—Historical Sketch of Danville Quarterly Meeting, David Hadley, Plainfield; Recitation, "Our Meeting," Florence Green, Plainfield; Address, "Secrets of Quaker Influence," Eli Ritter, Indianapolis.

This program in the forenoon was varied by recitations and two-minute talks by some of the older members, in which interesting personal reminiscences were given. A table, something like one hundred feet long, had been built under the old trees in the grove adjoining the yearly meeting house, where the exercises were held, and when the several hundred guests gathered about it, they found it groaning under the load of things prepared by the good Quaker women of the country.

LICK BRANCH MEETING HOUSE.

The audience assembled again after dinner, and C. E. Newlin, of Indianapolis, presented a gavel to the chairman of the Historical Society, R. W. Furnas, on behalf of himself and W. S. Doan, of Irvington. A few weeks ago they had ridden out on their wheels to the ancient site of the Lick Branch Friends' Meeting House, a picture of which was exhibited, and secured a piece of one of the oak sills of the old building which was constructed of hewed logs, without the use of nails, and which served the Friends of the neighborhood as a place of worship for more than a quarter of a century. The mallet of the gavel was made from this oak sill, and the handle from a part of the railing of the gallery behind which the minister stood when preaching. The building was constructed some time between 1828 and 1833, and is believed to have been the first one constructed for a place of worship in Marion County. A photograph of the old building exhibited at the meeting was taken fifteen or twenty years ago, after it had been used as a stable for several years. It was situated about two miles and a half southeast of Bridgeport, on the farm of Robert Kenworthy.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Batavia, Genesee County, N. Y.—Our friend, David Little, a minister from Collins Meeting, attended Elba Monthly Meeting in Eighth month, held in Batavia. He remained in the evening and conducted an evangelistic service. He also attended our First-day meeting, and addressed the Christian Endeavor Society in the evening. All the services of our brother were very acceptable and edifying.

H. H. LEGGETT.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Edgar West, of Jamaica, who has been in Iowa some months, attended yearly meeting. He expects to attend Penn College this year.

L. Maria Dean will remain at Pleasant Plain the coming year as pastor. The Friends at that place are expecting to build a parsonage this fall.

Kellogg and Center Bible Schools are supporting a girl in Jamaica Training School.

There are 12 Home Departments, with 136 members, in Iowa Yearly Meeting, an increase of 11 Home Departments and 124 members over last year.

New Sharon Bible School is supporting a girl in the Jamaica Training School.

Matilda Cox, of Western Yearly Meeting, began a series of meetings at Richland, Iowa, Ninth month 16th.

Fred Comfort will remain at Richmond as pastor another year, which will be his fifth year.

Hubbard Bible School is supporting a girl in the Jamaica Training School.

A reunion of the former students of the Malone Training School, Cleveland, was held during Iowa Yearly Meeting. The following students were present: J. Edgar Williams, Willis Hotchkiss, Arthur Chilson, William Kitch and wife, Clinton Reynolds, James Pickard, Thomas O. Roake, Viola Smith, Anna Draper, Phebe Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Crosbie, Edgar P. Ellyson and Hays Prickett. There were two others in attendance at yearly meeting, but they did not get to the meeting.

Zenas L. Martin has been appointed by the Iowa Yearly Meeting Missionary Board to represent Iowa in the management of the proposed mission to be established jointly by a number of the American yearly meetings.

Susan E. Allen, who has been for several months at Le Roy, Iowa, has received a call as pastor at Minneapolis.

A "Missionary Tent" was used to good advantage at Iowa Yearly Meeting this year.

Levi Rees, who has faithfully served as pastor at Oskaloosa Meeting for three years past, has recently removed to Thorntown, Indiana. Shortly before leaving he was given a farewell reception at the home of A. F. N. Hambleton.

Iowa Yearly Meeting appropriated $200 for constructing a vault in which to store the valuable books and records of the yearly meeting and the subordinate meetings. The vault is to be built in the basement of Penn College.

Marshalltown, Iowa.—Nothing perhaps did more to characterize the late Iowa Yearly Meeting than did the presence and words of Willis Hotchkiss, a temporarily returned missionary from Mombossa, East British Africa. He is a native of Cleveland, Ohio.

His attitude toward God is one of absolute self-abandonment to Him to do, to be, and to suffer His will. He expects to spend his life in missionary work in benighted East British Africa. The missionary spirit in Iowa Yearly Meeting was greatly augmented by his presence and ministry during its late sessions.

The recital of his illustrative stories—stories brilliantly illustrative of the power of God to keep those who trust in Him—stories of deliverance from the lion, the lioness and the rhinoceros, where human effort alone would have been as nothing—thrilled the hearts of the people. And they were moved to wonder and admiration as they listened to the method and hours chosen by two of the natives to supply him and his men with food at the risk of life when the tribe with whom he worked, through prejudice, had blockaded all the lines of food supplies. Nothing so beautifies human life as deeds of kindness springing from love to God and to men. The manifestation of such love, such self-sacrifice, as was shown by the one above introduced, touches the sublime in the spiritual realm.

E. B. MENDENHALL.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Marion Quarterly Meeting was held 8th, 9th and 10th of Ninth month.

On Sixth-day we had the company of Wm. F. Manley, from Richmond Ind. On Seventh-day, Wm. F. Manley was present with credentials from White Water Monthly Meeting, Richmond. We also had other ministers from adjacent quarterly meetings without credentials.

Brother Manley's text was Heb. 13:11-12, showing that as the body of the beast was burned without the camp for the sanctifying of the people, so also did Christ suffer without the gate that he might sanctify the people with his own blood—a very practical discourse showing the type and the reality.

J. L. Pearson, matron of Southland College, Helena, Arkansas, was present and spoke of the needs of the college, after which there was raised a little more than $40, which it is thought will keep one pupil in the college for one year. We have given this amount for this year, with the probability that we may do so annually until the pupil's education is finished in the college.

Our quarterly meeting superintendent and evangelistic committee gave a satisfactory report of the work done in the past year, notwithstanding our superintendent has been unable to leave home on account of ill health for many weeks. Fannie Elliott, of Fountain City, Ind., attended our quarterly meeting in the interest of Christian Endeavor work. In the opening service Sabbath morning, she read the 19th Psalm. "The heavens declare the glory of God," etc., after which she offered prayer.

W. F. Manley took for the foundation of his sermon Ps. 81—last four verses.

The temperance discourse in the afternoon was delivered by a young man from Taylor University, Upland, Ind. Eph. 5:11 was his text. "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Sabbath evening was given to Fannie Elliott in the interest of Christian Endeavor.

J. R. S.

Jennie L. Pearson, matron of Southland College, Ark., is spending some time visiting in Indiana Yearly Meeting, stirring up the people on their duty to the colored people of the south. She spent a few days visiting some special friends at Marion and while here did some good work for the college. She was given the privilege to speak at quarterly meeting on the ninth, and told in such a graphic way of their needs and the great good the college is doing for the colored people and so deeply impressed the quarterly meeting that in about five minutes we raised enough money to support one student in the school next year and placed the money with her to be bestowed upon whomsoever they thought most needy and worthy. On the evening of the twelfth, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society gave an informal reception to Jennie Pearson at the home of Richard Haworth, where about 60 guests from the first and second churches assembled and listened to a very instructive talk on the varied experiences in connection with the work at Southland. About 100 pictures were exhibited showing all kinds of actual life in the South. Light refreshments were served and all felt well paid for the evenings entertainment and a deeper interest in the colored people than ever before.

Fannie Elliott, secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union of Indiana Yearly Meeting, attended Marion Quarterly Meeting in the interests of Christian Endeavor and visited most of the Christian Endeavor societies in the quarter. Her visit was well received and her messages very much strengthened the Endeavorers of the quarterly meeting.

News and Events.

For some time Havana has been annoyed with strikes of greater or less importance, but now a general strike is in progress which has already assumed serious proportions. It is estimated that there are 12,000 striking masons, painters, carpenters, cartmen and laundry workers. The cartmen also went out last week, thus paralyzing the wholesale business houses. The reason given by the latter is the unfair treatment they have been receiving at the hands of the police, a majority being Spaniards. Of all the strikes, that of the cartmen is said to be the most justifiable. Considering the large number of men now out of employment, it is remarkable that there are no disorders.

Governor-General Brooke has issued a circular directing that the only legal holidays, so far as business documents are concerned, shall be New Year's Day, Christmas, Holy Thursday, Good Friday and Sunday. This order was necessary owing to the large number of saints' days and the frequent attempts to defraud by documents signed on those days. It will not, however, interfere with people observing any days they desire.

The National Export Exposition in Philadelphia, opened on the 14th inst. The purpose of this exposition is the spread of our mechanical and agricultural industries and American products generally throughout the markets of the world, and thus to increase and widen our export trade. Hundreds of distinguished visitors from all parts of the country were present, including Admiral Sampson and the officers of his fleet, then stationed in Philadelphia. The attendance during the first day was about 25,000. Since then the attendance has reached as high as 30,000 in one day. Some complaint has been made that the exposition is not ready to receive visitors, that exhibitors have been tardy in getting their displays ready, that the buildings are not entirely finished, that the walks and grounds surrounding are in a very unsatisfactory condition, etc.; but it is a generally recognized fact that this exposition was much farther advanced when opened than is usually the case with large exhibitions. In the case of the exposition in Chicago, in 1894, it was weeks before the finishing touches had been given to make a complete whole.

Alfred Dreyfus was pardoned by the French Council of Ministers last week. He was granted his liberty on the 20th, freedom thus being given to one of the most wronged men in all modern history. Deep satisfaction must be felt by all his sympathizers that he is no longer subjected to the cruel machinations of his enemies, but it is as strongly to be hoped that the time will come when the real plotters and traitors are brought to justice and Dreyfus himself is formally freed of the unjust stigma which cannot wholly be wiped out by a mere pardon. As he himself said when pardoned, "Liberty is nothing to me without honor. From to-day I shall continue to seek reparation for the frightful judicial error of which I remain the victim. I wish France to know by a definite judgment that I am innocent. My heart will only be at rest when there remains not a single Frenchman who imputes to me the abominable crime perpetrated by another." Dreyfus is now living comfortably in a villa at Carpentras, in France. It is reported that he will shortly visit America, and will go to San Antonio, Texas, to regain his lost health. He would undoubtedly meet with a cordial reception in any part of the United States.

The case of Captain Oberlin M. Carter, convicted by court-martial over a year ago of conspiring with contractors to defraud the government, is now more prominently before the public than ever before. Charges were first preferred against Captain Carter in August, 1897, by the engineer who succeeded him in Savannah harbor when he became military attache of the American embassy in London. They were referred to a board of engineers, who reported that he had allowed fraudulent claims aggregating $2,500,000. A court-martial was summoned which began its sessions in January, 1898, and did not conclude them until April. The court, which was composed of such men as General Otis and Judge Advocate Colonel Thomas F. Barr, found him guilty, and sentenced him to dismissal from the army, a fine of $5,000, and imprisonment for five years. Upon the claim of his attorneys that he was the innocent victim of star chamber proceedings, President McKinley submitted the records of the trial to ex-Senator Edmunds, who is reported to have confirmed the findings of the court-martial. Final action in the case has long been delayed, but it is stated that when ex-Attorney-General Wayne MacVeagh, one of Carter's attorneys, shall have been given a hearing this week by the President, the decision will be known.

A YELLOW RIBBON TEN MILES LONG.

The Silphium Laciniatum, or rosin weed, is a plant that grows abundantly in southern Kansas, as in most places in the Middle and Western States, but in that locality it seems to be more vigorous and grows to an immense size. Near a stream of water or in damp places, and where the thick sod is broken for them, either by the plow or otherwise, they spring up as if by magic, and in the summer and fall are loaded with large, yellow blossoms, giving a soft, golden glow to the clear atmosphere of the prairies.

While on a visit to a brother in Winfield, Kansas, a few years ago, my little niece Carrie came to me one day and said:

"Auntie, don't you want me to tell you a pretty story?"

"Yes, dear," I said, "I should be delighted to hear a story from you."

So she proceeded to tell me this pretty incident.

"We once had in our county a yellow ribbon ten miles long!" And then she laughed merrily at my look of astonishment, for she was a very truthful little girl and of a rather serious turn of mind.

She went on to say that the county commissioners wished to make, or lay out, a road across the county for ten miles. The surveyors came with their surveying outfit to begin the road, and brought with them a great strong team of horses and a sod plow. As they went along measuring the road, a man followed with the plow, turning the sod and leaving one unbroken moist furrow.

The next spring, when the rain came, the seeds of the rosin weed came up as thick as they could stand in this furrow, and the following summer and fall they were almost weighted down with their bright yellow blossoms. And sure enough there was a "yellow ribbon ten miles long."

But the most wonderful thing is the wise provision which God has made for fuel on these broad, treeless prairies. The little black, hard seeds of the rosin weed cannot germinate under the thick, dry sod. The farmer has only to break up the sod and his fuel springs from the ground at his feet. The stalks are full of rosin and the seeds of oil. I was told that three or four tons of this weed pressed and dried would supply a family with fuel for a year. They use great iron rollers for pressing the plants. The winds and sun soon dry it, and it is ready to be stored for use.

As we flew across the prairie in the cars, I often noticed great fields of this plant growing thick as corn, sometimes surrounded by a fence. I marveled that people should let their fields run so to weeds until I was informed that was their fuel. —Sarah S. Chapman, in "Advance."

PUSHING HIS WAY.

"One day a generation ago a curious vehicle rolled into a Wisconsin town," says the "Youth's Companion." "Its wheels were solid pieces of wood sawed from a round log, its axles small unhewed trees, upon which rested a planed log bearing a box of clothing and a yellow-haired, bright-eyed boy, driving an indescribable horse. The boy was a Scandinavian emigrant whose parents lived in a neighboring woods, and he had come to the town with a few dollars and much determination to get an education. This was the beginning of the career of Knute Nelson, the chief of one of the political parties of Minnesota and one of its United States Senators. It may be doubted if a single youth who starts to school this fall will do so with fewer material advantages than this son of Scandinavia. How many will climb as high?"

London is enjoying a pleasant smile over a reported adventure of Mr. Rudyard Kipling and Mr. Thomas Hardy. It seems that Mr. Hardy took Mr. Kipling to look over a house which it was thought would suit him. "When Mr. Kipling moved out of earshot Mr. Hardy observed to the occupant, 'I may mention to you that this gentleman is no other than Mr. Rudyard Kipling.' 'Is that so?' she replied; 'I never heard the name before.' Presently Mr. Kipling, in turn, found himself alone with the lady, and remarked: 'Possibly you may not be aware that the gentleman who brought me here to-day is Mr. Hardy, the eminent author.' 'O, indeed,' was her reply; 'I don't know his name.'"—"Christian Advocate."

FOOD AND WEATHER.

Temperature Increased or Reduced by Food.

The old army ration for the tropics has been very sharply criticized for the reason that it consists of articles of food that any person even slightly acquainted with the elements of food knows is not adapted to the needs of the human system in hot weather. Nature shows forth in the selection of food by inhabitants of various countries; for instance, the Esquimaux in a cold climate selects heavy, carbonaceous foods, tallow, bacon and such; while the Hindoo and inhabitants of hot countries turn to the cereals for sustenance.

We should follow this hint of nature, and particularly in hot weather should avoid much butter, meat or any of that class of food. Perhaps a little meat once a day is not amiss, even in hot weather, but the breakfast and lunch should be made of fruit, one or two slices of entire wheat bread and some Grape-Nuts and cream. Grape-Nuts are mentioned because they furnish the ideal cereal food in a most palatable and delicious form, in addition to which they are ready cooked and require no attention whatever from the cook.

A person can pass through weather that may be intensely hot, in a comfortable manner, if the food be properly selected, and the above suggestions can be put into practice with most excellent results.

LOOK AT YOUR LETTER BEFORE MAILING.

The Dead Letter Office, at Washington, is a busy place. The past year 6,312,731 pieces of mail matter were sent to the dead-letter office, making an average receipt of about 21,000 letters and parcels for each working day. During this period more than 85,000 pieces were dispatched either with insufficient postage or none at all, 32,000 bore no address whatever, 34,000 were misdirected.

Perhaps the most incredible part is that in the neighborhood of $40,000 in actual cash should have been confined to the letters during the last year, and harder still to credit that the most exhaustive efforts failed to find the owners of one-fourth of that amount. In addition to the money contained in letters during the same period something like $10,000 was found loose in the mails. It is officially styled "loose money."

It would be well for our patrons, in view of the above exhibit, to have their names and complete address printed on the upper left hand corner of their envelopes, as the Post Office Department urges, for then letters deficient in any particular would be returned to the writer. Letters should never be directed with a lead pencil. Aside from its being a violation of the postal laws, rendering such letters unavailable, the pencil marks are liable to be defaced in the mails. This is also true of postal cards. All letter writers should form the habit of carefully looking at their letters before dropping them in the box, to see that the necessary stamp is all right, and the address plainly written.—Zion's Watchman."

It is told that a telegraph operator at Springfield, Mass., was kept at his post of duty for many hours receiving special news. After losing two night's sleep, he was relieved from duty to get some rest. He went to his room at the hotel, and soon was fast asleep. When the time came for him to return to his instrument, he could not be awakened. Loud pounding on the door did not result in arousing him. An operator then, with his knife handle, tapped "Springfield" on the door, in imitation of the clicking of the instrument. At once the sleeping operator sprang from his bed, and was soon ready to continue his work. It is said that firemen hear in their sleep the signal calling them to duty, while they sleep right through any number of signals which do not concern them. In an article on "Heroes Who Fight Fire," in "The Century," Jacob A. Riis tells of a fire department chief who has a gong right over his head at his home, every stroke of which he hears, although he never hears the baby, while his wife hears the baby if it so much as stirs in its crib, but does not hear the gong. The gentle whisper of Conscience is sufficient to call to action the one who has trained himself to hear that voice. A single text from God's Word is a louder call than all the noises of the world to one who trains himself to obey that voice.—"The Presbyterian."

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXCELLENT SERVICE TO POINTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY, the chief as well as the popular artery of travel between Philadelphia and Washington, and all points South and Southwest, maintains a superb service of magnificently equipped trains, which leave Philadelphia daily at 7.20 a.m., 5.34 p.m., and 6.55 p.m., reaching, without change, all the chief Southern cities.

The Washington and Southwestern Vestibule Limited, which has long been famous as one of the handsomest trains in America, now has an added feature of attraction in the form of a beautiful Library and Observation car. This will be very much appreciated by the travelling public, as it affords an opportunity of viewing, under the most favorable circumstances, the charming sub-scenery of the historic Piedmont region, as well as the uplands of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The car is for the use of all passengers holding Pullman tickets on the train, and is handsomely furnished with easy, richly-upholstered, movable chairs. It also has a wide, fully-covered extension platform at the rear, capable of accommodating quite a large number of people, who may prefer to travel in the open air and enjoy the unobstructed view of the whirling panorama.

The Washington and Southwestern Limited leaves Philadelphia at 6.55 p.m., daily, and is composed of Pullman Drawing-Room

Sleeping Cars, to Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Memphis, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, La. In addition to these it carries one first-class thoroughfare coach, as well as a well-appointed Dining-Car, in which meals are served between Philadelphia and New Orleans. In this connection it is worthy of note that the Southern Railway is the only railroad in the South operating a system of dining-cars, and the menu and meals upon them are maintained at the highest standard.

The Washington and Chattanooga Limited of the Southern Railway, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., is another handsome train. It carries through Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans, La., via Lynchburg, Va., and Bristol, Tenn. Combined Café, Parlor and Observation Cars are operated between Radford, Va., and Attalla, Ala. Meals are served in the Café Compartment at all hours on the European plan. Luxurious chairs in the Parlor Compartments are available for passengers at a moderate charge, the observation portion of car affording a most comfortable location for viewing this magnificent scenery. Passengers occupying Pullman cars have use of this car without extra charge.

The New York and Florida Express, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., carries Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., via Charlotte, N. C. Connections are made at Columbia, S. C., with the Charleston Division for Charleston, S. C., and at Trenton Junction for Aiken, S. C.

The United States Fast Mail of the Southern Railway, leaving Washington, D. C., daily, at 11.15 a.m., connecting with train leaving Philadelphia at 7.20 a.m., is one of the most popular trains operated in the South. This is composed of thoroughfare coaches and Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars between Washington, D. C., and New Orleans, La., Jacksonville, Fla., Charlotte, N. C., Augusta, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., with Pullman Sleeping Cars between Salisbury, N. C., and Memphis, Tenn., and Dining-Car between Washington, D. C., and Spartanburg, S. C. Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will be pleased to furnish rates, time-tables, and any further information.

WOULD you rather buy lamp-chimneys, one a week the year round, or one that lasts till some accident breaks it?

Tough glass, Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," almost never break from heat, not one in a hundred.

Where can you get it? and what does it cost?

Your dealer knows where and how much. It costs more than common glass; and may be, he thinks tough glass isn't good for his business.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

BRAVE BOYS MAKE BRAVE MEN.

More than eleven hundred years ago when Germany was peopled with wild, fierce tribes, there grew in one part of the country a gigantic oak, which was dedicated to Thor, the god of Thunder. The pagans worshipped this tree, and at certain seasons held feasts beneath its branches in honor of the god.

Boniface, a brave and zealous missionary, who had long been trying to turn the people to the true God, determined to destroy the tree.

His intention becoming known, an angry multitude rushed to defend it, and Boniface found himself confronted by hundreds of fierce men and women, brandishing their weapons and threatening him with a terrible death if he persisted in his purpose.

Alone and fearless, trusting in his God,
the missionary walked into their midst, and, axe in hand, levelled the first blow at the mighty trunk. The heathen, struck with amazement at his courage, looked on in silence. While they hesitated, a wonderful thing happened. All at once a great wind arose, the tempest seized upon the giant tree, already weakened by sturdy blows, and down it came, scattering the multitude right and left.

Boniface had little more trouble with those people, for they took this as a sign from heaven, and with one accord turned to the God whom Boniface worshipped.

By his one brave, determined act, Boniface won a whole tribe to God, but it was at the peril of his life. "In these days your life is not likely to be endangered by standing up for the right," says the "Children's Friend," after relating this story,
"but you may be chaffed, shunned and per-

AN AUTUMN OUTING.

Gettysburg, Luray, Natural Bridge, Hot Springs, Richmond, and Washington.

An eleven-day personally-conducted tour of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to the Battlefield of Gettysburg, Luray Caverns, Natural Bridge, Virginia Hot Springs, and the cities of Richmond and Washington, will leave New York and Philadelphia in a special train of parlor cars on Thursday, Oct. 19. The party will be in charge of a tourist agent and an experienced chaperon. A whole day will be spent on the Battlefield of Gettysburg, a carriage drive with lectures by an able guide, being included in the ticket. Ample time will be allowed at Luray and Natural Bridge to view the wondrous natural formations, and at the Hot Springs two days will be spent. The season at this great autumn resort in the beautiful mountains of Virginia will be at its height. At Richmond and Washington opportunities will be presented to visit all the points of interest under intelligent guidance.

The round-trip rate, including all necessary expenses, is $65 from New York, $63 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For detailed itinerary apply to Ticket Agents; to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

A DOUBTFUL RETRACTION.

When lately, a newspaper correspondent, in "interviewing" Governor Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, was skilfully attempting to put certain words into the governor's mouth, Colonel Roosevelt said to him, "You may draw as many conclusions as you like, but don't attribute them to me," and then told the following story:

There was once a colored minister who, in delivering a forceful sermon on the sin of theft, said:

"I see before me twelve chicken-thieves, including William Saunders."

William Saunders was naturally incensed at this, and threatened the preacher with personal violence. The minister's friends persuaded him to promise that if the preacher would withdraw the accusation he would not harm him. They then went to the minister who promised them he would withdraw the accusation next Sunday.

Therefore in the pulpit on the following Sunday, the minister said that a remark of his in his last sermon had been the cause of offence, and he would therefore amend it. "What I should have said was this: 'I see before me eleven chicken-thieves, not including William Saunders!'

A good story is told with reference to the publication of a certain Biblical dictionary. The editor is said to have given the article on the Deluge to what he considered a safe hand; but when the article was sent in, it was found to contain views which would certainly have shocked orthodox readers. It had in it too much of science and too little of theology.

What could be done? The volume had to be published forthwith. In this dilemma he put in his dictionary, "Deluge—See Flood."

This, at any rate, postponed the difficulty, and the article on the Flood was given out to a writer who it was thought could be trusted better.

But when this second article came in it was found to be worse than the first, and another postponement was necessary.

The new volume contained another reference: "Flood—See Noah"—the bewildered editor trusting that by the time Noah was reached he would succeed in finding a man who would be able to mingle science and orthodoxy in due degrees.—Baptist Commonwealth.

New England churchyards are a fertile field for those in search of curious epitaphs. A tombstone in Stowe bears this line, indicative of a reticence carried beyond the grave:

"I was somebody—who, is no business of yours."

The Southern Railway Makes Low Rates to Philadelphia, Account the National Export Exposition.

Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, advises the Southern Railway has announced very low rates from points in Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia to Philadelphia and return account the National Export Exposition.

The Southern Railway is also very liberal as to the return limit of these low rate round trip tickets, allowing a limit of thirty days. Mr. Hopkins says the prospects are very favorable for the Exposition to be largely attended from the South.

All information as to rates etc., from any point in the South will be cheerfully furnished by Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut St., Phila.

OUR RED BROTHERS and the

PEACE POLICY of PRESIDENT ULYSSES S. GRANT.

By LAWRIE TATUM, formerly United States Indian Agent.

A most interesting book relating to the history and customs of the Indians, written by one who has mingled with "Our Red Brothers" and who is well equipped for the task he has undertaken. "The prime motive for writing this volume has been to record some important items of history in connection with the Indians and the overruling providence of God, and to show that 'the Peace Policy' in dealing with the Indians, which commenced in 1869, has proved a great blessing to them, to the government, and to people of the nation."

Containing 366 pages, well printed on good paper, neatly bound in cloth, with gold lettering on side and back. Sixteen full page half-tone engravings.

Price, $1.25, post-paid.

NEW YORK UNDER TAMMANY RULE.

"New York Under Tammany Rule" is the title of an informing article which Frank Moss, counsel for the Mazet Investigating Committee, has written for "The Saturday Evening Post," of Philadelphia. After summarizing the notorious methods of Tammany rule, whereby the leaders enrich themselves at the expense of the taxpayer, and run the city of New York as "wide-open" as any Western mining town, Mr. Moss accounts for the helplessness of the law-abiding majority and suggests a means for the overthrow of the Croker regime. This article is one of a series dealing with the municipal affairs of great American cities. It appeared in "The Saturday Evening Post" of September 9th.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

FOR RENT.—To a small family, a well furnished twelve-room house, centrally located, in exchange for gentleman's board. Address, E. M. M., office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

BOARDING.—Three or four Friends can find a pleasant home with good board, in small adult family of Friends, at 2026 Mervine St., Philadelphia. A quiet, pleasant part of the city, convenient to several trolley lines.

I HAVE a very desirable property of twenty acres in the eastside of Wilmington. Splendid orchard. Thirteen inch wall brick house, slate roof, stone foundation, seven rooms, large doors and windows, large rooms, most excellent well of water, cistern, new barn, good land. Fine for poultry farm, fruit garden, or home for family who want the advantages of a location near a Friends' College, and to live near the great center of Friends in Ohio. W. S. Irvin, Wilmington, Ohio.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY—142 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia. On and after Ninth Month 1st, 1899, Friends' Library will be open on week-days from 11.30 a.m. to 2 p.m., and from 3 to 6 p.m.

QUAKERS AS MAKERS OF AMERICA.—This booklet has proved very popular, and has had a wide sale. Our second edition is now nearly exhausted. So long as the booklets last they will be sold as heretofore for 10 cents the copy, postage paid. THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

WE CAN still supply our readers with Spurgeon's Address on George Fox for 10 cents per copy, postage paid. This address on the founder of Friends is by all odds the most eulogistic and pleasing ever delivered by anyone outside the denomination. THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

WANTED.—Anyone with anything to advertise to send us 25 cents for an insertion of a five-line advertisement in this column telling Friends what it is. Fifty cents for two insertions, 75 cents for three, $1.00 for four. Extra lines above five, 5 cents each. Special rates for the quarter year, half year and year, furnished on application. WANTED—men and women to sell Teachers' Bibles and other religious books for Christmas. Our low prices to agents will surprise you. For terms address, Leroy Jay & Co., Box 54, Deming, Indiana.

"As I understand it," said the heathen, "you propose to civilize me?" "Exactly so." "You mean to get me out of habits of idleness and teach me to work?" "That is my idea." "And then lead me to simplify my methods and invent things to make my work lighter?" "Yes." "And next I will become ambitious to get rich, so that I won't have to work at all?" "Naturally." "Well, what's the use of taking such a roundabout way of getting just where I started? I don't have to work now."

TONGUES.

It will be a matter of surprise to some people to hear that as many as four hundred languages (and more) are in use in all parts of the world. Not only is this the case, however, but we are assured by the Rev. J. G. Watt that the Bible has now already been translated into as many tongues.

At the present time he states that the Scriptures are being read in exactly 400 different linguistic versions, and this assertion is made on the very best authority. Mr. Watt has been at considerable pains to form an accurate and thoroughly reliable list, and every name presented was carefully authenticated before being included in the table.

The list, as may be surmised, contains some most extraordinary names, and it is safe to say that at least seventy-five per cent. of the languages mentioned are absolutely unknown by name to the average man. Who, for instance, is aware of such languages as the Azerbaijani, the Lepcha, the Weasisi, or the Jaghatai Turki; and how many people could accurately state in what parts of the earth the Giriama, Nyamwezi, Sheetswa, Mikmak, or Idzo tongues are spoken?

Some of the tongues into which the Bible has been translated have since become extinct—such, for instance, as the language of the Australian aborigines—and these dead versions are not, of course, included in this interesting compilation.

At the beginning of the century there were only about fifty versions in existence. In 1860 it is stated that 220 translations had been made, and by 1890 the number had risen to 331. That number has now, in 1899, been increased to 400.—"The Inland."

My character to-day is, for the most part, simply the resultant of all the thoughts I have ever had, or all the feelings I have ever cherished and all the deeds I have ever performed. It is the entirety of my previous years packed and crystalized into the present moment. So that character is the quintessence of biography; so that everybody who knows my character—and there is no keeping character under cover—knows what for forty or more years I have

NIAGARA FALLS EXCURSION.

Low-rate Vacation Trips via Pennsylvania Railroad.

Thursday, October 5th and October 19th, are the dates of the remaining Pennsylvania Railroad popular ten-day excursions to Niagara Falls from Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and intermediate points.

Excursion tickets, good for return passage on any regular train, exclusive of limited express trains, within ten days, will be sold at $10.00 from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and all points on the Delaware Division; $11.25 from Atlantic City; $9.60 from Lancaster; $8.50 from Altoona and Harrisburg; $6.90 from Sunbury and Wilkesbarre; $5.75 from Williamsport; and at proportionate rates from other points. A stop-over will be allowed at Buffalo, Rochester, Canandaigua and Watkins within the limit returning.

A special train of Pullman parlor cars and day coaches will be run with each excursion. An extra charge will be made for parlor car seats.

An experienced tourist agent and chap-eron will accompany each excursion.

For pamphlets giving full information and hotels, and for time of connecting trains, apply to nearest ticket agent, or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

DR. ARNOLD'S PRAYER.

Physically we are constantly doing things without any thought. That is, we have done certain things so often that we continue to do them from force of habit. There should be a cultivation of spiritual habits in the same direction. What more practical and beautiful prayer could be offered than the one Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, prepared for his daily use before going into the schoolroom? It was as follows: "O Lord, I have a busy world around me; eye, ear and thought will be needed for my work to be done in that busy world. Now, ere I enter upon it, I would commit eye, ear and thought to Thee. Do Thou bless them, and keep their work Thine; that, as through Thy natural laws my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine for them, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times when my mind cannot consciously turn to Thee to commit each particular thought to Thy service."—"Young Men's Era."

The present generation of railway travelers will soon demand oil sprinkled roadbeds as the condition of their travel. The Pennsylvania Railway has taken the matter in hand, and the officials are enthusiastic over the result. The method employed is that of street sprinkling. The oiling pipes or sprinklers are three. Two project eight feet on either side of the car, oiling the roadbed for that distance, while the other oils the space between the two tracks. A hood comes down and completely protects the tracks themselves from receiving any of the oil. The oiling of the track would make awkward complications in case any of the trains had to stop in a hurry. It is claimed on behalf of the oil that it saves wear and tear on the running parts of the rolling stock; protects the draperies in cars and the contents of freight cars from destruction by dust; prevents vegetation from growing on the roadbed and saves track labor. It increases, of course, the comfort of passengers by eliminating the dust, and it is said that when it is used washouts are rarer, as it causes the ground to shed the water. We add that the New York Central Railroad is about to experiment with oil. It will begin with a ten-mile section of track near Poughkeepsie, which is especially dusty. Eighteen thousand gallons of oil will be sprinkled over this section; if the results are satisfactory the company will oil its entire line. All of which indicates that in the matter of offering luxury and comfort the great railways are not behind the other corporate agencies.—"Christian Work."

RUSKIN'S IDEAL WOMAN.

"Mould first her physical frame, and then, as the strength she gains will permit you, fill and temper her mind with all knowledge and thoughts which tend to confirm its natural instincts of justice and refine its natural taste of love. All such knowledge should be given her as may enable her to understand, and even to aid, the work of men.

It is of no moment, as a matter of pride or perfectness in herself, whether she knows many languages or one; but it is of the utmost that she should be able to show kindness to a stranger and to understand the sweetness of a stranger's tongue. It is of no moment to her own worth or dignity that she should be acquainted with this science or that; but it is of the highest that she should be trained in habits of accurate thought. . . . It is of little consequence how many positions of cities she knows—it is not the object of education to turn a woman into a dictionary—but it is deeply important that she should be taught to extend the limits of sympathy and to understand the nothingness of the proportion which that little world in which she lives and loves bears to the world in which God lives and loves."

Black and Colored Dress Goods

This Autumn exhibit of woolen and silk-and-woolen textures has been awarded the palm for completeness and refined selection. Thousands of patterns and fabrics, every one tasteful, elegant and up-to-date—whether of the 50c. grades or the exclusive novelties at $5.00 to $7.00 a yard.

Black Homespun Cheviot—a rough fabric with camel's hair effect, 55 inches wide; rich, lustrous black, just right for full costumes. This lot was bought much under value; easily worth $1.00 a yard—here at 58 cents.

Black Cheviot—fine twill, superior, face and finish, excellent for separate skirts and tailor-made gowns; 54 inches wide; regular $1.00 goods, at 75c. a yard.

Mixed Diagonal Suitings—very rich and stylish, strong and durable, 46 inches wide; all the popular colorings—mixtures in brown, green, blue, etc. This is a regular $1.25 quality; great value at to-day's price—65c. a yard.

Camel's-hair Plaids—in twelve handsome patterns, large and small; the wanted shaggy effects, very rich and stylish; 50 inches wide and worth considerably more than to-day's asking—85c. a yard.

JOINED TO CHRIST.

Joined to Christ in mystic union,
We Thy members, Thou our Head,
Sealed by deep and true communion,
Risen with Thee, who once wert dead—
Saviour, we would humbly claim
All the power of this Thy name.

Instant sympathy to brighten
All their weakness and their woe,
Guiding grace their way to lighten,
Shall Thy loving members know;
All their sorrows Thou dost bear,
All Thy gladness they shall share.

Make Thy members every hour
For Thy blessed service meet;
Earnest tongues and arms of power,
Skilful hands and hastening feet;
Ever ready to fulfil
All Thy word and all Thy will.

Everlasting life Thou givest,
Everlasting love to see;
They shall live because Thou livest,
And their life is hid with Thee.
Safe Thy members shall be found,
When their glorious Head is crowned!

THE FOUNDING OF THE CHURCH.

THE Gospels do not set forth simply God's purpose for the individual life; in fact it is one of the deepest truths of life that no man can live unto himself.

The first confession of personal faith—made by Peter near Cæsarea Philippi, to the fact that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God—was the occasion for the announcement of a purpose reaching beyond the individual—namely, the building of a church—a permanent Christian structure in the world.

This famous passage in Matt. 16: 18-19, is the text which has formed the basis for the papal system, and it is inscribed in gigantic letters on the dome of St. Peter's Cathedral, in Rome, as the absolute authority for an infallible earthly vice-gerent of Christ. Strangely enough, this text which unfolds the Saviour's conception of a Christian fellowship of individual responsibility and freedom has been made a proof text for the worst religious tyranny in history. It is really a magna charta of spiritual liberty, it has been made a warrant for the establishment of an unlimited despotism, which leaves no soul free access to God.

Let us consider the meaning of the passage which more than any other reveals Christ's thought concerning the church fellowship which He purposed to found, to continue the work which He personally began.

He was on His way to Jerusalem for the last time. His words in Galilee had convinced the people that He had not come to fulfil their Messianic hope. He had told them that His kingdom was a spiritual one, and not a glorified revival of the Israelitish monarchy. His followers began to drop off, and it became only too evident that the people were not ready for His messages of eternal life.

The disciples tell Him in answer to His question that the general impression is that He is a prophet—Elias, Jeremiah—but no one ranks Him higher than these great figures of Jewish history. "But whom say ye that I am?" "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God," answers Peter. It is the first spontaneous confession of faith that He is the Divine One and, as Jesus said, it was no superficial statement, but a conviction revealed in the heart by the Spirit, a revelation from the Father and not a conjecture of the brain—"Flesh and blood hath not revealed this to thee."

Then follows the answer: "Thou art Peter and on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Whatsoever thou shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." It means that as this man's personal faith in Christ as the Son of God has wrought in him a transformation of heart and life, and made good that early promise that he should one day be Peter—a rock—so on this very rock-nature, which is Christ-formed, the visible church is to be builded. In the midst of a disbelieving world there is at least one man who can be a nucleus for the Christian fellowship; for coming unto the living stone, He Himself has been made a lively stone, and of such the church is to be built. This first living believer is to become a center of spiritual power to call into existence a whole community of believers in Christ; not as the official bishop of Rome, but as the recipient of Pentecostal fire and spiritual power.

The church is, then, to be a community of brothers who have individually, by a similar faith and confession, seen Christ as the Son of God—in whom, as in Peter, the vital transformation shows the rock character forming,—men and women who are living stones through union with the Rock of Ages.

The sole qualification for authority is the evidence of special spiritual power, and that is what the bestowal of the keys means. It is decidedly not an authority of official position, but an authority which rests wholly upon personal faith and deep spiritual character. To Peter, and to every man who has by a like faith gained a similar spiritual insight, Christ confers power in the kingdom—authority in the direction of the propagation of the truths of the Gospel.

Whatever such a community of spiritually-enlightened believers, gathered in the name of Christ, and agreeing together in an agreement born of the mind and spirit of Christ shall ask, it shall be given; for under such conditions they could ask for nothing which was not heaven-prompted; and furthermore, whatsoever under those conditions they shall "bind or loose," shall be bound and loosed in heaven.

"Binding and loosing" are expressions which the rabbis of the time constantly used in the sense of declaring something forbidden or permitted. The idea conveyed in the famous passage is that those who compose the community of believers, the citizens of the kingdom, acting in the name of Christ and in His power, are authorized to determine what is consistent and what is inconsistent with fellowship in the church—what is to be permitted and what is to be forbidden. It gives no occasion for lordship and tyranny, but it makes the clarified, illumined souls who have unhindered access to God through Christ by the one Spirit, the bearers of the keys—the centers of authority.

Acting on this authority, the apostolic church "loosed" circumcision, but "bound" fidelity to the marriage vow. They "loosed" the Jewish Sabbath, but "bound" the fitting observance of the Lord's day. They "loosed" Mosaic sacrifices, but "bound" the necessity of a living faith in Him who is a High Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.

This conception of the church—and it certainly is Christ's conception of it—would make it impossible for the church ever to be fossilized or its truth crystallized. Christ conceives the church as a vital organism, and as such it must be progressive—i. e., it must successively adapt itself to the changed conditions of society, and make its message drawing and vitalizing as new situations confront it. Its message of redemption from sin and of new life in Christ, is an eternal message, for the need of this is, and will remain, a continuous need; but for all practical matters and for all its methods and practices, the body itself, under the immediate guidance of the Head of the church, is commissioned with authority—an authority, however, which comes not through an unbroken line of historic bishops, but which comes from the fact that the individuals composing the structure are living stones set upon the living Foundation. This idea of organic union with Christ is again and again taught in the New Testament, and it is put as a necessary condition for bearing fruit. Christians cannot perform their functions if they try to live an exclusive life. Union with Christ brings all Christians into a oneness of organism like that of the branches of a vine. The promise that Christ's followers should do even greater works than He did, is followed by the significant words: "In that day shall ye know that I am in my Father and ye in me and I in you." That is a union and incorporation which would make a powerful church. Why do not we have it at once? Because the bulk of Christians have, strangely enough, made little of this idea of corporate union with Christ and with one another, and have instead divided their forces by petty differences of opinion on things that have no vital effect upon the condition of the soul, such as whether one can preach authoritatively without a surplice, whether water should be put on the man or the man put in the water, whether the external communion should be a common meal or an individual partaking of bread and wine. No wonder that Paul, who knew—if any man ever did—the meaning of this vital union with Christ, cried out: "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost"; and again, "Neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availeth any thing but a new creation." This is a key-note of New Testament Christianity—a new creation, a new creation for each soul, and a new creation for society. In other words, it is the fulfilment of the divine purpose, "Let us make man in our own image."

HEROES AND HEROES.

As we write, an event is transpiring in New York city, which has no parallel in our history. That city—and through it the state and nation—is rising to honor with all the means in its power an admiral who comes half way around the globe to celebrate his naval victory which has brought us our first conquests across the ocean. No American conqueror has ever come to our shores to receive such a tumultuous ovation from his people, and one would naturally conclude from it that this must be our sole and solitary hero.

We do not wish to belittle any great service, or any deed of courage and daring. We do not begrudge any proper honor which falls to the man who served his country in the work his country asked him to do. We should expect some unusual enthusiasm over the man who destroyed a whole fleet of a hostile nation, without losing any of his own men, for the world has not, by any means, outgrown its taste for military victory, and its liking for deadly work on the enemy. But we do feel a sadness of heart over the fact that our people cannot recognize and properly honor a man until he has slain his thousands and his tens of thousands. It is—as of old—the military chieftain, the naval hero, who turns the world upside down with enthusiasm and acclaim. He is in a class all by himself, and there are no honors good enough for him—at least, so the people believe.

We have seen in the last few years, two men of opposite political parties—Grover Cleveland and Thomas B. Reed—stand most heroically for principles which they believed vital to the interests and welfare of this country—men who sunk all consideration of personal ambition and political success to fight the bloodless battles of their country, and they have both dropped out of office and gone to the quiet routine of their private life without causing a ripple of excitement or an hour of public emotion. The amount of courage, patience, hard toil and honest struggle which characterized their work puts them in a class far above any living admiral, and yet they drop out of public life as silently as a pebble slips to the bottom of the sea; while the hero of the ship and gun is belauded and touted and dined as though no other hero ever existed. We—at least some of us—ought to realize what it means for a man in politics in our day to keep his hands clean and his pockets empty, for him to oppose the clamor for mean and sordid ends, for him to defy party bosses and party schemes, and to move steadily on toward an end which ensures the safety and permanence of his country, and which enlarges the freedom of the citizen. That is a heroism better than sinking fleets.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

It is rumored that the Pope has in preparation a letter regarding the Anglican crisis.

Jean Baptiste de la Salle, the founder of the community of Brothers of Christian Schools, has recently been canonized by the Pope.

Great agitation appears to exist in China against the missionaries stationed there. Many native converts, especially of the Catholic faith, have been killed, while the missionaries in several instances have been driven out of the towns.

It is said that in Massachusetts, out of 1,100,000 engaged in gainful occupations, only 37,000 are employed on First-day. This number is made up mainly of persons employed on railroads and steamboats, and in hotels and restaurants.

A special conference on practical phases of missionary life and work, was held in Ramleh, Egypt, July 31st and August 1st and 2d. The meetings were arranged for by the United Presbyterian Missionary Association, and participated in by other workers in this foreign field.

Dr. D. K. Pearsons, who has given so much money to colleges, has just paid over his gift of $50,000 to Berea College, Ky., which was conditioned on the raising of $150,000 among other friends of the institution. The work of Berea College is among the people of both races in eastern Kentucky.

Upon no one point has the religious press of the entire country ever found such a unity of belief and sentiment as is displayed in its position regarding the verdict of the Rennes court-martial. Papers of every shade of doctrine and belief have pronounced the court's sentence of Dreyfus as an egregious moral outrage.

A missionary of the American Board (Congregationalist), is arranging to start missionary work in the Ladrões, the German government having assured him that he will be protected in his undertaking. The station for this work will be the American possession of Guam, where he intends to establish two missionary families and a boy's school.

It is interesting to observe that the Lutheran Church—the fifth largest denomination in the United States—has a Luther League. The object of this society is to furnish a bond of unity among the Lutherans, who are divided into four general bodies, the parent body having split eleven years ago on account of the disagreement of its members on doctrinal points. The Luther League serves a purpose similar to that of the Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, etc.

Lord Halifax, the leader of the extreme ritualistic party in England, advises laymen to "stand by and help those priests who feel that they must disobey the order of the bishops." He is rebuked by Dean Hole, of Rochester, in his letter withdrawing from the English Church Union, as follows: "You have lost a great opportunity for the promotion of order and peace by advice which means that the laity must obey, but that the clergy must disobey, those who are set over them in the Lord."

A STUDY OF WAR.

AN ADDRESS BY PROF. WILLIAM N. TRUEBLOOD.

The propositions concerning war and peace, which I believe and advocate, are these:

1. That wars and fightings among us do come even of our lusts—ambitions—and in no other way.
2. That the state of war in the world is, and has ever been, much wider than the fighting of its armies and navies.
3. That the peace which the world seeks is but little dependent upon the abolition of mere militarism.

In the development and support of these propositions, I shall not confine myself to my own thoughts, but use whatever material I can command, quoting liberally wherever quotation will serve, since it is not my own reputation I work for, but the truth in respect to peace and war.

My first proposition, viz: that the wars of the world come only from the lusts and ambitions of men, stands certainly on good authority. James 4: 1. "Whence comē wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence even of your lusts?"

Of course, we notice that this expression of the apostle's is not a question, but a figure of interrogation, asserting a truth in the form of question, in the same way that righteousness is asserted of God in Genesis 18: 25: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" in which there can be no possibility of supposing that information is sought. We notice, also, that the language of James is perfectly general—not this war, nor that war; not the wars of the past, nor the wars of the present, nor yet the wars of the future, but—"Whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, all of them, even of your lusts?"

What, then, shall we say of the "righteous" and "just" wars that people have talked and yet talk so eloquently about? Why, the simple answer is, they are not; they have never been. An ultimately righteous or just war is an anomaly, and has never been, unless the apostle knew not of what he was writing.

How, then, shall we dispose of the Hebrew wars and the "holy crusades" and our own war of the Rebellion and our latest one? Why, there is no help for it. We must answer, they came from the lusts and ambitions of men, every one of them; and, in spite of the eloquence of orators and divines, were ultimately unholy and unjust, as upon their faces they say they were. How can anything be holy that is cruel, malicious, filled with confusion, desolating? How can anything be just that seeks every advantage, as war does, and triumphs over every weakness and misfortune, as war does? Can justice change its nature? or can a sane man contradict himself?

Notice in this I do not say that these wars were not inevitable, in the times in which they came; neither do I say that they were then not the best means, or the heaven-sanctioned means, out of the tangle of ambition and evil that gave them origin. What I say is, that they were unholy and unjust—a horror in the eyes of God, a cause of tears to the angels, and ought to be cause of shame to men instead of laudation. "Offenses must needs come" in the evolution of animality such as this world contains, but that fact does not take away the offensiveness of the offense, nor make it holy or just.

If one read the context of this assertion quoted from James he will get a particularization of the lusts and ambitions that cause the wars of the world: 1. Desire to possess; 2. Libertinism; 3. Envy, jealousy; 4. Chicanery, double-dealing; 5. Pride; 6. Evil-speaking; 7. Trade, commerce; 8. Boasting. These are specified, by their old-time designations, in verses 2, 4, 5, 8, 10, 11, 13 and 16, respectively, of the fourth chapter of James. I give them by their modern names, and I call history to witness when I say they have caused the wars of the world. I repeat some of them that we may see more clearly: The desire to possess—behold the long train of the world's wars for conquest; Libertinism—behold the tribal wars of the East, the Trojan war, and the romantic wars of mediæval Europe; Envy, jealousy—see France and Britain watching each other and fighting on every land and sea—it is their history from the time they began to be nations; Treachery, double-dealing—see Spain and the Netherlands, Austria, the German Empire, Russia, England in her Eastern wars; Trade and commerce—see the history of Phœnicia, Carthage, Rome, and the free cities of the Mediterranean. Is it not a history of wholesale plunder, enrichment by war and spoliation, and does it not have its roots in lust and ambition?

But I need not go on to construe the remainder of these instances of St. James. His simple expression covers the ground—"Come they not hence even of your lusts?" "Lusts" is inclusive of all man's malignant passions—animal appetites, greed, ambition, and from these unholy things and from no other source have come the world's wars.

I am, of course, aware that some hold that ambition is a good and noble passion. But "a tree is known by its fruits," and I call their attention to the fruits of ambition. I point them to the wars of Darius, Cyrus, Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, Philip, Rollo, Napoleon —to the ruin of them, to the labor of men's hands destroyed by them, the sustenance of men's lives wasted by them, to the stacks and stacks of human bones that marked their battlefields, till they rotted in the elements—and say to them, these are the fruits of ambition. And they must answer, yes. But they will say it was this same ambition that made these several—eight—men great; and I will say yes, and their million victims dust. They will say that this ambition is always attended with a rise, and I will say, yes—a rise and a fall; a rise in one direction and a fall in another; a rise in that when it entered men they, indeed, began to rise above the brutes, as well as above one another; a rise in that their huts and caves grew into domed and spired palaces, as we see them to-day; a rise in that their rude tribes and clans expanded into nations and empires, and in that their simple barter developed into a commerce complex as desire and wide as the seas. But it was attended with a fall, also; a fall from innocence, a fall from rest, a fall into a torment of egoism that brooks no superior and smites everything that stands in its way; a fall into a thirsty, appetitive, jealous, haughty life, that spreads war all around it, pushing everything else down that it itself may rise. This is ambition, the source of war; an unholy thing instead of a holy; a malicious thing instead of a just; an insubordinate thing instead of an orderly. It would, indeed, clothe the earth with beauty and wealth and power as it does, and it would destroy it all, as it does, the moment it is claimed by another. It, ambition, is a strange disease and incurable. The only remedy is to be born again, to return to the simplicity and obedience of childhood. "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Let me give you my own boyish dream of this ambition, this spirit of war:

The lettered page that told of war
And clustered camps that blazed afar
Had fallen from my listless hand;
But in my mind the kindled fire
Of that war-page burned high and higher,
And brighter flamed the battle brand.

I saw distinctly, through the storm,
A wildly fierce, exultant form
Flit here and there above the plain;
And ev'rywhere, with shouts, it passed
And pointed onward through the blast,
Where poured the storm of leaden rain.

And ev'rywhere, with wilder shout
And wilder spirit, rushed the rout,
And louder roared the battle strife;
Sublime, the fires of courage burned,
Sublime, the haughty spirit spurned
All thoughts of low and coward life.

The sweeping lines were grand to see;
The booming guns—the cavalry—
A mighty tide of power were they;
And in my soul a glory sprung,
And in my ears a music rung—
The soldier's music of the fray.

Then beckoned me that shad'vy form
And, pointing proudly through the storm
That rolled its fiery tide afar,
"Behold my throne, that sulph'rous air;
Behold my power and subjects there—
I am the mighty king of war.

The countless hosts of earth are mine;
I ruled them in the olden time,
I sway them as I list to-day.
Behold those kings of haughty mien,
That trample, reckless, o'er the slain;
They know the glory of my sway;

And prince and beggar—all have knelt
Before my throne, and in them felt
The mounting joy of my renown—
All reckless, trampled down the earth,
All heedless, tore the ties of birth,
To win my boy's unfading crown.

How glorious is the power I wield!
The earth is but a tented field
Which battle-thunders all enfold!"
He raised his arm and waved it high,
He flashed his truncheon o'er the sky,
And on the battle surges rolled.

'Twas long I stood with kindled soul
And watched the fury billows roll
And dash their fury towards the sky—
The sulph'rous vapor rolling dun,
The flashing lines, the roaring gun—
And felt my spirit mounting high.

But when it passed I turned me back
To view the glory of its track,
And very horror stunned my soul.
A black'ning waste of rotting bones,
Of fenceless fields and fallen thrones,
Stretched backward like an endless scroll.

"Great God," I cried, "is this the road
Of that great king which, like a god,
So sweeps in glory through the world?"
I turned to see, and far away
Upon the low horizon gray,
The sulph'rous war-cloud madly whirled.

Upon its edge, in bold relief,
There flamed the mighty demon chief,
And waved his red arms in the air;
And on his face was written, clear,
The Devil's scowl, the demon's leer,
And on his breast was—"Lucifer."

That to me is the spirit of war—mighty, flaming, seductive, blasting and fell! Worshiped too long, but destined to be worshiped much longer, since but two powers, says the Frenchman, can rule the world—"Might and right, and might till right gets fully ready."

My second proposition is that the war of the world is much wider than the fighting of its armies and navies.

In the "dim, red dawn of man" they warred, it is true, in but one way—physically. Says Kipling of this time:

"Then they stripped them, scalp from scull,
And their hunting dogs fed full,
And their teeth they neatly threaded on a thong;
And they wiped their mouths and said
It is well that they are dead,
For we know that we are right and they are wrong."

In later times we may say of this coarse, animal war, that it has grown less—but not so of war.

"Still a cultured Christian age
Sees us scuffle, squeak and rage;
Still we pinch and slap and jabber, scratch and dirk;
Still we let our business slide
As we dropped the half-dressed hide,
To show a fellow savage how to work."

—Kipling.

John Fiske says: "We (the human family) have made more progress in intelligence than in kindness. For thousands of generations, and until very recent times, one of the chief occupations of men has been to plunder, bruise and kill one another. The selfish and ugly passions which are primordial, which have the incalculable strength of inheritance from the time when animal consciousness began, have had but little opportunity to grow weak from disuse. The tender and unselfish feelings, which are of later development, have too seldom been allowed to grow strong from exercise. The whims and prejudices of primeval, militant barbarism are slow in dying out from the midst of peaceful, industrious civilization. The coarser forms of cruelty are indeed disappearing, and the butchery of men has greatly diminished. But most people apply to industrial pursuits a notion of antagonism derived from ages of warfare, and seek in all manner of ways to cheat and overreach one another. As in more barbarous times, the hero was he who had slain his tens of thousands, so now the man who has made wealth by overreaching his neighbors is not uncommonly spoken of in terms which imply approval. Though gentlemen no longer assail one another with knives and clubs, they still inflict wounds with cruel words and sneers. Though the one who dares to think for himself is no longer chained to a stake and burned, people still tell lies about him and do their best to starve him by hurting his reputation. The virtues of forbearance and self-control are still in a very rudimentary state, and of mutual helpfulness there is far too little among men."—"Destiny of Man."

Every one knows that these notions of Fiske's are correct; any one who takes even a cursory view of the business of the world will see that it is war—war with all the devices, the cunning, the deception and pitiless overreaching of the old-time war—nay, even more. The war of business, Howells says, never stops to put the Ciceronian question—whether the fellow arriving at a starving city with a cargo of grain is bound to tell the people before he squeezes them that there are half a dozen other fellows with grain just below the horizon.

No; our modern business never scruples to take the advantage of circumstances. On the contrary, it hastens to take it, and honors itself for its shrewdness in so doing. Neither does business ever stop to put the magnanimous question, as the old-time war sometimes did. It is simply a fight for the supremacy, a fight to the death, and the wear and tear of life, the slaughter, is something fearful. Ninety-five per cent., it is said, is the proportion of the "killed, wounded and missing."

It may be claimed that this modern phase of war, this Machiavellian diplomacy, that so grinds and sorts and sifts the world to-day, consigning these to wealth, elegance and leisure, to honor and distinction in church and state, and to the control of social life; and those to poverty, coarseness and labor, to exclusion from honorable place and honorable mention,—it may be claimed, I say, that this phase of war is something to be proud of; that it brings a rise; that it gives us our prosperity, our wealth, our elegant cities, our great enterprises on sea and land. But when we come to see, as we must, that this magnificent prosperity is something like the Ninevehian—that it cannot exactly square itself with the principles of justice and brotherhood which we believe in; when we come to see that our enterprises, while they are filling the earth with riches, are also "filling it with the hate of men"; that our mines from which we dig our wealth are the graves of living men, "dead to the free light and air"; that "our great factories are monsters, devouring women and children as well as men"; when we come to see that our "rich are growing richer, at the rate of 25, 50 and 100 per cent. annually," and that our poor are growing towards absolute dependence and slavery at the same rate; "that our land is filled with cities where the rich flaunt their splendor in palaces and the poor swarm in squalid tenements"; "that our money vanishes, from time to time, and disappears in the vaults of our banks, leaving business helpless, for no better reason than that for which it pours itself out at other times." In a word, when we see that our proud civilization is still war—the glory of the general and the death of the common soldier—we will not be so ready to be proud of it. It is, in fact, just like the other kind of war—founded on lust and ambition, inevitable, perhaps, from the tangle of evil and selfishness from which it rises, and doing much good, doubtless—but still in itself unjust and unholy, and awaits its judgment.

My third proposition is that the peace which the world hopes for is but little dependent on the abolition of militarism.

The first and obvious ground for the support of this proposition is the fact that militarism is but a phase, a part, a branch of the world's great upas tree. Lopping off branches is well enough by any process whatever when they interfere with the free sunlight and air; but to effect a permanent security we know that the axe must be laid to the roots of the tree. Knowledge of the cause is the first step always to the confident control of the effect.

Now, an examination of the world's warfare will show that its contentions have been of three kinds: 1. Strife among merely predatory peoples; 2. Strife between a merely predatory people and one that has become civilly and industrially organized; 3. Strife among a people imperfectly organized, arising from the imperfect organization. The first stage has passed, to most of the world, but may be instanced by the wars among our Indian and African tribes; the second has also largely passed away, but may be instanced by England's wars in India and Africa, and our own present war with the Philippine Islands; the third, the one that springs out of imperfect or false organization, civil or industrial, is everywhere in the world to-day, and may be instanced by our war of the Rebellion and our present social and industrial unrest. The first of these strifes arises from animal appetites and lusts; the second and third arise more from ambition and other intellectual distortion. But it is safe to say that no state of society founded on any of these bases can have enduring peace, because these are selfish, and men cannot live together without war on any other than a social basis.

Then the peace that the world seeks is dependent upon the establishment of benevolence, good will, brotherhood as the basis of civil and industrial organization; in a word, upon Christianity. "Not the mass of theological doctrine ingeniously piled up by Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Clement, Athanasius and Augustine," than which there has not been a more fruitful source of war, "but upon the real and essential Christianity, taught by Christ and Paul." This alone brings peace on earth, because it brings good will to men.

Now, it is very encouraging that many signs of this benevolent basis of life are now appearing above the horizon. Green and fertile spots they are in our desert of war. They augur that man is coming on to a fourth basis of civilization, on which war shall find no place, but brotherhood instead. But it will not come suddenly nor very soon; it will not come by legislation, by lopping off branches here and there. It will come only by the slow process of education, by the removal of the passion of ambition from the mind of man and the implantation in its stead of the love of virtue for itself, by the removal of that notion so deeply instilled by the world's long ages of strife, that merit consists in winning place and power above our fellows, and the inculcation of the idea of service, of helpfulness and common interests instead.

It is evident that the times are not ripe as yet. The sword and the defense of it are still among us, though the signs of peace are undoubtedly multiplying on the horizon. But it is time to plant the seed, to preach the doctrine of that perfect life on earth which is to be realized only by and by; "that state of society from which every vestige of strife and the modes of behavior adapted to the ages of strife shall be utterly and forever swept away. Through misery that has seemed unendurable and turmoil that has seemed endless," men have dreamed of this happy state and placed it beyond the grave, deeming it too good to be found upon earth. But they should have remembered that the Great Teacher of the doctrine said it belonged to the earth. "The kingdom of heaven is now and here in this world."

There is but one school in which humanity learns—the school of experience; one road by which it moves onward—the slow and tedious road of growth; but by it it will reach its goal, and we have nothing to do but to be patient, adding our might in our day. This progress of humanity has been like the ascent of a mountain.

One at the foot of a mountain sees himself connected with but a few things; his horizon is small, and he easily counts himself supreme. As he ascends his relations do not really change, but he sees himself the center of a larger sphere. What below seemed to be connected only with himself, from the higher altitude is seen to have connections so distant, and a profusion of interests so vast, that his own relations to it seem very insignificant indeed.

Time was when man was at the foot of the mountain and thought that the world was made for him, and every particular man, in the same spirit and for the same reason, thought it was made for himself, or so much of it as he could in any way get possession of, and with his club he maintained what he called his rights, the worst savage in the savage jungle. But time went on and man got a broader view of things. Association of interests dawned upon him. The family with its claims to protection dissipated the intensity of his selfishness. This was the first light of civilization, the first faint glimmer of that benevolence that shall yet shine widely enough to illuminate the world. Gradually this benevolence of the family widened into the benevolence of the tribe, including hundreds, from the gray-haired chieftain at the one limit to his great-grandchildren at the other. Within this circle the tribe maintained comparative peace, but beyond it it made war, and gloried in it because it saw no further. Time went on and the benevolence in the tribe was widened into that of the nation, and it was a good long step up the mountain. But, unfortunately, as the benevolence reached out to the wider it became less pure in the narrower, a fact to be appreciated in the condition of nations to-day. They have patriotism, they have organizing benevolence enough to hold all within as against the world, but not enough to hold them as against one another. They seem to forget that "it is the little foxes that spoil the vines."

The next step must not only enable us to look forward to the embrace of the whole world, but backwards, also, to the healing of the strife within. It is the great step; the world is pausing on it now, and when it shall be taken the mountain top will be reached. It will then be seen that the world is much too large to belong to any man, or tribe, or nation, or even to the whole race of men, and we shall be glad to share it with God, and happy in his management of it.

The crown of patience cannot be received where there has been no suffering. If thou refuseth to suffer, thou refuseth to be crowned; but, if thou wishest to be crowned, thou must fight manfully and suffer patiently. Without labor none can obtain rest, and without contending there can be no conquest.—Thomas à Kempis.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

GEORGE ADAM SMITH AND DR. CADMAN
AT NORTHFIELD.

BY J. WALTER MALONE.

We, with the great orthodox Christian world who believe in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, were terribly shocked when it was given out that D. L. Moody had invited two men with unorthodox views to Northfield, where we had looked for unqualified orthodoxy. The alarm went from one end of the world to the other. Religious papers on both sides of the Atlantic spoke out boldly and criticized the action severely; and in Scotland, the home of one of the great teachers in question, the cry was perhaps loudest.

There is a great difference of opinion regarding the teaching of such men as George Adam Smith, of Glasgow, and S. P. Cadman, D.D., the New York preacher "without a Bible." We are not going to enter into argument at present, but we want to set these men before the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in their true light, and then each reader must and will decide for himself.

Both the gentlemen in question are "higher critics," so-called. The former, Prof. Smith, denies all inspiration to the prophets—yes, to all the writers of the Old Testament. He denies, too, all direct revelation from God through Israel to the world. The whole Old Testament, in other words, was but the natural outgrowth of the religious instincts of a people who had a natural religious tendency. According to this teaching Jesus Christ fulfilled no prophecy, He bore false testimony to the origin and infallibility of the Scriptures, and there was no supernatural Christ to be our Saviour. This is only a hint of what this professor teaches. A sample from one of his lectures at Yale tells the story in his own words: "We have learned that some of these characters in the Old Testament were not real individuals, but were fabulous as Prometheus—personifications of the genius and temper of the tribes of which they were represented as the ancestors. It is not too much to say that considerations of this kind have led to a panic among preachers, and some have been led to abandon whole books of the Old Testament which carry deep and inspiring themes. . . . All these stories carry much imaginary material."

Dr. Cadman, the Methodist minister and pastor of the Methodist Metropolitan Temple, at the corner of Seventeenth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, New York, let the world know last spring what he believed, and of course taught, when, in a regular weekly preachers' meeting in that city, in the presence of about four hundred of his Methodist ministerial brethren, he affirmed that "the inerrancy and the infallibility of the Bible are no longer possible of belief among reasoning men." A published report states further that, "this address places the Bible on the basis of historical works on other than divine subjects; it rejects authenticity of all parts of Holy Scripture which are repugnant to human reason." Again, "the speaker referred to the Old Testament, half of whose pages, he said, were of unknown authorship. The New Testament likewise contained contradictions. The Bible, he continued, was compiled much as any other book. "It was written from the records and witnessses of the time. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John differ in quoting words said to have been pronounced by Christ upon a given occasion. Parallel passages are not alike," etc., etc.

Now the reader can see that the entire drift of these two men's teaching, as is the case with all this class, is to deprive the Scriptures of all inspiration, all that is supernatural, and bring them down to a level with any other book of history, leaving no place for prophecy or miracles. We were surprised and grieved that the great leader of revival work in this country (as well as other lands), should thus have fallen and forever cut off his great work of saving the lost, for we have never seen, nor have we even heard, of a preacher who was a higher critic and believed this infidel doctrine (for it is nothing else) that held revivals or had souls born into the kingdom under his ministry. They are not doing that kind of work, but, as Mr. Moody said in New York a few days since, "These preachers are doing the devil's work."

To admit such preachers into our churches or into our schools, do you wonder it called forth alarm? "Broad," yes, truly, for they are undoubtedly in the broad way. A decade or two ago, all this infidelity was in the world. Robert G. Ingersoll was then a bright and shining light in that world, but the last few years his proud boasts and strong (?) lectures were completely outshone by men who knew more, and were a thousand fold more dangerous, for they occupy our pulpits, and the professors' chairs in our colleges and theological schools. They cry, "scholarship." "Are you afraid the old Book will not stand?" Oh, no—a thousand noes; but we are afraid and tremble for our young people, as we see they do not stand against such teaching from preachers and professors, whom we teach them to respect, but go down by scores into infidelity and out into the world, and die, as many do, in unbelief and skepticism. What we write here we believe would and will receive the endorsement of Mr. Moody, for we are happy to state upon the best of authority that Mr. Moody stands as squarely for the plenary inspiration of the Bible as ever, and is as pronounced against these higher critics as ever.

Dr. Cadman had been invited the year before the paper was read which showed him in his true light, and when it was read Mr. Moody at once canceled the engagement. He was induced to renew it, when, from personal friends, he had the strongest assurance that Dr. Cadman had been misrepresented. So it was with Prof. Smith; the invitation was given before his latest teaching and position were known, and when his rationalistic attack on the inspiration of the Bible was understood, Mr. Moody, in company with Mr. Torrey, the head of the Moody Institute, had a conference with the two gentlemen, and labored hard to show them the error of their way, and Prof. Smith was only allowed a few minutes to speak. "The teaching at Northfield was in every respect in harmony with the belief in the depravity of man, the deity of Jesus Christ, and redemption by His blood, the plenary inspiration of the inerrant Bible and the necessity of regeneration," which have ever been taught and emphasized there.

Cleveland, Ohio.

DR. CUYLER ON THE WAR.

Sent by Dr. Cuyler to THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Just now New York is preparing a splendid ovation to the gallant Admiral Dewey. The exploit of the Green Mountain sailor in knocking a Spanish fleet to pieces does not commend him so warmly to my fancy as his courage and spirit of wise humanity in declaring to the world his opinions in regard to the treatment of those Filipinos. A year ago he declared that they were an "intelligent people, and better fitted for self-government than the Cubans." Recently he has uttered—in a reported interview with a correspondent of the London "Daily News"—about the strongest protest against the wretched war now being waged against those unhappy islanders that has been spoken. As ten days have elapsed since that reported interview took place, and no official denial of its authenticity has yet appeared, I shall presume on its genuineness. His wise words cannot be repeated too often; they ought to ring through the heart of our nation. He said, "I have never been in favor of violence toward the Filipinos. I should like to see autonomy first conceded, and then annexation might be talked about. This is my opinion. I should like to see violence at once put a stop to. According to my view the concession of self-government ought to be the most just and most logical solution."

If the heroic old Admiral will tell his countrymen such golden truths when he lands on his native shores, and will whisper them in the ears of President McKinley, he will be a national benefactor worthy of a statue of pure Vermont marble. Dewey's words have the Abraham Lincoln ring in them. No buncombe demagoguery in them about "hauling down the flag," or about making our Christian republic a "world-power" in the line of subjugating distant peoples to military sway. What strange delusions seem to be harbored in many American minds! Some good folk are hailing the opening of that archipelago to "Christian missions"—as if the true weapons of Christianity were Gatling guns and Springfield rifles. Thus far the principal "missionary" work done in Manila is the introduction of three hundred and fifty drinking saloons—chiefly patronized by Americans!

Another delusion—that the New York "Tribune" seems to be especially laboring under—is that only one-fifth of all the Filipinos are opposed to our sovereignty, and that four-fifths of the islanders are longing to live under the stars and stripes! Why, then, do not those four-fifths make short work with what our government calls the "rebels"? The honest truth is—and it is becoming more evident every day—that a vast majority of those people do not like us, and a vast number of them absolutely hate us, and have no more hankering for our rule than for that of Spain. They do not like our religion; they do not like our habits (especially of the "canteen" and dram-shop sort); they do not like our amusements; they do not understand our language, and they regard us as intruders who have come there for selfish purposes, and to crowd out the natives from their own hereditary rights and possessions.

All these are most disagreeable facts that we may as well face before we sacrifice many more of the precious lives of our brave American sons and brothers. War taxes are becoming burdensome, and this war is especially unpopular. It brings no glory to our arms, no profit to our purses, and no comfort to our consciences—and it may be protracted for many years, like the Seminole war in Florida. Why not do as the brave General Funston recommends?—"try diplomacy instead of gunpowder." Now, if any reader of this paper sets me down as a "traitor" for thus exercising my American birthright of free speech, let me reply that tens of thousands of my fellow Christians agree with me, and I am only enlarging on the noble text which the heroic and patriotic Dewey has given me. Oh, for a halt to fire and sword, and a fair trial of Christian diplomacy!

Lesson III.

Tenth month 15, 1899.

ESTHER PLEADING FOR HER PEOPLE.

Esther 8: 3-8, 15-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. Psalm 37: 5.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 9.—Esther pleading for her people. Esther 8: 1-8.
Third-day, Tenth mo. 10.—Esther pleading for her people. Esther 8: 9-17.
Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 11.—Deliverance commemorated. Esther 9: 20-28.
Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 12.—Joy in deliverance. Psalm 81: 14-24.
Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 13.—Promise of help. Zeph. 3: 14-20.
Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 14.—Safety of God's people. Psalm 91.
First-day, Tenth mo. 15.—Trust and fear not. Psalm 37: 1-17.

In the verses which intervene between the last lesson and the present, we are told that as soon as Mordecai heard of the decree which was issued—through the influence of Haman—for the destruction of the Jews, "he rent his clothes and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city and cried with a loud and bitter cry" (4: 1). The Jews also, wherever the tidings came, greatly mourned, and there was "fasting and weeping and wailing; and many lay in sackcloth and ashes" (4: 3). Mordecai informed Esther of the decree and sent her word to petition the king on account of her people. He said that if she held her peace, relief would come from some other place, but that she and her father's house would perish.

Esther resolved to make the attempt; "If I perish, I perish," she said. Accordingly, at the risk of her life, she presents herself before the king, uninvited; a proceeding wholly contrary to law and custom. She succeeds in winning the favor of the fickle monarch, and he promises to give whatever she may ask—even the half of his kingdom. By skillful plans she draws the king's attention to what Haman had done and to the iniquitous decree he had procured. She had also previously brought to the king's remembrance how, at one time, the king's life had been saved by the timely discovery by Mordecai of a plot to kill the king. In true oriental style the king ordered Haman to be hanged upon the gallows which Haman had prepared for Mordecai. The execution of Haman, however, did not affect the decree against the Jews; it was still in force, and would have to be carried out. (Compare Dan. 6: 15). Here the lesson opens. The whole story as told in chapters 3-8 should be read. The scene of the story is at Shushan or Susa, as in the last lesson.

3. "Esther spoke yet again." This was the real petition which she had at heart. Haman had been degraded and put to death; Mordecai had been honored and placed in a position of great trust, but the decree still stood.

4. "Held out the golden sceptre to Esther." This was the usual sign of great favor. There are numerous representations on the monuments of kings with a sceptre or rod in their hands.

5. "Reverse the letters." Reverse the decree. According to this theory the laws of the Medes and Persians could not be changed (Dan. 6: 15), but it was always easy to get round this unwritten law by issuing a second decree which practically nullified the obnoxious decree. This was doubtless what Esther meant, as the sequel shows.

6. She uses the argument which is likely to have the most weight. An appeal to the justice of the king would have had little effect.

7. See Esther 7: 10.

8. "Write . . . as it liketh you." He gives authority to write such a decree as pleases Esther and Mordecai—one which will nullify the former decree which Haman procured. The decree, given in verse 11, authorizes the Jews "to stand for their lives, to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish all that attempt to assault them, and "to take the spoil of them for a prey." This was done on the same day as that mentioned in Haman's decree (Esther 3: 13).

15. Mordecai is represented as meeting popular approval. Mordecai was dressed in royal apparel—the greatest mark of royal favor.

16, 17. It was recognized that the second decree would prevent the enemies of the Jews from attacking them. "A feast and a good day." The feast of Purim or "Lots" is held on the 14th and 16th days of Adar, which answers nearly to February. The feast of Purim was celebrated over all Palestine, but attendance at Jerusalem was not enjoined as at the feasts of Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles.

The rest of the book of Esther tells of the result of this decree. It must be confessed that few parts of the Old Testament, if any, contain such vindictive scenes. We are told that more than 75,000 Persians were slain, all of whom, so far as appears, were innocent. After this slaughter, on the petition of Esther herself, 300 more were slain, and the dead bodies of the ten sons of Haman were hanged upon the gallows. The sole redeeming point in the account is that the Jews did not loot the houses of the Persians. "On the prey they laid not their hands."

The whole story throws into bright relief the immense superiority of the New Testament standard, and the injunction of Christ, "I say unto you, love your enemies."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH 15th, 1899.

LOST OPPORTUNITIES.

Jer. 8: 20; Matt. 23: 37-39; Heb. 12: 17.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 9.—For salvation. Acts 24: 22-27.
Third-day, Tenth mo. 10.—For preparation. Matt. 25: 1-13.
Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 11.—For usefulness. Luke 19: 20-26.
Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 12.—For ministry. Matt. 25: 41-46.
Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 13.—For loyalty. Mark 14: 26-42; 66-72.
Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 14.—For kingship. 1 Sam. 15: 1-23.

Our word, opportunity, comes from ob portus, over against the harbor, and in the days of clumsy vessels it meant everything to the sailor threatened by the storms at sea to find himself just over against a good harbor. If he neglected his opportunity, it meant either to founder at sea, or be driven upon the shore and beaten to pieces by the waves. One of the most striking uses of the word in the Bible, is in the margin of Ephes. 5: 16: "Buying up the opportunity, because the days are evil"; and the important lesson there, is that opportunities are to be secured even though they are costly.

The three passages selected for our Scriptural lesson suggest: a lost opportunity, the reason for it, and the consequences of it. The opportunity for salvation was given. God's reapers were here to gather the grain for the garner; the glorious summer days gave ample time, God's sunshine and gentle breezes ripened the grain, circumstances were propitious, but it is all past now and we are not saved. What is the reason? It was not in God. He was not against us in the decrees of an arbitrary sovereignty or an indifference to our fate. "I would have gathered you, but ye would not." The divine "I would" is met by the human "ye would not"; the opportunity was lost because the soul would not heed it. What are the results? "The poets picture opportunity as resting one foot upon a wheel, signifying her swift and ceaseless motion. Her thick locks conceal her face so that she is not recognized at her coming, and her head is bald behind, since she is not to be grasped even by a floating lock after she has passed." So our third Scripture passage is well chosen. There was no "afterward" of blessing for Esau. He had sold his opportunity instead of buying it—he despised his birthright; there was no reversal of the eternal nature of things when the consequences of his neglect began to press home upon him. It is not well to let any ancient or modern fallacies about the eternal law of cause and effect deceive us. If a soul is lost there is a cause in the decisions of that soul itself, and all the poetry or philosophy in the world does not change the inevitable effect.

Then let all our Endeavor Societies make this topic a solemn one of warning and entreaty for the unsaved. As young Christians, let us also remember the inevitable result of neglect in preparation for Christian service. It is a sad fallacy to suppose that consecration is a substitute for preparation. There are scores of young people who have consecrated themselves to God for the foreign field, but comparatively few of them are fitted for the work. Scores of people have entered the ministry, but they have never "understood all these things," so as to "bring out of the treasury things new and old." A dash of youthful energy and enthusiasm in Christian work is beautiful, indeed, but if that is all there is to it, it will soon evaporate. Six months or a year at a training school is helpful, but such speedy processes are not sufficient for the needs of the work of to-day. Trained minds of breadth as well as depth, are needed for the great enterprises of the Christian Church and the effective ministry of the word at home or abroad.

Lastly, there are many lost opportunities for Christian service because of lack of consecration and endowment with power for such service. There is unwillingness or incapacity to see the opportunity. We are too often like the disciples who went into the village of Sychar to buy bread, but saw no opportunity to preach Christ, while he found in the one poor woman at the well an opportunity for service that brought to him a whole field whitened for the harvest. "A wise man," said Bacon, "makes opportunity." A river will force itself where there is no way, for in it are mighty forces which cannot be pent up. The power of the Holy Spirit is a river flowing through human channels with resistless energy.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

In the annual report of the F. I. C. E. Union, New England and Oregon Yearly Meeting Unions were not included. Since that time reports have been received from both yearly meetings.

In the statistical report taken from the minutes of New England Yearly Meeting, twenty young peoples' societies, three junior and one intermediate have reported, but eighteen societies have failed to report. They have seven hundred and twenty-eight members, one hundred and forty-two of whom have joined this year, there have been twenty-three accessions to the church from Christian Endeavor Societies. The Union has raised $387.80. The foreign mission money has been sent to Ramallah, Kickapoo Mission; Emory Rees, in Africa, and the American Indians.

Quite an interesting letter has been received from Sarah B. Cash, secretary of Oregon Yearly Meeting Union, stating that while their societies were very much interested in the prayer meeting, the business has been sadly neglected, and that it was only at the last yearly meeting they were organized as a Union. They have two hundred and ninety-three active members, and have raised $54.80 the past year for mission work in Alaska. They will endeavor to raise $100 for foreign missions this coming year, which is no doubt, quite creditable, as the secretary writes that their own country is very largely a mission field. The executive committee expect to seek a better quality of Christian Endeavorers for this year, rather than to enlarge their numbers to any extent, hence they will urge the Quiet Hour in all the societies, and will secure as many pledges as possible to the same. They will also urge that the motto: "for Christ and the Church," be emphasized, and that the young people be careful not to allow the committee work of the society to prevent them from attending the business meetings of the church, and from taking their proper place in all church work.

Their plan for this year is to perfect the work already begun, and prepare for a larger growth next year.

Secretary F. I. C. E. U.

ANNUAL MASS MEETING OF WESTERN YEARLY MEETING CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION.

After a song service, Esther Frame led the devotional service. After a beautiful eulogy upon the presence of the mass of young people and upon Christian Endeavor work in general, she offered prayer.

Thomas C. Brown, clerk of yearly meeting, was presented with a gavel, made from the remains of a sill and a banister from the first Friends' meeting house in Marion County. This house has not been used for fifty years.

After an appropriate speech of acceptance by the receiver, the reading clerk read the opening minute of this session.

The remainder of the evening was given to Christian Endeavor reports, and an address by Elbert Russell, of Earlham College.

The report of the superintendent showed thirty-six societies, with almost one thousand active members. Fourteen societies are reported disbanded, and six new societies organized during the year.

Opposition to Christian Endeavor has sprung up within the past year, coming from a false alarm or fear of formality, and also false teaching upon some points of Christian Endeavor. May not the prayers of all true followers of Jesus Christ ascend to God, that these difficulties may be eradicated from our midst, and that all may be united in this work for Christ and the church?

Eucario M. Sein, a native worker in Mexico, has been supported the past year.

One of our own Endeavorers, Emory J. Rees, has gone to Africa during the year, and is partially supported by Christian Endeavor efforts.

The Juniors have been heartily engaged in the Flower Mission work, and are helping support a pupil in the Mexican Mission School. Representative officers from Iowa, Ohio, Kansas and New England Christian Endeavor Unions were present with greetings.

The officers for the coming year are: Superintendent, Irving King; assistant superintendent, Lenora N. Hobbs; junior superintendent, Lillie M. Willits; secretary, Cora E. Green; treasurer, Jessie Hockett; executive board: Albert J. Brown, Curtis B. Newson, Olma Hadley.

Irving King, as our new superintendent, asked that we emphasize the "Tenth Legion" and "Quiet Hour" this year, giving as the key-note for the year, "More giving—a closer walk with God."

At a late hour, Elbert Russell was announced to give to us "The Message of the Friends' Church to the World To-day."

In his characteristic manner, he first told us "What it is not," and second, "What it is." His remarks on the old English elaborate and expensive dress as leading to the strictness of early Friends, as to dress, was most interesting and suggestive.

The Friends' Church has not a formal message, but a spiritual one; not plainness of dress, language, nor silent worship, but Jesus Christ, the revealer of the Father, Saviour of the world, with us yet in the Holy Spirit. The message is to live and teach Christ, and Him crucified, as the Door, the Way, the Truth, the Life. To see in Him, first: the truth of God's love and will toward us; second, a pattern and power of transformed life; third, a pledge and promise of God's universal knowledge and our eternal life.

OLMA HADLEY,
Secretary W. Y. M. C. E. Union.

LETTER FROM PRESIDENT OF THE UNION.

I am glad to greet the Christian Endeavorers of the the Friends' Church again.

I thank you for the courtesy and confidence shown in asking that I act as your chairman another year. The great Detroit convention is in the past, and yet lives, and its works do follow it.

Those who were present, could not but feel the inspiring influence of such a host of earnest Christian workers.

The thought of each should be: What did I get from the convention that will do me the most good, and make me the greatest blessing to others? Surely, these two thoughts are pregnant with meaning.

First, that all things in life should be made to militate for my personal salvation and good. Some of the "all things" seem hard, but God has said, "They work for good to them that love him." Of course, the pleasant things of life are at once accepted and made ours.

Both should be made chariots in which we ride a little nearer Christ, who drank the cup to the very dregs, and tasted death for every man.

Second, to be as great a blessing to other souls as possible. A world filled with the spirit of selfishness and greed forbids that our lives should fail to flow out for others. Our Master has most beautifully set us the example, stating it was His meat and drink to do his Father's will, and if his, it ought most truly to be ours.

O, what a mission, a channel through which our Father's blessing may reach needy hearts!

There are many phases of Christian Endeavor work, yet they all sum up in these two expressions: First, to be, and then to do, and upon these two propositions hang all the law of Christian Endeavor life and work. Please remember your officers in prayer, that God may help them to help you in the work to be done, and thereby the year before us will be freighted with victories, and blessing all along the line.

Our Father's blessing be upon you all.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

President Clark announces that over 16,000 have joined the Christian Endeavor Comrades of the Quiet Hour.

Skaguay, Alaska, has a union Junior Endeavor Society, besides a splendid Young People's Society.

The Christian Endeavor Tenth Legion now numbers over 15,000.

The Christian Endeavorers of the Reformed Church of America have been, for eleven years past, building home mission churches. Last year their record stood in all twelve Churches, which the board proudly calls "Christian Endeavor" churches. The latest report shows fifteen churches to their credit, besides a Christian Endeavor station at Chittoor, India, with fifteen out-stations, wholly sustained by Endeavor offerings, and work aided in Oklahoma, China, Japan, and Arabia.

The Christian Endeavor conferences at Northfield were a success in every way, and Mr. Moody has announced that they will be a regular feature of the closing weeks of future Northfield conferences.

The United Society of Christian Endeavor is making splendid preparation for the World's Christian Endeavor Convention, which is to be held in London next July. Treasurer William Shaw, Tremont Temple, Boston, is in charge of the official excursion.

Mr. W. H. Pennell, the first signer of the Christian Endeavor pledge in Dr. Clark's original Christian Endeavor Society, was buried at Portland, Me., September 15th. President Francis E. Clark conducted the funeral exercises.

Waiting will not take away the chronic ail, restore nerves and bones, and remove pain; nor will it bring to the empty arms and the lacerated heart what they are always crying for. But waiting brings the beatitude of God,—quiet, peace, strength, trust, hope,—not with the old bound and jubilation, but other graces, better,—quiet, peace, strength.—J. F. W. Ware.

Isom P. Wooton has been absent from Boston for some weeks in Iowa.

George A. Barton has been in Boston for the past four weeks, and he has been in attendance at Boston meeting during this time.

The Cleveland Training School has opened with a good large attendance, and the opening days have been occasions of blessing.

A. Edward Kelsey is settled at Winthrop Centre, Maine, where he is engaged in pastoral work in that meeting and in the new meeting at Winthrop Village.

Levi D. Barr writes from Newberg, Oregon: "Pacific College opened on Ninth month 20th with a good attendance and interest. There is a bright prospect before the College for the coming year. I hope to have THE AMERICAN FRIEND in each home before the present year closes."

H. Orville Jones, who has been located at Greenville, Indiana, is expecting soon to leave that place. He feels drawn toward foreign mission work if a right opening comes for him to engage in such work.

The present address of Mary S. Knowles is 27 Hooker Avenue, Poughkeepsie, New York, where she is engaged in pastoral work.

The seventy-ninth session of Indiana Yearly Meeting opened on the 27th of Ninth month. John Henry Douglas, Oliver M. Frazier, Caroline Hunnicutt, Alfred and Anna Johnson and Eli Spray are among the visiting ministers. Elwood O. Ellis, who is clerk of the yearly meeting, has asked for a "minute" to attend London and Dublin Yearly Meetings and other meetings during his journey to England, the continent of Europe, and Egypt and the Holy Land. A report of the meetings will be given next week.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

West Elkton, Ohio.—Westfield Quarterly Meeting was held at West Elkton, Ohio, Ninth month 17th, 1899. The attendance was good and considerable business was transacted. Allen Jay visited the meeting in the interest of the yearly meeting debt and secured subscriptions to the amount of $67.75. Answers to the queries of the yearly meeting were proposed and accepted, and delegates and alternates appointed to the same. The Evangelistic Committee reported two series of meetings held—one at each monthly meeting—both of which were blessed of the Lord. Thirty dollars have been raised for evangelistic work and $355 for pastoral work. Eli Jay was present and spoke of the importance of securing all monthly and quarterly meeting records in a fireproof safe. All old records were placed in his hands for safekeeping. The attendance on First-day was large. In all the sessions a deep religious spirit prevailed.

M. J. STAFFORD.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Cripple Creek, Col.—The Lord turned our steps westward the fifteenth of Eighth month. We reached Smithfield, O., in time to attend Short Creek Quarterly Meeting. It was indeed a gracious season. There was a good degree of spiritual life manifest, and the Lord sanctioned his word. It has been six years since we have been permitted to meet with the Friends at Smithfield. As we looked upon the familiar streets and hills and valleys of old Smithfield, we thanked God and took courage. How tender has been the hand of the Master in these years! How graciously He has opened the way for a quiet ministry and how truly His presence has sustained us!

Ohio Yearly Meeting, held at Mt. Pleasant, was a time of refreshing to all the Lord's own. Many of the dear men of God whom we had listened to in boyhood were present, ministering to the edification and blessing of many. Emma Coffin, of Iowa, and Flora Holiday, of Indiana, were especially blessed in preaching. John Pennington, who was in charge of the morning devotional meetings, had good liberty in teaching a full Gospel. All hearts were stirred by the magnificent response of the people to the needs of the missionary work. Twenty-three hundred dollars were quickly raised without begging or urging. Praise the Lord.

The meeting in Denver, Col., was held in a large public building in River Front Park, and was under the auspices of Colorado State Holiness Association. It was truly a wonderful time. The attendance was good, and the fruitage of these blessed ten days was truly wonderful.

On First-day the writer had the privilege of attending Denver Meeting of Friends. The neat, plain meeting house, the bright-faced young people and interested older people all impressed us favorably, and led us to hope for much from this little meeting in this great city of the West.

We were gratified to meet M. Z. Kirk in Denver. His letters in THE AMERICAN FRIEND have interested us much and created a desire to meet him face to face.

The two-day interdenominational meeting, at Colorado Springs, was very fruitful. The meetings held at Cripple Creek are being held in the Congregational Church, G. W. Ray, pastor. It seems to us that Friends ought to push forward into these mountain cities, such as Cripple Creek and Victor, and publish unequivocally a full and effective Gospel.

Let me ask for the prayers of all God's people that the Lord may bless the labors of His servants and prosper the work committed unto them.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Lamb's Corner, Me.—Vassalboro Quarterly Meeting of Ninth month 9th and 10th was such a thoroughly interesting and helpful occasion that it should be reported in our AMERICAN FRIEND.

Charles H. Jones, our Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Gospel Work, was present; also Mary Myers, of Lynn, and Horace Hall, Marquis Thomas and Martha Osborne, ministers from neighboring quarterly meetings. The quarterly meeting at this time of year is held at Vassalboro, and is attended not only by our membership, but by the students of Oak Grove Seminary, and by many of their parents and friends from all the country around. The key-note of the whole meeting was "Be ye steadfast."

First "Start right," then "Build upon the sure foundation." Charles Jones said, "Don't be unstable, changeable, but be steadfast, immovable." Mary Myers exhorted us to be "dependable" Christians.

At our business session the quarterly meeting endorsed the action of Vassalboro Monthly Meeting in recognizing the gift in the ministry of Evelyn Prescott and Wilbur Estes. The latter has recently gone with his wife as missionary to China. The meeting expressed much interest and sympathy in his work. Charles Jones said, "The recognizing of gifts in the ministry should not be such an unusual occurrence." "The reason it is so is not because there are no young men and women called to the ministry, but because of some lack in the church these gifts are not developed."

On Sabbath morning, to a full house, C. H. Jones preached on the necessity of regeneration, the new birth, building on the sure foundation. Mary Myers followed, speaking in a very helpful way, especially to the students and young people. In the afternoon C. H. Jones again preached, this time to the church, the Christians, on "Growth in the Christian Life: the Need of the Indwelling Spirit." Perfect harmony prevailed in the line of thought running through all the meetings, so that it seemed like one continuous service. This seemed a sure evidence of the leading of the Holy Spirit, since when He guides there is always harmony.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Sterling Quarterly Meeting was held at Hoisington, Kansas, on the 15th, 16th and 17th of this month. We had the acceptable company of Asher Mott, a minister from Barclay Monthly Meeting, and five of our own ministers were in attendance, each of whom (as well as our visiting brother) had some service during the sessions of the quarterly meeting, so that the Gospel was faithfully preached; also two subjects of special interest to us were by previous arrangement discussed in a session especially called for "ministers and workers," which was quite well attended. Subject: First, "What is the relation of the evangelist to the pastor or home minister"; second, "In what respect should the minister be a specialist?" The usual business was transacted in unity. The meeting house of the Friends being too small, the Methodists kindly welcomed us to theirs, and also opened heart and home in true Christian fellowship and attended the meetings with us, so that altogether we all believe that much good may result to the community from this first quarterly meeting in that place.

J. W. W.

Tecumseh, Oklahoma.—Shawnee Monthly Meeting was held on the 17th ult. Twelve names were handed in for membership as a result of the "Friends' Camp Meeting" held at this place in Eighth month. The meetings continued eighteen days, and for the first ten days we had the very helpful assistance of Eliza B. Carey, Evangelistic Superintendent of Kansas Yearly Meeting. The weather was very hot, but the attendance on evenings was large. Some came a distance of twenty miles, and camped on the grounds. Thirty-six professed conversion, a part of whom are Indians. Church members were built up and strengthened, and a number testified to a deeper work of grace and a greater love for the cause of Christ. Since these meetings closed we are glad to note the attendance at our regular meetings of some who had not before been attending.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Russiaville, Ind.—Nathan D. Knight, of Westfield, Ind., has been chosen pastor of the Friends' churches of Russiaville, West Middleton and Lynn, in New London Quarterly Meeting. He began his work on the 24th of Ninth month. These meetings are very nicely located for a pastoral charge. West Middleton is about four miles northeast of Russiaville and Lynn church about two miles east. The members of these meetings are expecting a very prosperous year's work in the Lord's vineyard.

Married.

KELSEY—MACOMBER.—At New Bedford, Mass., Friends' Meeting House, Ninth month 21st, 1899, A. Edward Kelsey to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of William Penn and Esther Macomber. Their future home will be Winthrop Centre, Maine.

PECKHAM—WEAVER.—At the home of the bride, in Smyrna, N. Y., Eighth month 16th, 1899, Henry K. Peckham, formerly of Kansas, to Phebe A. Weaver, daughter of Chester A. Weaver. Both are members of Smyrna Monthly Meeting of Friends.

WEAVER—PECKHAM.—At the same time and place, John S. Weaver, son of Chester A. Weaver, to Estella Peckham, daughter of Henry K. Peckham.

YOUNG—GROVES.—Ninth month 6th, 1899, at the home of the bride's parents, John and Ida Groves, Willis, Mich., Fred E. Young to Millie J. Groves. Their future home will be Bad Axe, Mich.

Died.

ALLEN.—At her home, in Cincinnati, Ohio, Seventh month 17th, 1899, Grace Amy Johnson, wife of Alfred G. Allen, and daughter of Evan Lewis and Anna M. Johnson.

News and Events.

The revolutionary movement in Venezuela has assumed very formidable proportions. The principal leader of the insurgents, General Cipriano Castro, was lately defeated as a candidate for the governor of one of the provinces, and lays his defeat to President Andrade. He has united with him General Hernandez, who was the opposition candidate to Andrade in the last election for the presidency. The insurgent forces are pressing closely the government defences, and at this writing are threatening the city of Caracas, the capital of the country, the important town of Valencia having already been seized by Castro. President Andrade expresses the usual confidence in being able to crush the rebellion, but he has thus far failed to prove his power to do so. It is generally understood in this country that President Andrade is acceptable to the people in the cities, and that the revolution which grows out of the disturbances and rivalries of the past two years has its strength chiefly in the remoter mountain provinces. An American warship—the Detroit—is at the port of Guayra, to watch the interests of American citizens in Venezuela. It is the expression of a merchant, one who holds large interests in the country, that there can be no material improvement in Venezuelan affairs under any native ruler. He says, "The country is rotten to the core, and is drifting surely to a point where foreign intervention will become inevitable." It is suggested that Germany will be the nation to take the initiative, since the Andrade government recently defaulted in interest on a large German loan.

Fourteen Americans who have been held as prisoners by the Filipinos, were returned by their captors on the 30th ult. They were brought into Manila by the Philippine peace commissioners. The prisoners were in excellent condition, and their appearance wholly belied the tales of cruelty from the Filipinos which have been so persistently rumored. The press despatch states, that, "They looked the picture of health, and were dressed in new Filipino uniforms of blue gingham, and were carrying monkeys and other presents from their Filipino friends." The prisoners have been lionized by the people, and whether their kind treatment was merely a stroke of policy on the part of Aguinaldo to favorably impress General Otis, everyone must be pleased that the treatment accorded them was so excellent. Disappointment was felt that the members of Lieutenant Gilmore's party were not also returned. These Americans are still retained as prisoners at some point in the north of Luzon. The peace envoy brought from Aguinaldo a message that he desired peace, and wished to send a civilian governmental commission to discuss the question. General Otis replied that it was impossible for him to recognize Aguinaldo's government in that way. This is the third attempt of the Filipino leader to go some sort of recognition of his government. It is of interest to notice that General Alejandro, the head of the commission, gives the opinion that the Filipinos "could maintain a state of war and the necessity for a large army occupation indefinitely."

The opinion in London and elsewhere prevails as strong as ever that war with the Boers is inevitable unless President Kruger shall speedily recede from his determination to maintain the internal independence of the Transvaal. The rumored fusion of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State offers some possibility that Kruger may, by a master stroke of policy, place the Boers on such a footing that he may grant all or even more concessions in respect to the franchise than Secretary Chamberlain has demanded, and thus place the blame for war most indisputably upon the colonial secretary. It will be remembered that the Outlanders, who are mostly British subjects, outnumber the Boers three to one, and should they secure the full franchise, the government would soon revert into their control. But the Boers of the Orange Free State constitute the overwhelming majority of all the white inhabitants, and if the two states were merged politically, the consolidated Boer population would so far outnumber the rest of the white population that the Boers would still retain undisputed political control, even with the five years' Outlander franchise in operation. It is doubtful whether such an alliance would be recognized by England, even though it is according to treaties now existing. In the meanwhile preparations for war continue and the conflict daily draws nearer.

NOTES.—Admiral Dewey reached New York on the 26th ult., two days before he was expected. The naval parade in his honor was held on the 29th, and land parade on the 30th.—According to late reports, the bubonic plague is spreading in Portugal.—A severe earthquake shock at Smyrna killed a thousand persons, injured eight hundred, and demolished two thousand houses.—President McKinley has approved the sentence of Captain Oberlin M. Carter to dismissal from the army, to be fined $5,000, and to five years' imprisonment.—The Chinese government has uttered an emphatic protest to our state department against the decree of General Otis excluding the Chinese from Manila.—Secretary of state Hay has made a statement completely denying the existence of any secret alliance between this country and Great Britain.

AN INTERESTING INVENTION.

The dislike felt by most people to wearing overshoes, and the general tendency to omit thus properly covering the feet in damp or wet weather, is undoubtedly the cause of much sickness and more discomfort from colds and minor ills. Many have wished that leather were in itself waterproof, and that in this way the annoyance of overshoes might be dispensed with; but unfortunately the nature of leather is such that it is anything but impervious to moisture, as all well know. However, relief is even now at hand. A gentleman who conceived the idea of rendering leather waterproof has, after much experimenting and many severe tests, prepared an article which, when applied to shoes, makes them absolutely waterproof. A shoe treated with this preparation was soaked in water for thirty days, and when taken out was as dry inside as the day when immersed. It was then placed in the sun for six days, after which it was again put in water, when it was found to be as waterproof as before, and almost as soft and pliable as a kid glove. Shoes to which the dressing has been applied, which have been worn for two months have remained entirely waterproof, and the feet have been kept so dry in rainy weather that overshoes would have been useless. Experience With the Berry.

"I have gained twenty-five pounds since I left off coffee and began drinking Postum Food Coffee.

"I had become very thin in flesh and suffered tortures with heartburn, was a nervous wreck with headache practically all the time until one dreadful day when the good doctor told me I must quit drinking coffee, as he had nothing left to try, to relieve me.

"I could not drink tea, and had tried everything else, even Postum, but put it by at the first trial, because it was tasteless.

"Forced to it again, I determined to see if it could not be made palatable and found at once that when I followed directions and boiled it long enough, that I not only liked it but gave it to my husband for several days without his finding it out. I have the name of making splendid coffee, and we always used the best, but of late I have given Postum to guests many times in place of coffee and have never been deceived yet.

"Our four children have not drank coffee for three years, and all have gained health and flesh since using Postum. One son, who was always sick, has been greatly benefited by its use, and as above stated, I have gained twenty-five pounds since taking up Postum. I am healthier to-day than I have been for years and give Postum all the credit. Please do not use my name in public."

This lady lives in Burlington, Des Moines County, Iowa and the name will be furnished by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., to those interested.

liar property of the dressing is that it does not close the pores of the leather nor interfere in any way with the necessary ventilation of the feet through the leather in the shoes. It seems to soak into the leather-substance and to become a part of the leather itself. It does not interfere with polishing the shoes, but rather makes the lustre of the polish more brilliant and preserves the polish after it has once been applied. Another important fact is that the durability of the leather is at least doubled by the use of the dressing. It will be put on the market under the name of "Leatherine."

HIS FACE WAS HIS OWN.

Professor Blackie used to form a very picturesque feature in the streets of Edinburgh, with his long hair falling in patriarchal ringlets over his shoulders. He very much enjoyed telling this racy anecdote on himself:

One day he was accosted by a very dirty little bootblack with his "Shine yer boots, sir?" The professor was impressed by the filthiness of the boy's face.

"I don't want a shine, my lad," said he. "But if you'll go and wash your face, I'll give you sixpence."

"A' hicht, sir," was the lad's reply. Then he went over to a neighboring fountain and made his ablutions. Returning, he held out his hand for the money.

"Well, my lad," said the professor, "you have earned your sixpence. Here it is."

"I dinna want it," returned the boy with a lordly air. "Ye can keep it and get yer hair cut."

MEETING IN AID OF DUKHOBORTSI.

The liberal contributions to the fund to assist the Dukhobortsi in their immigration to, and settlement in Canada, have been largely appropriated to procure oxen, horses, cows, wagons and implements, as well as to afford relief to the sick and weakly. Additional means are required to furnish subsistence for the coming winter, besides that which they are able to procure by their labor. To this end a public meeting to promote continued effort in their aid, is appointed to be held at Arch Street meeting house, on Tenth month 5th, at 7.30 p.m. All who are interested are invited to be present. It is designed to give further information at the meeting and to organize associated effort for their relief.

On behalf of the Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings: Jonathan E. Rhoads, Ephraim Smith, William Evans.

The following minute of the Meeting for Sufferings, held this month, is appended. "Two members of the Committee to assist the Dukhobortsi gave some interesting information in regard to these people, derived from a recent visit among them. Owing to the lateness of their arrival in America, the scarcity of stock and implements, and the cutting off of some of their crops by an early frost, they will be largely dependent on the contributions of

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY'S EXCELLENT SERVICE TO POINTS SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY, the chief as well as the popular artery of travel between Philadelphia and Washington, and all points South and Southwest, maintains a superb service of magnificently equipped trains, which leave Philadelphia daily at 7.20 a.m., 5.34 p.m., and 6.55 p.m., reaching, without change, all the chief Southern cities.

The Washington and Southwestern Vestibule Limited, which has long been famous as one of the handsomest trains in America, now has an added feature of attraction in the form of a beautiful Library and Observation car. This will be very much appreciated by the travelling public, as it affords an opportunity of viewing, under the most favorable circumstances, the charming sub-scenery of the historic Piedmont region, as well as the uplands of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The car is for the use of all passengers holding Pullman tickets on the train, and is handsomely furnished with easy, richly-upholstered, movable chairs. It also has a wide, fully-covered extension platform at the rear, capable of accommodating quite a large number of people, who may prefer to travel in the open air and enjoy the unobstructed view of the whirling panorama.

The Washington and Southwestern Limited leaves Philadelphia at 6.55 p.m., daily, and is composed of Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars, to Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Knoxville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Memphis, Tenn., Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, La. In addition to these it carries one first-class thoroughfare coach, as well as a well-appointed Dining-Car, in which meals are served between Philadelphia and New Orleans. In this connection it is worthy of note that the Southern Railway is the only railroad in the South operating a system of dining-cars, and the menu and meals upon them are maintained at the highest standard.

The Washington and Chattanooga Limited of the Southern Railway, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., is another handsome train. It carries through Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Memphis, Tenn., and New Orleans, La., via Lynchburg, Va., and Bristol, Tenn. Combined Café, Parlor and Observation Cars are operated between Radford, Va., and Attalla, Ala. Meals are served in the Café Compartment at all hours on the European plan. Luxurious chairs in the Parlor Compartments are available for passengers at a moderate charge, the observation portion of car affording a most comfortable location for viewing this magnificent scenery. Passengers occupying Pullman cars have use of this car without extra charge.

The New York and Florida Express, leaving Philadelphia daily at 5.34 p.m., carries Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars to Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., Columbia, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., via Charlotte, N. C. Connections are made at Columbia, S. C., with the Charleston Division for Charleston, S. C., and at Trenton Junction for Aiken, S. C.

The United States Fast Mail of the Southern Railway, leaving Washington, D. C., daily, at 11.15 a.m., connecting with train leaving Philadelphia at 7.20 a.m., is one of the most popular trains operated in the South. This is composed of thoroughfare coaches and Pullman Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars between Washington, D. C., and New Orleans, La., Jacksonville, Fla., Charlotte, N. C., Augusta, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., with Pullman Sleeping Cars between Salisbury, N. C., and Memphis, Tenn., and Dining-Car between Washington, D. C., and Spartanburg, S. C. Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will be pleased to furnish rates, time-tables, and any further information.

Frances H. Low's "A Woman's Criticism of the Women's Congress," in "The Living Age" for September 23d, will be read with lively interest by conservative and "advanced" women. Lady Broome's "Colonial Memories," now appearing serially in the "Cornhill" and "The Living Age" are bright, good-humored and entertaining in an unusual degree.

ROTHSCHILD AMONG KINGS.

Among the anecdotes related by the Hon. John Bigelow, in the October "Century," in a series of extracts from his conversations with Von Bunsen, is this about the famous banker Rothschild:

"During the famous Congress of Vienna, already referred to, each of the several monarchs present was the guest of some nobleman. On one festive occasion Baron Rothschild was invited par exception. He modestly went to take his place—not among the more exalted guests. When they discovered Rothschild, however, they all rose, one after the other, and saluted him, except the King of Prussia. Some one asked the king why he did not salute the great European banker. 'Did I not?' he replied. 'Well, I suppose it was because I was the only one who did not owe him anything.' This reminds me of a line in one of Pope's satires:

"I never answered: I was not in debt."

AN AUTUMN OUTING.

Gettysburg, Luray, Natural Bridge, Hot Springs, Richmond, and Washington.

An eleven-day personally-conducted tour of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to the Battlefield of Gettysburg, Luray Caverns, Natural Bridge, Virginia Hot Springs, and the cities of Richmond and Washington, will leave New York and Philadelphia in a special train of parlor cars on Thursday, Oct. 19. The party will be in charge of a tourist agent and an experienced chaperon. A whole day will be spent on the Battlefield of Gettysburg, a carriage drive with lectures by an able guide, being included in the ticket. Ample time will be allowed at Luray and Natural Bridge to view the wondrous natural formations, and at the Hot Springs two days will be spent. The season at this great autumn resort in the beautiful mountains of Virginia will be at its height. At Richmond and Washington opportunities will be presented to visit all the points of interest under intelligent guidance.

The round-trip rate, including all necessary expenses, is $65 from New York, $63 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For detailed itinerary apply to Ticket Agents; to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

YOUR WEIGHT IN GOLD.

The "Buffalo Express" prepares a tabulated statement, by which the woman who is told that she "is worth her weight in gold," may estimate correctly the exact worth of that comparison. She finds that it is but little, relatively speaking. Indeed she is apt, when she sees the cold figures, to place a somewhat higher estimate on herself:

THE FACT that THE AMERICAN FRIEND has rendered satisfactory service to some of the best known and most successful advertisers in the United States is sure evidence of the value of space in its pages. It is the only religious publication by which advertisers can reach the large body of Friends (Orthodox) throughout the United States. It occupies therefore a distinctive place in the large family of denominational publications. We solicit good advertising only. Rates on application.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND,
718 Arch St., Phila.

At the market rate, pure gold is worth about $300,000 a cubic foot, or $108 a cubic inch. If Mr. Rockefeller were worth but his weight in gold, he would only possess a little nugget six and one-third inches square. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who is physically somewhat larger than Mr. Rockefeller, would own a cube seven and one-half inches square; Russell Sage's block would measure one and one-quarter inches and Mrs. Hetty Green six and three-quarter inches.

Were Mr. Rockefeller worth only his own weight in gold, instead of counting his dollars by the two hundred million, he would pay taxes on $33,750. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who probably ranks next in point of wealth, would have but $42,500, instead of his $150,000,000. Russell Sage, in place of his $80,000,000, would be worth $40,000, and Mrs. Hetty Green, whose fortune is estimated at $50,000,000, would have $38,750. The following table will enable one to tell at a glance nearly the value of a person's weight in gold:

90 lbs.....$22,500	150 lbs.....$37,000
95 lbs.....23,500	155 lbs.....38,750
100 lbs.....25,000	160 lbs.....40,000
105 lbs.....26,250	165 lbs.....41,250
110 lbs.....27,500	170 lbs.....42,500
115 lbs.....28,750	175 lbs.....43,750
120 lbs.....30,000	180 lbs.....45,000
125 lbs.....31,250	185 lbs.....46,250
130 lbs.....32,500	190 lbs.....47,500
135 lbs.....33,750	195 lbs.....48,750
140 lbs.....35,000	200 lbs.....50,000
145 lbs.....36,250

Therefore the expression "worth her weight in gold," is not trite, but precious, and consequently must be taken with several "grains of salt."—The Presbyterian.

The Southern Railway Makes Low Rates to Philadelphia, Account the National Export Exposition.

Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent Southern Railway, 823 Chestnut Street, advises the Southern Railway has announced very low rates from points in Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia to Philadelphia and return account the National Export Exposition.

The Southern Railway is also very liberal as to the return limit of these low rate round trip tickets, allowing a limit of thirty days. Mr. Hopkins says the prospects are very favorable for the Exposition to be largely attended from the South.

All information as to rates etc., from any point in the South will be cheerfully furnished by Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 823 Chestnut St., Phila.

PEACE POLICY of PRESIDENT ULYSSES S. GRANT.

By LAWRIE TATUM, formerly United States Indian Agent.

A most interesting book relating to the history and customs of the Indians, written by one who has mingled with "Our Red Brothers" and who is well equipped for the task he has undertaken. "The prime motive for writing this volume has been to record some important items of history in connection with the Indians and the overruling providence of God, and to show that 'the Peace Policy' in dealing with the Indians, which commenced in 1869, has proved a great blessing to them, to the government, and to people of the nation."

Containing 366 pages, well printed on good paper, neatly bound in cloth, with gold lettering on side and back. Sixteen full page half-tone engravings.

FORGIVENESS LANE.

Forgiveness Lane is old as youth—

You cannot miss your way;

'Tis hedged by flowering thorn, forsooth,

Where white doves fearless stray.

You must walk gently with your love—

Frail blossoms dread your feet,

And bloomy branches close above

Make heaven near and sweet.

Some lovers fear the stile of pride

And turn away in pain,

But more have kissed where white doves hide,

And blessed Forgiveness Lane.

A MODERN INSTANCE.

The wonderful advance made in the science of farming during the last few years is one of the best examples of American progressiveness. A little incident recounted by the Ashtabula (Ohio) "Sentinel" is characteristic.

One evening, a short time ago, a society in Jefferson needed a gallon of cream. The committee called up by telephone the proprietors of a milk farm two miles north of the town, and asked if they could furnish it. The reply was that they could as soon as milking was done. In thirty minutes from the time the call was made the cream was delivered.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

The milk had been drawn from the cow, put into a separator, the cream extracted and sent to town by a man on a bicycle.

A few years ago the committee would have had to send a boy in the afternoon, "yesterday's milk" would have had to be skimmed, and if the boy had not treed too many chipmunks on the way, he might have got back in time for the festival.

GROPING ALONE.

Again down life's dim labyrinth
I grope my way alone,
While madly through the midnight sky,
Black, hurrying clouds are blown,
And thickly, in my tangled path,
The sharp, bare thorns are sown.

Yet firm my foot, for well I know
The goal cannot be far,
And ever, through the rifted clouds,
Shines out the one steady star;
For when my guide went up, He left
The pearly gates ajar.

Three Months' Free Subscription

In order to introduce "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" into homes where the paper is not already taken we will send it to new subscribers from the date the subscription is received to the end of 1900, for only $1.50, the regular yearly subscription price.

Every one accepting this offer will thus receive "The American Friend" free for the remainder of this year. Those who send promptly will get all the issues from the present number on. Copies of every issue from the present inclusive will be sent until exhausted.

"The American Friend" is the only weekly publication among Friends which represents the entire denomination from Atlantic to Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico. Through it alone can Friends keep themselves acquainted with the work of the denomination; to those who would keep abreast of the movements of the church it is absolutely indispensable.

It gives in its fifty-two issues each year a collection of articles from the best writers in our denomination, and many valuable papers from Christian thinkers of other branches of the Church. It treats in a broad and liberal spirit the great questions now before the Church, and it stands for every great moral reform which would make man freer and more permanently happy. It is not controversial, but illuminative and constructive. It is an exponent of applied Christianity. Christian Endeavorers cannot afford to miss its valuable department for this branch of the Church. Bible Classes will find much profit from its study of the International Lesson. It is also a newspaper, giving a general view of the home and foreign mission work, accounts of special meetings and the movement of workers, as well as full reports of all Yearly Meetings.

With the present offer to send the paper free to the end of this year, we should secure at least one thousand new subscriptions before the first of 1900. If every one of our present subscribers would get only one new subscriber in this way, we should have over 6500 more subscribers, and the influence of "The American Friend" would be doubled. Let all who see this notice call the attention of their friends to its importance. Let the subject be mentioned in meetings everywhere, and let an effort be made generally to extend the sphere of influence American Friend. Sample copies will be sent to every one desiring them.

Remember: we will send "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" until First month 1st, 1901, for only $1.50.

SAY NOT THE STRUGGLE NAUGHT AVAILETH.

*Say not the struggle naught availeth,
The labor and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been they remain.*

*If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars;
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fliers,
And, but for you, possess the field.*

*For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain,
Far back, through creeks and inlets making,
Comes silent, flooding in, the main;*

*And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light,
In front, the sun climbs slow, how slowly!
But westward, look, the land is bright.*

Side by side are we still, though a shadow
Between us doth fall;
We are parted, and yet are not parted,
Not wholly and all.
For still you are round and about me,
Almost in my reach,
Though I miss the old pleasant communion
Of smile and of speech.

And I long to hear what you are saying,
And what you have done,
Since the earth faded out from your vision
And the heavens begun;
Since you dropped off the darkening fillet
Of clay from your sight,
And opened your eyes upon glory
Ineffably bright.

Though little my life has accomplished,
My poor hands have wrought,
I have lived what has seemed to be ages
In feeling and thought,
Since the time when our path grew so narrow,
So near the unknown,
That I turned back from following after,
And you went alone.

But we speak of you cheerfully, always,
As journeying on;
Not as one who is dead do we name you,
We say you are gone.
For how could we speak of you sadly,
We who watched while the grace
Of eternity's wonderful beauty
Grew over your face!

Do we call the star lost that is hidden
In the great light of morn?
Or fashion a shroud for the young child
In the day it is born?
Yet, behold, this were wise to their folly,
Who mourn, sore distressed,
When a soul, that is summoned believing,
Enters its rest!

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

Christianity is not a new philosophy. It is a "way of life," and this expression was the common name for the new religion among its early adherents—"Those of the Way." Again it is called, "the power of God unto salvation;" that is, it is a revelation of God's power at work in the world to save men and to fit them for higher ends. It is the evangel of the kingdom, as it always appears in the parables of Christ. It is, in the simplest statement, God's plan to reconstruct man and society, and it is in this sense, it seems to us, that Christ uses the great expression, "Kingdom of Heaven," "Kingdom of God," "the Kingdom," "My Kingdom." It is the perfect, original order of things which has its home in heaven, coming down from hence and realizing itself on the earth; it is the ideal condition of humanity, existing first only in God's thought, and then wrought out by Him as an existing fact; it is the realized sway of God as the beginning and end of all things.

The expression was a common one to the Jews of the period, and John the Baptist's cry, "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," meant to those who heard it the setting up of the temporal messianic kingdom under a king who should break all foreign yokes and make Israel in very truth the people of God. They conceived a kingdom which should perfect the law and ceremonies, which should make the Temple, the holy of holies, the central spot of the globe. Their fundamental idea was the establishment of an Israelitish theocracy, which should extend itself politically over all the nations, as Rome had extended its sway. Christ, however, never ceased to declare and demonstrate that he had not come to break the Roman yoke or establish a Jewish supremacy. Little by little it dawned upon the disciples that this kingdom of which they so often heard from their Master's lips was totally unlike the "perishable husk" for which the people yearned. It was not a thing of "lo here or lo there ;" it was not the establishment of a new external kingdom, or the setting up of a more perfect Temple service and a purified ritual, but the proclamation of a new life to be entered by a birth from above—a fact which the great Jewish lawyer, Nicodemus, could not possibly comprehend. It comes whenever a soul yields to the wooing of God, and lets His light break in. It establishes itself not in a Temple or a capital city, but in a heart that yields to the sway of the King. The kingdom itself is perfect as it exists in the thought of God, and if it could have been realized by a magic act and set up ready made, Chrst's work could have been finished in a moment, but it was rather God's plan to realize the kingdom on the earth progressively—to draw men to it by Grace and Love, and to increase its realm by silent victories over soul after soul, and then to make each transformed soul a propagator of the new life and power to other souls. Its conquests are never by force or compulsion, but by the diffusion of light, by the manifestation of love, by awakening hunger for righteousness. You may know that it is at work in the world when you see evil defeated and corruption cleansed away. "Where the carcass is there are the vultures," said Christ,—i.e., wherever the old dead and corrupt things appear there are scavengers to remove it and make the air wholesome and pure. As God provides ways of keeping His world clean, so you may see the kingdom coming when evil is put down in a life and Christian graces appear; whenever a corrupt custom is purged away, whenever a sinner is changed into a saint, whenever sin is conquered by the power of God the circle of the kingdom widens, and the truth of Christ's many parables of illustration is proved to all who have eyes to see and ears to hear.

The setting up of this kingdom is not the work of a day or of a year, but the kingdom is like a man who sowed seed in his field and slept, and rose night and day and the seed grew, he knew not how, first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear.

But the fundamental conception of the kingdom of God, as made known in our Gospels, is the truth that it is founded on purity of heart—a heart-purity which is attained only through apprehension of Christ, the Son of God, as the revealer of sin, the redeemer from sin, and through the indwelling and life of God by the Holy Spirit. It is a kingdom in which blessedness comes only with holiness. Every beatitude attaches to a condition of the heart, and can be realized in no other way. No performance of any acts or ceremonies which custom and tradition have authorized and rendered sacred, can in the slightest degree affect one's standing before God. The pure in heart, the meek, the poor in spirit, the peacemaker, the thirster after righteousness—all these have a condition of heart to which a blessing of God immediately follows, as the rain falls when the air is saturated to the deposit point. But the fasting and praying and giving of alms of the Pharisee on the other hand, as well as his scrupulous washings and purifications, his avoidance of all things ceremonially unclean, his spirit of self-righteousness, and his hard, mean nature are far beneath the standard of admission to the kingdom of heaven. "Unless your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees ye shall in no wise enter." This means that the Gospel knows nothing of an acquired goodness—a goodness of effort—a goodness which is put on from the outside—which fits for the kingdom. It is a changed heart, a cleansed life, a transformed nature, a purified being which is required.

TWO WARS.

A Friend writes:

"Why go to the Transvaal for a modern illustration of the Scriptural incident of Naboth's vineyard? Does not our conduct and treatment of the Philippine Islands at this time give a much more forcible application of that affair, and one much nearer home than that of the Boers?"

It is evident, we think, that there is no parallel between our treatment of the Filipinos and the English position on the Transvaal question. They are totally different issues. The situation in the Philippines is as follows, at least so it seems to us: We entered into war with Spain as a result of a complication of affairs in Cuba. The first great blow against Spain was struck in Manila harbor, and the Spanish power in those islands was forever ended as a result of that day's battle. We might have sailed off the next day and left the islands to their fate, but we did not do so. Such a course seemed to our government impossible. We stayed. When peace was declared we took the islands and shouldered the tremendous responsibilities which such a step involved. The natives who were at the beginning of the war under arms against Spain turned their arms against us, and the pitiable war for subjection is the result.

The editor of this paper has often expressed his views on the Spanish war. They were not the views which prevailed. The war came, and it was a great popular movement. Very few were found then, or are found to-day, to condemn it. But if that war was right, which we do not admit, it is difficult to see how the present situation could have been avoided. We are not fighting Filipinos to get their territory, for the islands are our possessions already by treaty according to international law. Granted that we were right in fighting Spain, and in taking up the islands in which we had destroyed her power, we are as much justified in taking stringent means to produce quiet and order there as we are among our home Indians. From our own point of view the great moral mistake was the war with Spain, and all the rest is the natural outcome of that. Personally we abominate the war with the Filipinos, but the dreadful tangle is a straight inheritance from the war, and was bound up with that "day's work" in Manila, which has been so proudly celebrated in the welcome to the Admiral of the fleet. It is well to remember that war always has dreadful consequences, and the way to avoid them is to avoid war.

We have already outlined our view of the Transvaal situation, after a careful study of it, and we see there no defensible ground for war on the part of England, though on this point opinions differ.

A TRIUMPH FOR ARBITRATION.

The careful painstaking work of the arbitrators in the Venezuela boundary case, and their fair, impartial decision will immensely increase, in all civilized countries, the respect felt for the principle of arbitration as a means of settling disputes. In fact, this case is one of the most noteworthy in the whole history of arbitration, and the United States in bringing it about have rendered a substantial service to humanity and to civilization. It is of course remembered that the boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela brought England and America almost to the verge of war, or, at least, so it seemed for a few days, until the clear sense of both countries asserted itself.

The crisis was caused by a declaration from Secretary Olney to the British government that the United States could not regard with indifference an arbitrary decision of claims by the more powerful of the parties in interest,—i.e., by England; that we should insist upon arbitration, and that on refusal of this the United States would proceed in the best way open to them to ascertain the just boundary, and to take such steps as seemed most appropriate to establish and maintain it.

As a result of this startling and forceful declaration an arbitration was arranged for, and the arbitrators sat in Paris to hear the case. Ex-President Harrison represented the government of Venezuela. The decision is somewhat of a "draw"—that is to say, neither party gets all it asked; but there is almost universal satisfaction in Great Britain over the decision. The great point, however, is that the claims were settled fairly and peaceably, and not by the will of the stronger party and not by brute force.

EARLHAM'S NEW FUND.

We are always glad to hear and to publish good news of Earlham College, and Friends everywhere should be concerned and interested in everything which frees one of our educational institutions from financial stringency and makes it able to equip itself for more efficient service. Francis T. White, of New York city, has generously started a wave of giving to Earlham, which is likely to go beyond his expectation. The following letter was received from him from London, and read in Indiana Yearly Meeting:

London, England, the fifteenth day of the Ninth month, A.D. 1899.

To Indiana Yearly Meeting of Religious Society of Friends:

Dear Friends:—Trusting in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, I desire to make known unto you the interest I have in the education and welfare of the youth now and hereafter in this Yearly Meeting. In confirmation thereof, it is my pleasure to present to Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, twenty-five thousand dollars, the same to be known as the Francis T. White endowment fund.

This fund is general in its nature; is similar to the one already established; is given without restriction, save that the income is to be used for general purpose of the institution.

Relying upon the intelligence and wisdom of those who may be appointed to administer this trust for a safe and careful investment thereof, I then most respectfully request that the amount of income derived from the same be presented and read at each ensuing Yearly Meeting, commencing the year 1900. With due deference as to the acceptance of this proposition, I am and remain in fellow membership, Your Friend,

F. T. WHITE.

After the reading of the letter M. M. White, of Cincinnati, rose and proposed that the whole debt of Earlham College, amounting to about $35,000, be lifted before the close of the century. He promised to give $5,000, if Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings would in this first year raise $10,000 toward the amount. Friends began to subscribe at once, and $7,111 were soon raised. This, with the two gifts, makes a total sum of $38,111. The Earlham spirit is aroused and the movement will not go on, and we hope for great things.

A VESPER PRAYER.

As the day is sweetly closing
With a twilight calmly blest,
And the weary little warblers
Fall asleep in yonder nest,
Now, I come to Thee, O Father,
And I bring this short request,
"May I slumber as the songsters,
And, for being faithful, rest."

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

In South Australia the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have agreed to become one body. These two churches have much in common.

A National German Christian Endeavor Union has been formed. A meeting was held in Quincy, Ill., Seventh month 12-16 of this year. The Union consists of 250 societies, with 8,340 members.

The Congregational Council, before concluding its session in Boston, decided to hold these gatherings at intervals of four to ten years. The next Council will be held in either Montreal, Canada, or Sydney, Australia.

The Spanish Catholics, in a Congress held at Burgos recently, adopted a formal political program, practically constituting themselves into a church party, bound to support all the privileges and claims of their church.

"The Lutheran," reviewing the progress of Lutheranism in the United States during the past forty years, finds cause for satisfaction in the fact that the Lutheran churches in this country have increased in membership from 230,000 to upward of 1,500,000. Much of this increase is due to immigration.

Ten denominations—nine of which are Protestant—have missions in Alaska. The northern Presbyterian Church has eight churches, with about 1,000 members, six of which churches are native and two white, with schools scattered along the coast from the southern boundary of the Territory to Point Barrow, the farthest inhabited place north.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council, which met in Washington on the 27th ult., closed its meetings after a very satisfactory conference. One hundred and fifty delegates and a thousand visitors were in attendance. The following statistics, brought forward during the convention, illustrate most excellently the growth and success of the missionary movement: "In the beginning of the century there were only 170 missionaries in all the world, with hardly 50,000 converts, and an annual expenditure of only $250,000. Now there are 4,694 mission stations, with 15,200 out-stations, 11,000 missionaries, and associated with them 65,000 native Christian assistants, 17,441 mission schools, 1,500,000 native Christians, and annually $15,000,000 are spent in the work."

Each amen becomes an anthem,
For we know He will fulfil
All the purpose of His goodness,
All the splendor of His will;
Only trust the loving Saviour,
Only trust Him all the way,
And your springtime path shall brighten
To the perfect summer day.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

DO WE BELIEVE IN THE PRIESTHOOD OF BELIEVERS, AND WHAT DOES IT IMPLY?

BY MARY S. KNOWLES.

The affirmative answer must be given to the first division of this question if we find it clearly taught in the Scriptures. Let us investigate.

As far back as Sinai, Jehovah made utterance upon the question. The word came through Moses, "If ye will obey my voice, indeed, and keep my covenants, then shall ye be a peculiar treasure to me above all people; . . . and ye shall be to me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (Ex. 19: 5-6). Many passages occur which show that God was, even under the old dispensation of law and ceremony, seeking to lead his people through the type to the reality; by the outward and formal sacrifice to the spiritual. Listen to the word of the Lord to Saul in his disobedience: "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." (1 Sam. 15: 22). The sacrifices of righteousness and joy are spoken of by the Psalmist. (Ps. 4: 5 and 27: 6). And he testifies, "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit. (Ps. 51: 17). Solomon bears witness that, "To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice. (Prov. 21: 3), and several of the prophets affirm that burnt offerings and sacrifices are only a figure of the righteousness of heart and rectitude of life which is acceptable to the Most High.

In the New Testament we find the doctrine alluded to more definitely set forth. "Ye also as living stones are built a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. (1 Pet. 2: 5). Ye are a royal priesthood. (1 Pet. 2: 9). He hath made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto God and his Father. (Rev. 1: 6). "Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every tongue and people and nation, and hast made us into our God kings and priests." (Rev. 5: 10). The truth that each believer is a priest unto God is clearly taught, and it remains for us to ascertain what this term implies as thus used. Let us learn what we may from the Levitical priesthood as a type, for the figure is evidently drawn therefrom.

1. These priests were chosen of God. It was God who said to Moses, "And bring thou near unto thee Aaron, thy brother, and his sons with him from among the children of Israel that he may minister unto me, in the priest's office." (Ex. 28: 1). And the writer of the letter to the Hebrews, who seems remarkably well versed in matters pertaining to the Jewish law, affirms that "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but when he is called of God, as was Aaron." (Heb. 5: 4).

The Christian is called of God, even as was Aaron. The same writer addresses Christians as "Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling. (Heb. 3: 1). And Paul, writing to Timothy, speaks, of the Lord Jesus as the one "who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling." (2 Tim. 1: 9). Jesus himself said to his disciples, "I have chosen you." (John 15: 16). and John testifies, "We love, because He first loved us." (1 John 4: 19).

2. Each priest must be clothed with a holy and beautiful garment. The further instruction received by Moses specifies this, "Thou shalt make holy garments for Aaron, thy brother, for glory and beauty." (Ex. 28: 2). The clothing of the inner being of the Christian is described by Isaiah in striking language, "He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh, as a priest (marginal rendering) with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels." (Isa. 61: 10). Prayed the Psalmist, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." (Ps. 90: 17). Jesus taught most clearly the necessity of being clothed with the prepared apparel, in the parable of the man who came into the marriage without the wedding garment. (Matt. 22: 11-13).

3. The priest was to wear upon his forehead, "Holiness unto the Lord" (Ex. 28: 36), thus showing that he was set apart for the will and service of God. Our call to holiness, as priests unto God, is equally clear. "But like as He which called you is holy, so be ye yourselves also holy in all manner of living; because it is written, ye shall be holy for I am holy." (1 Pet. 1: 15-16).

4. The priest was to be anointed. "Thou shalt take the anointing oil, and pour it upon his head and anoint him. (Ex. 29: 7). This is evidently a type of the baptism with the Holy Ghost. Christ himself was thus anointed; and John writes to the church in general, "Ye have an anointing from the Holy One" (1 John 2: 20). This came to the disciples at Pentecost, and is the promise of the Father to each member of the royal priesthood under the gospel of Christ.

5. The chief offices of the Levitical priest were 1st. The offering of the sacrifices of the people in atonement for their sins. "Every high priest being taken from among men is appointed for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins (Heb. 5: 1). This Christ has done for us. "Such an high priest became us, holy, harmless, undefiled, etc., who needeth not daily, like those high priests, to offer up sacrifices, first for his own sins and then for the sins of the people, for this He did once for all when He offered up Himself" (Heb. 7: 26-27). "But Christ having come a high priest of the good things to come, . . . through His own blood entered once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption" (Heb. 9: 12). Second, Making intercession for the people, typified by the burning of incense. An example of this is found in the story of Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist. "There was in the days of Herod, king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias. . . . Now it came to pass while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course, according to the custom of the priests' office; his lot was to enter into the temple of the Lord and burn incense. And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the hour of incense" (Luke 1: 5, 8-10). Speaking of such priests, the writer of Hebrews says: "They indeed have been made priests many in number because that by death they are hindered from continuing, but He, because He abideth forever, hath His priesthood unchangeable. Wherefore also He is able to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. 7: 23-25). Christ, then, is the sacrifice for our sin, and our Incense-bearer or Intercessor with the Father. We, through Him, as those to whom is given the honor of priesthood, bring our sacrifices and intercessions. The nature of the Christian's sacrifice is much dwelt upon in the Word. "I beseech you, therefore, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable (or, margin, spiritual) service" (Rom. 12: 1). "Through Him, then, let us offer up a sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of lips which make confession to His name. But to do good and to communicate, forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Heb. 13: 15, 16). "Offer the sacrifice of righteousness and put your trust in the Lord" (Ps. 4: 5). "I will offer in His tabernacle sacrifices of joy" (Ps. 27: 6).

We also have the priestly privilege of entering into the immediate presence of God in His most holy place through our Saviour, at whose death upon the cross "The veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom" (Matt 27: 51). We have "liberty to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by the way He has dedicated for us, by a new and living way." (Heb. 10; 19: 20). Thus, "our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ" (1 John 1: 3), and we come with boldness to "the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy and find grace to help us in time of need" (Heb. 4: 16). And not only this, but we use the priestly office of intercession as we pray "one for another" (Jas. 5: 16), or for the "peace of Jerusalem" (Ps. 122: 6), or the prayer for the spread of the divine kingdom, taught by our Saviour, or in any way plead for the erring and the fallen.

We should be exceedingly careful not to confound the truth, that all are called to be priests, with that equally blessed but separate truth that individual Christians are given specific gifts for service, as pleases Him who is the Head and Director of the church. All are priests, but all are not pastors, teachers, evangelists.

"But unto each one of us was the grace given according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore He saith when He ascended on high He led captivity captive and gave gifts to men. And He gave some to be apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers" (Eph. 4: 7-8, 11-12).

"God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, divers kinds of tongues. Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all gifts of healings? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret?" (1 Cor. 12: 28-29.) In the teaching of the Gospel there is no hint of any predominance of priestly influence. The gifts conferred are "For the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ" (Eph. 4: 12). And Peter admonishes how these gifts are to be exercised: "Not as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flocks" (1 Pet. 5: 3). No gift conferred upon any individual of the church can lessen the force of the truth that every believer is a priest unto God under the great High Priest of all—Jesus Christ.

Of the things we have been considering this is the sum: Every believer is a priest unto God; some are called to teach and preach the Gospel, and minister unto the Lord and the people in various ways.

Every true priest is (1) chosen of God; (2) clothed with the righteousness of Christ; (3) dedicated to God; (4) Anointed with the Spirit; (5) with the commission to offer the Christian sacrifice of a devoted life, (6) and the privilege of entering into the holiest, the very presence of the Most High, with prayer and intercession, holding communion with none less than Jehovah.

What a "high calling"! What a wondrous cluster of privileges! "What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy living and godliness" (2 Pet. 3: 11).

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

IN THE GOLD COUNTRY OF THE TRANSVAAL.

BY EMORY J. REES.

No one comprehends the vast opportunity for work that is open here in this great city. An hour ago we came in from our work, having visited two Compounds, in one of which we were surrounded by 1,300 and in the other by 3,000 natives. In visiting these two we passed in sight of at least half a dozen more that have numbers varying from a few hundreds to a few thousands within their walls. By the grace of Him who put us forth and went before we have been able to tell some scores of these dying men of the Way of Life that has been opened up in the House of David.

Most of you already know something of the wonderful magnetic force that has suddenly drawn together here a city of nearly 100,000 white people and as many more black people. Again and again have we been reminded of the saying of Jesus, "For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." Verily, here is the thing of death—the love of which is the root of all evil—in such quantities as the world knows of in no other part. From the crushed rock, as it passes under the treatment of the mine plant, drips the brightest colored, choicest gold that the world affords. "Drips" is not an idle word, for it expresses an actual fact. This dripping golden stream is the real source of the two chief facts of this part of the world—the flocking together with its attendant crime and disturbance, and the flocking together with the most marvelous field for evangelizing a vast territory that hitherto has been to a great extent inaccessible.

Some have gone so far as to locate here in this part of Africa the Ophir that tempted the ancients. There are abundant evidences of the very early working of the mines, both in this and in other parts of South Africa. So the conclusion is not the most unlikely that might have been reached. If this be true, then, the very thing that turned the eyes of God's ancient people this way now turns the eyes of that people from whom the enemy of God and man has so long kept the Gospel this way. Aye, more, brings them this way by thousands and multiplied thousands. God had promised to Solomon riches. He has also promised these Africans the riches of His grace. Man welcomes the rediscovery of this great gold field with a welcome that is born of cupidity. God guided to its rediscovery with a heart that was full of love—undying love for the souls of the dying African millions. The conditions that exist will bring death and damnation to the souls of thousands that have heard the Gospel from childhood, but have rejected it, while it will bring the Gospel of life within the reach of the thousands that have never heard it. It will do more. It will bring everlasting shame to the Christian world if the thousands that God has brought here to hear the Gospel see and hear only the vices of the civilization which was made possible only by Christianity.

While everlasting shame will fall on the Christian world for failing to keep the trust committed to her in the stewardship of the Gospel, yet it will be an individual matter with every one to whose knowledge the Lord brings this fact, in the day when He stands before the judgment seat of Christ, whether he has done all that the Lord has marked out for him to do or not. It is no purpose of mine to judge how or what any one should do; the Spirit will leave no one who is willing to know ignorant of what he should do. But it is my duty, who am here face to face with the conditions, and upon whose heart they daily burn, to send these burning truths across the water that they may come under the notice of whom the Lord will warn. I commit them to Him, assured they will either melt or sear the hearts to which He applies them.

Among the 100,000 natives that are immediately around the city of Johannesburg, hardly a score of missionaries all told are at work. We are as a cup of water spilled in a desert land, if you compare us with the need. A few of the multitude of natives hear the Word of Life at the mouths of this mere handful, while the thousands are daily learning the way of death more perfectly from the wicked white men with whom they are surrounded. The question that is constantly forcing itself home to the heart of one who thinks as Jesus thought, and as Jesus still thinks, is, "But what are they among so many?" (Jno. 6: 9.)

The church is claiming to be the bride of Him who said, "Give ye them to eat." Oh, that a mighty voice from Heaven might so jar her spiritual perceptions that she would realize her responsibility in the world as the bridegroom's representative!

Ezra has sometimes been called a second Moses. Few of the Jews, if any, had a greater influence on his own age and on subsequent ages of Judaism. The development of the Jewish life after the exile was on the lines laid down by him. "He gave the law an authority which it had never had before in Jewish history." Though belonging to a priestly family, and himself a priest, it is as Ezra the Scribe that he is known. We first hear about him in the seventh chapter of the book which bears his name.

Between the sixth chapter and the seventh occurs an interval of about sixty years, of which there is no history. Strange to say, the revival which dates from Ezra took its beginning not in Judea or Jerusalem, but in Babylon. It sprang from those who were in exile, and who, having had experience of exile, longed for the ideal life which should exist in what was always to them the Holy City—Jerusalem. The revival seems to have been due largely to this one man. The man and the hour came together.

Ezra is called a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the Lord, the God of Israel, had given (Ezra 7: 6). But Ezra was more than a scribe; he was an earnest, living exponent of that which he sought to teach. "He had set his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments" (7: 10). Compare 1 John 1: 1-4. But this was not all. Ezra did more; he looked to the Lord for guidance, and in this fact lies the secret of Ezra's strength. He lived, he acted, he thought "according to the hand of the Lord his God upon him." (Ezra 7: 6.) This was the cause of his energy and the reason of his success.

How Ezra was sent to Jerusalem, and the object of the journey; is related in the seventh and eighth chapters, and these should be read in order to give meaning to the lesson.

It was in the year 458 B. C. that Ezra, with his Caravan of about 1,800 men, began his journey of four months from Babylonia to Jerusalem. In the company were 38 Levites; women are not named.

The king who issued the decree for the mission of Ezra was Artaxerxes Longimanus. Why he did this we are not directly told. Ezra refers it to the Divine influences upon his heart (Ez. 7:27), an all-sufficient reason.

21. "Ahava." This has not been identified, but was probably a small river flowing into the Euphrates. "Afflict." The fast and humiliation which it indicated were for a preparation for the long and dangerous journey. It was done to show their humiliation before God, and their trust in him. Compare Judges 20: 26; 1 Sam. 7: 6; 2 Chron. 20: 3. It was not the attitude of fear, but of humility. There seems to have been, however, some special foe to be dreaded. See 8: 31. At first Ezra appears to have thought of asking for an escort, but afterwards he threw himself and his company upon the Lord for protection. "Happy are they who have the grace to walk in the valley of humiliation, for this leads to the armory of supernatural power." "Little ones." These words imply the presence of women and children, though their presence is not directly mentioned. "Substance." Household possessions.

22. "Ashamed to ask." Revised Version. It would cast discredit upon the Lord to do this in the present instance. It evidently was not thought to be a rule always to be followed. Compare Nehemiah 2: 9. As a general thing it may be taken for granted that the Lord expects His children to take reasonable precautions for safety. It is not right for a believer to think he will be safe on an unseaworthy ship simply because he is a believer. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Where the Lord unmistakably sends, there the believer must go, regardless of personal safety.

24. This verse is not perfectly clear. Some make it twelve priests, and ten in addition to the two named. Some twelve in all, including the two. This latter the Revised Version implies. In the former case there would be twelve priests and twelve Levites. Compare verse 30 and Neh. 12: 24.

25. "Weighed." The usual method of reckoning value at that time. "Offering of the house." The offering for the dedication of the house. Compare Ex. 35: 21-29.

26, 27. The value of these gifts would be about $4,500,000. "Copper." "Brass." Revised Version. "Darics." Possibly so called from Darius, who had coins struck; but more likely derived from darikē, a Babylonian word meaning weight.

28. "Ye are holy," etc. The men and the offerings were all consecrated to the Lord. "Free-will offerings." That which is voluntary is more valued. "God of your fathers." The Jew was continually reminded of the lives and experiences of his fathers.

29. "Watch ye and keep them." They were a precious possession and were to be carefully guarded. "Weigh them . . . at Jerusalem." They were to be weighed at the beginning and at the end of the journey in order to see that none were lost or stolen.

30. "Priests and Levites." This would seem to infer that those named in verse 24 were of these two classes.

31. They had been there three days. See verse 15. "Delivered us." Either from attack or from injury, or both.

32. "Came to Jerusalem." This took about four months. Chap. 7, 8, 9. The air line distance was about five hundred miles, but the road was much longer.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."
2. "If our faith were but more simple,
We should take Him at His word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A GREAT MISSIONARY CALL.

BY J. HENRY BARTLETT.

Enough has been said and written of the Russian Doukhobors to make two points in regard to them very clear. They are a sober, religious-minded people, and they have been victims of grievous persecution for conscience' sake. There will doubtless be charges brought against them from various sources, similar to those read at London Yearly Meeting, until they have had time to justify themselves under the new conditions of settlement in Canada. As illustrating this attitude of suspicion, and as a partial explanation of it, there may be a point in recounting the experience of a party of Philadelphians as spectators of a session of the Dominion Parliament early in the Seventh month last. We had been brought to the Parliament house after nine o'clock one evening, and seating ourselves in the gallery, we at once observed that the immigration question was under discussion. Our ears caught the name Doukhobors, and and we heard a member of the opposition bring vague charges of idleness and immorality against them. A leader on the government side very quickly explained that much confusion existed in the minds of members on account of the similarity between Galicians and Doukhobors. The former, he stated, had undesirable characteristics. In their native country they have been schooled in beggary and dishonesty, and an exclusion act to apply to them would be a boon to the country. On the other hand, the Doukhobors were defended and evidence quoted to show that the best that has been said of them is probably true.

In further confirmation of the stable character of the Doukhobors was the testimony of a section boss who boarded our car when we were about a day east of Winnipeg. He said they were thoroughly reliable and industrious, although apparently without great endurance. This lack of endurance he attributed to abstinence from animal food.

The impressive fact, however, in regard to the Doukhobors at this time is that they are at our doors ten thousand strong. Eventually this question of numbers will mean strength. Just now it serves as a large division for small contributions, and is really an element of weakness. Indeed, when one faces it fairly a sense of discouragement is almost inevitable. How can ten thousand people be carried through the severities of a Canadian winter? Two facts alone furnish encouragement in this consideration. The first is that a liberty-loving people, with the rich inheritance of freedom of conscience, is sure to prove large-hearted and open-handed. The second is that the needs of the sufferers are limited. They can keep well on plain fare and really have no demand for the more costly items of food.

The Society of Friends in England and in America has stood sponsor for these latest born children of liberty. It is not to be supposed that they will now see them starve or freeze to death. That is the threatened outcome of the emigration, but surely in this unexpected and almost unlimited missionary opportunity we shall not be found wanting. Philadelphia Friends have made a noble beginning. Activity reigns in what some are pleased to look upon as a torpid center of Quakerism. Will the membership elsewhere rally to the support of this suffering people in the Philadelphia measure? No time can be wasted. The Canadian winter is at hand and train loads of grain and of clothing should be set in motion at once.

BOOK REVIEW.

"Thomas Dudley, Second Governor of Massachusetts," by Augustine Jones, A.M., LL.B. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. Illustrated, $5.00.

One often feels that there is a tendency in the historians of our period to destroy the heroes of our boyhood, to strip the halo off the great figures of the past, and to leave nobody in the niches for the hero-worshippers to bow before. In the book before us we feel the diametrically opposite spirit and purpose. The author's task is to show that a man who has been frequently ignored, or maligned, or marked as a "bigot," was in fact a sturdy, fearless, God-fearing, four-square man, who did his duty wherever he was put, and who was second to nobody in laying and broadbasing the foundation of the Massachusetts Colony, and so of the American Republic. It is an exhaustive work, which enters into an examination of every known situation which Governor Dudley's life touched, so that it is much more than a biography. It is really an historical sketch of the genetic period of Massachusetts' history between the years 1630 and 1653. It includes the planting of the colony, the founding of Harvard, the personality and emigration of Roger Williams, the expedition of Hooker to Connecticut, the struggle with Anne Hutchinson and "the Antinomians," and the origin of our democratic system of government, and the founding of our public schools.

The book bears evidence of the fact that its author has profoundly investigated every phase of his subject and has come to it thoroughly equipped, and every future historian of the period will have to deal with this book. It is a noble service to have put one man surely on his pedestal when others left him lying on his face.

The more we look at ourselves the less we shall learn of wiser things. To some people "I" is larger than all the rest of the alphabet of life. The unselfish soul is "at leisure from itself," and so free to follow God and serve others.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH TWENTY-SECOND, 1899.

MEN SENT OF GOD.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 16.—Moses. Ex. 3: 1-10; 4: 10-16.
Third-day, Tenth mo. 17.—Isaiah. Isa. 6: 1-13.
Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 18.—Jeremiah. Jer. 1: 1-19.
Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 19.—The Twelve. Matt. 10: 1-8.
Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 20.—Phillip. Acts 6: 1-6; 8: 5-8, 26, 36, 40.
Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 21.—Paul. Acts 9: 10-16.

Jonah was constitutionally opposed to foreign missions. His patriotism stood in the way of his piety. He was afraid other nations would improve faster than Israel if a knowledge of the true God should be given them. His message was infinitely larger than himself. That, of course, is always true, but generally speaking, the foreign missionary of to-day is a living message in himself. Poor Jonah under the gourd did not exemplify much of God's love and pity for men. But Jonah was the best missionary God could find in his day, and the majority of the Christian church is still like him. Men still regard their time and money as their own; spend it to go to some Tarshish of business or pleasure, and go to sleep in disobedience to the call of God. Jonah lost his money, for he never reached Tarshish, and it is marvelous how men venture money foolishly or in speculations who will not venture it for God.

But Jonah received a second call in the mercy of God, and then he yielded an unwilling obedience. There is little in his case to remind us of Him who said, "I delight to do thy will, O, my God."

But our topic is an inspiration. There is a vast difference between a "sent" man and an aimless man or an idler. Men will get out of the way of the first, while they run over the second. The "sent" man has power back of him, purpose within, a goal before him. "Sent" was a favorite word with Jesus of Nazareth. More than thirty times in one Gospel does He speak of Himself as "sent of the Father." He declares, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." "He that sent me is with me." He also says, "As thou didst send me into the world, even so sent I them into the world." There is no more comprehensive statement of the Christian life than this. We are sent as He was sent; sent by the same power, from the same motives, for the same purpose, in the same spirit, at the same cost to ourselves, with the same promises, with the same difficulties, with the same rewards. Our apprehension of this high calling will be the measure of our usefulness in life, and will determine our perseverance in the face of obstacles. Paul knew himself sent of God with a message to the Gentiles of Asia Minor; hence no dangers frightened him. Mark went along for companionship, and his heart failed him at Perga. Modern life affords a striking illustration of a sent man when Stanley received his commission to find Livingstone. What a heroic struggle with difficulty was that long march to Ujiji! If we could all realize in the same way that we are men sent of God to find lost men, it would give new significance to life.

Jesus Christ was sent of God as a message of love. "Even so send I them into the world," He says, concerning us. Love must be expressed in terms that can be comprehended. No abstract message of love saves the world. A divinely given philosophy about a loving God would have been powerless. It was love incarnate that drew men to Jesus Christ. It is only men who reincarnate unselfish, Christ-like love that are truly sent of God to-day. Orthodoxy in the head and heterodoxy in the heart is a stone and not bread. There is no religion of love in the world to-day except Christianity. Let us make its truth a vital one in all the world.

EDITORIAL.

We insert herewith a notice of the two missionary libraries now being purchased by hundreds of Young People's Societies in the United States and Canada, and which can be obtained from Gilbert Bowles. It is worth your while to try to secure at least one of them. By the way, our missionary superintendent is doing splendid work in starting the missionary course of reading given in a former number of this paper, and our societies ought to take hold of it vigorously. The writer of this notice has had something to do with missionary candidates, and he confesses he has never found one who has made such a preparation for the foreign field as is involved in the use of this reading course, and yet all need it, both those who do the work and those who pray and give for the work.

MISSIONARY LIBRARIES.

The following are the best and cheapest libraries covering the great world field, with facts, illustrations and character sketches. Either one of these will afford much material for individuals or classes pursuing the Missionary Reading Course announced last week. Any society can secure them by work and determination. Arrangements have been made for the Christian Endeavor missionary superintendent to take orders for these libraries.

The Conquest Missionary Library consists of the following ten books: Chinese Characteristics, From Far Formosa, Fellow Travelers, The Gist of Japan, In Africa's Forest and Jungle, Korean Sketches, Nineteen Centuries of Missions, On the Indian Trail, Our Sisters in India, and the Transformation of Hawaii. This entire set of ten books sent by express at purchaser's expense from either Boston or Chicago for only $5.

The Student's Missionary Campaign Library consists of the following sixteen books: Missionary Expansion Since the Reformation, A Mexican Ranch, The Growth of the Kingdom of God, Light in the East, The Chinese Slave Girl, The Official Report of the Third International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, The Story of Paton, Persian Life and Customs, In the Tiger Jungle, The Personal Life of David Livingstone, The Life of John Kenneth Mackenzie, James Gilmore of Mongolia, Nemorama, the Nautchnee, The Story of the Life of Mackay of Uganda, Oowikapum and Hu Yong Mi. This entire set of sixteen books sent by express at purchaser's expense from Chicago for only $10.

Full descriptive catalogue of these libraries will be sent free upon application. Send all orders to Gilbert Bowles, 630 North B Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

NOTICE.

All persons wishing to enroll for the Missionary Reading Course please send names only to Gilbert Bowles, Oskaloosa, Iowa, and not, as was previously announced, either to him or to Eliza C. Armstrong.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE CALL INTO THE VINEYARD.

Come, lend a hand to help us,
The Master's work to do;
He's looking o'er His vineyard,
And His voice is calling you.

To fill a place that's empty,
To plant a vine or two,
To dig, to prune, to water,
The Master's calling you.

He calls, in tones of sadness,
The purple harvest lies
Uncared for and untended
Beneath the summer skies.

Come, help us press the vintage,
And sing a song or so,
Before the shadows gather
And you are called to go,

In darkness and in sorrow,
Low grieving at the gate,
Because you're empty-handed
And the Master cries, "Too late."

"Too late" to see the portals
Swing wide their golden bars;
"Too late" to see that streaming light
Dim all the suns and stars.

"Too late" to hear the music
Of that river by the throne;
"Too late" to hear the quiver
Of angel harp and tone.

"Too late" to see the Master,
With His beatific face;
"Too late" to hear the welcome
Unto your fitting place.

O idlers in the market;
O foolish virgins late,
Why will ye, in the gloaming,
Beat at the golden gate!

ELIZA D. H. MENDENHALL.

News from the Field.

Joshua L. Bailey, of Philadelphia, is on a somewhat extended visit through the west, studying various phases of the liquor question and especially investigating Soldiers' Homes. He was also present at the sessions of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Prof. C. E. Lewis, Newberg, Oregon, who was acting president of Pacific College during the absence of President Newlin, is about to move to Denver, Colorado. His coming will be a great strength and blessing to the Denver meeting.

One Friend writes to stop his paper because he is offended at our "Copperheadism" as he calls it,—i.e., our expression of regret over the Philippine situation! Another Friend writes that he is pained at our "luke-warm opposition" to the present war in those islands. It would be hard to please both these Friends!

We have the following interesting letter from Charles W. Goddard, who is still in England. He writes from Bristol:

The many readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND who were blessed by the extensive gospel labors of Harriet Green in Kansas and other parts of America, will be interested to know that while still much an invalid, she hopes yet to be raised up to health and to complete her prospective service in that land. In a letter from her a short time since she said coming health to her was like the incoming tide, each receding wave was stopped a little in advance of the former one. She wished all her American friends to know that she feels very sure that her present long illness is in no way a result of her labors in America, which will no doubt be a comfort to many who were blessed by them. We expect now for some weeks to be engaged in evangelistic work in different parts of England, and to visit a few more meetings before our return. We are still in usual good health and conscious of the Lord's blessing and leading. I am thine sincerely,
CHAS. W. GODDARD.

Bryn Mawr College opened on the 3d inst. with the largest attendance in its history. The first meeting of the year was held on Fourth-day evening, the 4th, and was attended by nearly the whole college. Professor George A. Barton preached a strong and helpful sermon.

T. B. Pandian, a converted high-caste Hindu, of Madras, India, is in Philadelphia, with the purpose of informing Christian people of the direful condition of the "Pariahs" (or lowest caste people) of India, and of the absolute necessity of doing something for their immediate relief. He was at Haverford meeting on Fifth-day, the 5th, and spoke earnestly and forcibly on this subject.

Every Yearly Meeting so far held this year has been reported as the best ever held! That is a very wholesome feeling.

The Friends' Summer School held at Birmingham, England, during the Ninth month, is generally regarded as having marked a decided advance over the summer school of two years ago at Scarborough. The courses were profoundly interesting, edifying, instructive and constructive. The only real disappointment was the absence of Paul Sabatier, who was expected to give a course of lectures on "Saint Francis of Assize." The lectures of J. Rendel Harris added much to the value of the school.

Our Friend, Oscar Roberts, informs us that an article in one of our recent issues, on "Work in Johannesburg," ascribed to him, was written by Emory J. Rees, who is engaged in missionary work in that city.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

Meaford, Ontario.—Yonge Street Quarterly Meeting was held here on the 22d, 23d and 24th ult. The ministers in attendance from a distance were Wm. I. Moore, from Toronto, and Robert Rogers, from Pelham Quarterly Meeting. These dear brothers preached the gospel in demonstration and power. We also had the acceptable company of John Orr Green, an elder from Lisburn Monthly Meeting, Ireland. Our meeting was very well attended; some of our own members who were in attendance had to travel over one hundred and thirty-five miles to be present.

Upon the whole we consider we had a good meeting. The meeting adjourned to meet at Pickering, if the Lord wills, in Twelfth month.

CYRUS R. SING.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The Shipley Literary Society will hold a meeting in Friends' Meeting House, corner Eighth and Mound Streets, Cincinnati, Ohio, Sixth-day evening, Tenth month 20th, at which time Dr. Wm. H. Taylor will give the history of the Cincinnati Monthly Meeting.

The Shipley Literary Society will hold its first semi-annual open meeting, Sixth-day evening, Eleventh month 3d. A very interesting program has been prepared for this special occasion, to which all are cordially invited.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

Surry Quarterly Meeting on ministry and oversight was held on the 23d ult., at White Plains, four miles from Mt. Airy, in the neighborhood where the "Siamese twins" lived and died; some of their children and grand-children live there—one of the widows and some of the children have been members of White Plains Monthly Meeting.

The Select meeting was an interesting, favored occasion. Mary M. Hobbs and Levi Cox, members of the yearly meeting committee, appointed at the instance of the yearly meeting on ministry and oversight, to visit the quarterly and monthly meetings of North Carolina, to bring the membership to a more "intelligent understanding of our principles and methods of procedure," brought the subject with which they were charged before the meeting. The matter was heartily endorsed and forwarded thus to the quarterly meeting next day, which in turn gave it a cordial reception and appointed a committee to accompany and co-operate with the yearly meeting committee in conference with all the monthly meetings in the quarter at once. Mary C. Woody, another member of said committee, came to meeting on Seventh-day. Albert Peele, a member of the yearly meeting committee appointed to assist this new quarterly meeting, was in acceptable attendance. William L. Wilson, minister, with credentials from Western Quarter, was also acceptably present.

In the evening a meeting on education was held, addressed by Mary M. Hobbs and F. S. Blair, members of the yearly meeting committee on education, and by Mary C. Woody.

On First-day Friends had service in the Bible School, and the 11 o'clock meeting was well attended, and the gospel preached with much power and clearness, especially by Mary C. Woody and Albert Peele; the high experience of sanctification was declared well maintained, while upon many present came the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire. The afternoon was devoted to the Bible school cause, when Mary M. Hobbs addressed the children effectively, and F. S. Blair, general superintendent of Bible school work, addressed especially the adult people as to their duty in the promises. In the evening a special blessed gospel meeting was held.

On Second-day the great mass of the population paid its respects to the Robinson Show and Circus, I am sorry to say, and left only fifteen or twenty to attend with the ministers. Other Christian workers favored religious meetings in the forenoon, afternoon and evening.

On Third-day morning, at ten o'clock, a large percentage of the membership met with the Committee on Conference, and again in the afternoon and evening, until fully 75 per cent. of the membership of the monthly meeting here answered to the roll call. More would have attended, but frost threatened the tobacco and fodder.

The committee, the meeting, and the visitors were favored and much edified as they testified, and as was very apparent. Old and young, down to many little birthright members, were present and answered. This meeting has a habit of keeping its list of birthright members separate from the other active membership. Many subjects as to our history,—written and unwritten,—discipline, and our distinguishing beliefs and practices, were presented by the committee, members of the monthly meeting and visiting Friends. Questions were asked and much interesting and profitable information was given, for which Friends here expressed much gratitude. To illustrate one instance, the like of which appeared on other subjects, was of a man who had come from the Methodist church, and was a magistrate, after hearing the subject of oaths discussed, and that Friend magistrates could neither administer nor take legal oaths without breach of discipline, said: "I always refuse to swear, but I have always been swearing others—not Friends—but I am glad the discipline forbids it, and I shall never administer an oath again." One man, a Methodist, said: "I have long refused to take a legal oath. I would go to jail before I would take an oath." The convention that formed our "reconstruction" constitution after the war of 1861-1865 had some Friends in it, and so changed the constitution that all citizens of North Carolina may take the affirmation if they like. This was brought out, and many Friends and others did not know that the law is so liberal.

The hospitality of Friends here has been very gratifying to all the visitors.

Albert Griffiths and wife, late from Friends' mission in Virginia, have undertaken a school of high grade at this place, to begin next week.

The Committee to hold Conferences has gone to the other four monthly meetings, in the same service. Wm. L. Wilson carries, holding a series of meetings.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Albert Hermon Doty, who died at his home in Hamilton County, Kansas, Eighth month 24th, 1899, aged 7 years, 11 months and 22 days, had a remarkable experience before he passed away. He was sick ten days. He always loved to talk about Jesus, and very often asked questions about the Bible. He was always loving in his disposition. He suffered a great deal during his sickness. The day before he died, after his parents having prayer with him, he commenced clapping his hands and shouting, and said, "I see grandma Shaffer, and she is calling for me and for us all to come. She has widespread wings. I do wish you could see your mother, ma, she is so pretty. She has such bright, shining eyes." He said to his father: "I see your father and mother over there, and your brother and sister. I see your brother shouting on his dying bed. I do not know their names, but we all know each other there. They are all calling for Uncle Jessie. He is not converted. I see Mr. Rupert. Tell Mrs. Rupert and Alice, if I do not get well, I saw them. If I get well I will tell them. Tell Mr. Treff I see Mrs. Treff shouting in heaven. I see Mrs. Story. She don't seem any farther away than this house. She is calling for Mr. Story and grandma, George, Ira, and all the rest. Tell Charlie Nicholls I see their little baby, and, oh, she is so pretty, the sweetest little angel. She has such pretty eyes. Just look at them. It is just like looking at them with your natural eyes. Everybody seems to know each other there. They are all around the throne praising God and praying for the people here upon the earth. I see Jesus and an angel." While looking upon this scene every little while he would laugh and clap his hands and shout, "Praise the Lord. I hate to leave you, but don't cry; you will soon follow. I would like to remain with you to help you, but I want to go first, for you are older and can stand the trials and tribulations of this world better than I can." He said to his mother: "Get a pencil and paper. I want you to write to Uncle Harvey. Tell him I am sick, but don't say I am dead. Tell him I see Grandma Shaffer shouting in heaven, and calling for you all, with her wings spread and her bright eyes shining. Tell him I see pa and mother and sister. Tell him I would be glad if they could all come and see me before I die."

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

San Diego, Cal.—In the providence of God, our brother, Chas. H. Stalker, is still with us, and is holding meetings each evening, and has been for more than ten weeks. Three services are held on Sabbath besides the Sabbath-school. I wish I could portray the good that is being done. People from New York, Boston, Washington and other places over the United States, coming here, some for health, some for pleasure, etc., are by no mere accident brought to the meetings; sinners receive forgiveness for sins through the atonement made on Calvary, and Christians receive the Comforter, "the Holy Ghost." Our membership has been trebled, and others are looking toward joining Friends.

GULIELMA WRIGHT.

San Diego, Cal.—A Friend near this place has a mission home, where orphans and homeless children are maintained, educated and trained for Christian work. It was founded about three years ago. The children appear happy and interested in the welfare of the home, are loyal to those who have them in charge, and assist with all the work incident to carrying it on. Some of them have been converted, and the belief that they will become true workers in the mission field has been expressed. The home was purchased on the instalment plan, so that with the expenses incident to carrying on the work it has been a constant struggle to hold the property; when it is paid for it will be deeded in trust for ninety-nine years, to be used for the purpose for which it was founded. Any means to assist in the work may be sent to Phila H. Ingraham, 1628 H Street, San Diego, Cal.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

New Sharon, Iowa.—George Lupton, of Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, has been holding a few days' meetings here. God has blessed him to us, and his messages have been searching, powerful and timely for this people.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Fishertown, Pa.—Dunnings Creek Four Months' Meeting was held here Ninth month 25th, 1899. The company of Samuel R. Neave, of Hughesville, Md., and Mary E. Hughes, of Lincoln, Va., was very acceptable. Besides attending the regular meetings, they held five appointed meetings for worship and two meetings for Bible study.

We trust that the seed sown by these messengers fell upon good ground, and that it will bring forth much fruit to the glory of God.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

From a communication sent us by Samuel Miles, who, in company with his wife, recently visited South Starksboro Meeting, in Vermont, we have selected the following interesting items: Edwin J. Meader and wife, who live two and a half miles distant from the meeting house, are highly esteemed ministers. They regularly come to meeting, though frequently against considerable odds. They receive from the congregation no financial support. The meeting is in a prosperous condition. The house has recently been repapered, and the interior now presents a very attractive appearance. On the occasion of Samuel Miles's visit the gospel was preached with power, and a number testified to the spiritual benefit received. There were twenty-seven present after meeting at the Sabbath school. Daniel Sargent is the efficient superintendent. A few days were spent by Samuel Miles and wife in visiting some of the members, by whom they were received most kindly.

PENN COLLEGE NOTES.

Penn College opened on the 19th ult., with an enrollment the largest in the history of the college.

Engineer "Nick" Miller, of the Iowa Central Railway, led the opening gospel meeting of the college Y. M. C. A. "Decision Sabbath" to the Christian Associations of Penn College, has meant much the past few years. A number of students were specially blessed at these opening meetings this year.

Willis Hotchkiss and Arthur Chilson were at the college on the 3d and 4th inst., holding some profitable meetings among the students.

It is the purpose of the student body to support a foreign missionary—perhaps in Cuba—in the near future.

Edgar West, a native of Jamaica, and a former worker in Friends' mission there, has taken up English and Biblical work at the college.

The Penn Peru Mission Board are directing their efforts this year, and for the present, upon the West Indies, in connection with the Yearly Meeting Board.

The world rolls into light;
It is daybreak everywhere.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Indiana Yearly Meeting held its seventy-ninth annual session from Ninth month 26th to Tenth month 3d, 1899. The interest shown by the membership in its work, as indicated by the unusually large attendance, the deep spirituality that marked its devotions, its gospel work, and the conduct of its business, the amount of work accomplished, the progress shown by the reports of last year's work, and the new lines of work undertaken for the coming year, make it a remarkable yearly meeting. A large number of workers from other yearly meetings were present, who, by their timely advice and sound and earnest teaching, contributed much to the success of the meeting. Many of the visiting ministers were from the new fields that have been occupied by Friends in the West in recent years. The visitors were: John Henry Douglas, from Oregon; Oliver M. Frazer, from Nebraska; W. Mahlon Perry, Arthur B. Chilson, Samuel T. Purviance, Nathan and Esther G. Frame, Willis R. Hotchkiss and Levi Mills, from Ohio; E. Howard Brown and wife, and Zenas L. Martin, from Iowa; Alfred Johnson and wife, and Susan B. Sisson and Matilda H. Farr, from Kansas; Eli Spray, an elder, from Colorado; Abram Fisher, an elder, from North Carolina; Joseph Stanley, from Florida; Caroline N. Hunnicutt, from California; Thomas C. Brown, from Western Yearly Meeting, Indiana; and Joshua L. Bailey from Philadelphia.

The yearly meeting missed sorely the presence and help of Levi Jessup, Murray Shipley and Thomas N. White, veterans in the yearly meeting's service, who have died during the past year. The yearly meeting has been strengthened by the presence of William P. Angell, Muncie, Ind., and J. Lindley Spicer, Cincinnati, Ohio, who have recently moved within the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and who took an active part in its work this year for the first time. Elwood O. Ellis, clerk of the meeting, laid before the yearly meeting a concern to visit Dublin and London Yearly Meetings during the coming year in connection with a contemplated journey to Egypt and Palestine, which was united with by the meeting.

The devotional meetings were characterized by an unusual amount of solid and definite teaching, and by a strong desire on the part of the workers for deeper consecration and greater spiritual power. There was a realization that the ministers of Indiana Yearly Meeting needed deeper experience to enable them to accomplish the results so needed in their fields of work. John Henry Douglas held special meetings for the ministers on two evenings, at which many of the workers found the secret of power in the Lord's work through the baptism with the Holy Spirit. On the Sabbath the preaching was characterized by the practical direction it took, showing the proper outcome of the doctrines of the church in service and life.

The different lines of work which the yearly meeting has been accustomed to carry on have been, as a rule, well sustained. The reports of the Book and Tract, Peace, Home Missions, Temperance, Bible Schools, Indian and Christian Endeavor work showed careful and conscientious work on the part of the committees in charge, but no marked changes from the work of other years. The difficulty of securing reliable and complete statistics was felt by all the committees, and by the Home Missions Committee in particular. At the session devoted to the subject of peace, a number of strong speeches were made reaffirming the Christian doctrine of non-resistance and the efficacy of Christian love in righting the wrongs of the world. A message was sent to President McKinley, expressing the sympathy of the meeting with him in his trying and responsible position, and asking him to use his authority to bring the war in the Philippines to a close, and also to suppress the army canteen. During the consideration of the report on temperance, the meeting listened to an able address by Rev. F. O. Ballard, of Indianapolis, who dwelt on the economic waste caused by the saloon, and upon the weakness of the saloon as shown in its fear of the temperance forces. Elwood O. Ellis gave a very concise report of the National Anti-Saloon League Convention, at Cleveland, Ohio, which he attended as a delegate from the yearly meeting, and Samuel C. Mills and Emma Hedges were appointed delegates to the next Convention of the League, to be held at Chicago next December. At the public meeting of the Christian Endeavor Union Levi Mills gave an able and vigorously optimistic address.

The Evangelistic and Pastoral Committee was hampered in its work last year by lack of funds, which showed in its report. There were reported forty-eight ministers settled as pastors receiving an average compensation of two hundred dollars each. The yearly meeting has one hundred and fifty-one ministers able for active service. During the year past there were five hundred and fifty-five applications for membership in the church; but, notwithstanding, there was a small decrease in the actual membership of the yearly meeting. The meeting was aroused to the need of supporting this department of the work if it is to maintain its spiritual power and to grow in numbers, and a large collection and an increased appropriation were given the committee to enable it to do its work more effectively. This committee also sent a communication to the yearly meeting, calling attention to certain manifestations of insubordination on the part of some members who have taught questionable doctrines, disparaged the work and authority of the church, and circulated unfounded charges against the educational institutions of the yearly meeting. The meeting reaffirmed the powers of oversight given the Evangelistic and Pastoral Committee at its organization in 1880, and directed that meetings do not, without the approval of the committee, allow ministers to do work in their midst whose teaching and influence are not definitely known to be in unity with the church.

The consideration of the state of the Society showed the church to be in good condition as compared with former years. During the sessions of the Meeting for Ministers and Elders, and of the yearly meeting devoted to this subject, much good advice and warning were given; but it seems to many that these sessions would be more profitable if the queries were made more definite and the answers more specific, and the time spent more largely in the consideration of practical methods by which errors might be corrected and the church work made more efficient.

The yearly meeting took one backward step. Spiceland Quarterly Meeting requested that Indiana Yearly Meetings for Men and of Women Friends be united. There was a considerable majority in favor of the proposition, which has largely been adopted in most American yearly meetings. But there was a large minority, particularly among the women, who were fearful that the women might not yet be able to hold their own in attempting to transact business together with the men, and the meeting decided to take no action.

For a number of years the yearly meeting has been encumbered by a constantly growing debt, incurred in building the yearly meeting house and increased by the failure of some quarterly meetings to pay their yearly meeting stock. Two years ago the yearly meeting began an earnest effort to lift this incubus from its work and conscience, and this year the special committee appointed a year ago reported that with the assistance of Allen Jay the whole amount had been raised, and there was a balance of nearly a thousand dollars in the treasury. There is still due from the delinquent quarterly meetings about twenty-seven hundred dollars. It was a matter of great thankfulness on the part of the meeting, and a new life and power felt in all departments of the yearly meeting work is one of the first results. More than ever before the meeting has felt the blessedness of giving, and the total amount of subscriptions and collections taken is said to have been about eight times that of ordinary years.

The yearly meeting made some advances in missionary work. The question of taking up work in Cuba was referred to the Friends' Foreign Missionary Board of America, with the understanding that since four yearly meetings had agreed to co-operate in the enterprise work would be undertaken at once by the Board. This movement in favor of united work among the American yearly meetings took strong hold of the yearly meeting, and several Friends recalled with joy the fulfilment of the efforts of Stanley Pumphrey years ago to accomplish this union. Willis R. Hotchkiss brought to the attention of the meeting the plan of work of the Friends' African Industrial Mission, which was encouraged by the meeting, and two Friends were appointed to co-operate with a like number from each of the other yearly meetings to control the mission. This was done with the understanding that when the union board of all the yearly meetings is organized the work, if successful, shall be put in their hands. These efforts toward centralizing the mission work of Friends is very encouraging, notwithstanding the fact that Indiana Yearly Meeting still supports the monstrosity of two missionary boards—the Women's Board and the Foreign Missions Committee—each doing work for the same yearly meeting and carrying on missions in the same field. The Foreign Missions Committee completed this year out of debt and is planning the extension of its work in Mexico. The Mexican Mission at Victoria is to have a new church. Irving Kelsey has been appointed to the chair of English in the State University of Victoria, which gives him a place on the State Board of Education there, and puts him in a position of influence among the students. The printing press of the mission at Victoria has been increasing in influence, and by means of literature sent to Havana two congregations in that city have organized under Friends' discipline, adopted Friends' views, and asked for fellowship with the Friends in Mexico. Another important step was the addition of the president of the Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union to the Foreign Missions Committee as an ex-officio member.

The Women's Board has maintained its work at Matamoras with growing usefulness, but is in great need of a pastor for the church at Matamoras and makes an earnest appeal for some one to volunteer for that work.

The work of the Friends' Bible Institute was appreciated and approved by the yearly meeting, and the new plan of having it held under the joint control of Western, Indiana and Wilmington Yearly Meetings was endorsed, and the committee in charge continued.

The reports of the educational institutions showed a large and growing work. Southland College has been somewhat crippled by the recent death of the superintendent, Stanley Pearson, and by the damage done the property by a cyclone during the last year. The yearly meeting was made this year to feel the magnitude and value of the work there as perhaps never before. An entire evening was granted the consideration of the interests of the College. In addition to the reports, Rebecca Busby, a graduate of the institution, and at present a teacher there, gave a very instructive talk on what the institution had done for her and on her efforts to spread the good to others, which she had thus obtained. A number of stereopticon views of the buildings and grounds were shown, giving the meeting a more definite idea of the situation and facilities of the College.

White's Manual Training Institute suffered great loss the past year by the burning of their building. A new building has been erected, but is not yet furnished. A collection for this purpose was taken, and the yearly meeting requested each quarterly meeting to collect and send its part of $600 with which to furnish the Institute.

Fairmount and Spiceland Academies reported satisfactory work and increased gymnasium and laboratory facilities.

The delegates to the Friends' Educational Conference at Providence, R. I., gave a very clear and concise report of the spirit and deliberations of the Conference, which was well appreciated by the yearly meeting.

The reports of Earlham College showed a good year's work, the attendance having been good, the religious condition excellent, and the prestige of the College maintained by victories in football, field and track athletics, debating and oratory. A verbal report of the president showed the present year opening with the attendance increased about ten per cent. The treasurer's report showed the College greatly hampered by its debt, which has increased to about $35,000. A letter was read from Francis T. White, of New York, to Indiana Yearly Meeting, giving $25,000 to the Endowment Fund of the College. His brother, M. M. White, of Cincinnati, took the platform and proposed that the College debt be paid before First month 1st, 1901. To this end he offered to give $5,000, on condition that Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings add to it $10,000, thus reducing the debt to $20,000, which it is proposed to pay next year. Allen Jay took charge of the subscription, and the yearly meeting took hold of the matter earnestly. Contributions ranging from $1,000 to $1 were taken, and over $8,000 was subscribed in addition to the $5,000 offered by M. M. White. This insures the reduction of the debt by $15,000, and gives good promise of having the entire debt paid before the opening of the twentieth century.

[Note.—Since yearly meeting all of the remainder of the $15,000 has been raised, except $832.18, and that is practically assured. The donation of Western Yearly Meeting has not yet been called for, but its members will no doubt still further reduce the debt.]

Died.

THORNE.—Died at his home, in Selma, Ohio, Elijah Thorne, on the 7th of Second month, 1899, in the 83d year of his age. He was a life member of Green Plain Monthly Meeting of Friends and for many years its correspondent.

LAWSON.—Allison Lawson died at his home, near Portland, Ind., Eighth month 17th, 1899, in the 67th year of his age. He was a charter member of Pike Preparative Meeting. He was a man of few words and strictly upright in his dealings.

PRESSNALL.—Daniel Pressnall died at his home in Oskaloosa, Iowa, on the 1st of Sixth month, 1899, in the 90th year of his age. He was born in Guilford County, N. C., and with his parents moved to Indiana in 1826, and later to Iowa. Born of Friends' parentage, he cherished an abiding and increasing love for Friends with whom he was a lifetime member. Sturdy and strong of constitution, as a pioneer of two States he made himself an important factor in moulding the political and religious thought in the communities where he lived. A student of nature and men, he lived in the present of his opportunities, maintaining in a remarkable degree his interest in the affairs of State and Church, until taken down with his last sickness, during which often, with patriarchal reverence, he worshiped God, leaning upon the staff of an unwavering faith in a glorious future, calmly abiding his time till his change came.

BALDWIN.—Lydia Baldwin, wife of Thomas Baldwin, died Fifth month 21st, 1899, aged 84 years, 4 months and 26 days. Thomas Baldwin died Fifth month 25th, 1899, aged 86 years and 29 days. The services of the double funeral took place Fifth month 27th, from the residence of her son, in Marion, Ind., with whom they had lived for several years. They were married Ninth month 26th, 1833, at New Garden meeting house, eight miles north of Richmond, and were affectionate companions of each other 65 years, 7 months and 26 days. It is thought that they have lived together longer than any other couple in Indiana, who were born in the state. A few weeks after they were married, they moved to Grant County, Ind., and settled on the land on which Fairmount now stands. In this county they lived happily all the balance of their days, dearly loved and respected by their many acquaintances. They were consistent members of the Society of Friends all their lives, both having had birthright memberships.

News and Events.

An exceedingly interesting feature of the war revenue law is that part of it which relates to taxes upon estates. This provides that all personal estates in excess of $10,000 shall be taxed, according to their amount, at rates ranging from three-quarters of one per cent. to two and a quarter per cent. when inherited by children or parents, and rates ranging from five to fifteen per cent. when inherited by very distant relatives, "strangers in blood," or corporations. According to the estimate of the framers of the law the revenue which should be derived from such sources is about $10,000,000. During the first year, however, the amount aggregated only a few hundred thousand. The reason given for this discrepancy is that administrators of estates nearly everywhere took advantage of the full time allowed them before making the settlements required, and there is, indeed, reason to believe that the revenue collected this year will even exceed the estimate of $10,000,000. A comparison of the total wealth in the United States with the average annual death rate indicates that the government should collect nearly $15,000,000 a year from this source. The justice of the inheritance tax is generally recognized, and the law seems likely to remain. The greatest hardship felt under the tax is where it affects bequests to educational and philanthropic institutions. The bequest of the late John G. Lane of $100,000 to New York Yearly Meeting to assist the cause of education in that body is taxed to the extent of $10,000.

As the time for assembling the fifty-sixth Congress approaches, interest in the question of seating Representative-elect Roberts, of Utah, increases. Great opposition exists throughout the country to his admission into the House of Representatives, on account of his practice of polygamy. Just what course the House will pursue is uncertain, but able counsel have been retained by Roberts, and, with the Mormon plutocracy back of him, there is no doubt that he will violently oppose any opposition to his right to remain in the House. It should be more generally understood than it is that he cannot be rejected at once. The course to be pursued is as follows: After the House has been assembled and the business of "swearing in" the Representatives-elect has been reached the name of Roberts will be called in alphabetical order by States. Then it will be possible for any member to object to his being sworn. Roberts would then have to stand aside until the House is fully organized, when the objection must be taken up and disposed of before any other business can be proceeded with. After the House has been fully organized Roberts will be allowed to occupy his seat during the consideration of his case. If the objection is supported by a majority vote it will be referred to the Judiciary Committee for investigation and report. The question having been determined, Roberts will be sworn, regardless of the action of the House on the objection, and he will have all the rights of a member pending the report of the Judiciary Committee. If the Committee should recommend his expulsion a vote will then be taken, and, upon two-thirds approving the expulsion, the Mormon Representative will be rejected.

Added interest and excitement have been given the South African crisis by the proclamation of Queen Victoria ordering the mobilization of British troops and their despatch to South Africa, and also by her order assembling Parliament on the 17th inst. Military activity is increasing. The reserves to the number of 25,000 have been called out, and it is asserted that 95 per cent. of these will be fully equipped within six days. The British forces in South Africa have had their position in Natal strengthened by the arrival of 2,500 troops from India. It is stated that the army corps now preparing to leave for the Transvaal consists of over 40,000 men. Provisional expenditures of $15,000,000 for carrying on the war have been made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and a sum amounting to not more than $40,000,000 will be requested from Parliament when it convenes. President Kruger is still careful not to precipitate the conflict, but both his own republic and the Orange Free State have demanded a declaration of British intentions in threatening terms.

Following the advice of Admiral Dewey, President McKinley has directed the immediate despatch to the Philippines of a number of vessels of the navy, including the cruiser Brooklyn, and the gunboats Marietta and Machias. The war is to be prosecuted with vigor if we are to judge by recent reports. Considerable activity prevailed throughout Luzon last week, conflicts between Americans and Filipinos occurring at Imus, Bacoar, Cavite Viejo and Noveleta, the American troops meeting with a slight loss in killed and wounded. Aguinaldo and his supporters evidently stake great hope upon the state of divided opinion in the United States over their cause. In a proclamation announcing the release of American prisoners he says: "In America there is a great party that insists on the Government recognizing Filipino independence. That party will compel the United States to fulfill the promises made to us in all solemnity and good faith, though not put into writing."

NOTES.—Three efforts last week on the part of the Columbia and Shamrock resulted in "no race" on account of each failing to cross the line within the time limit. The wind was too light to carry the yachts at the necessary speed. The races will continue this week.—A buoy found Ninth month 9th on the north coast of King Charles Island has been identified as belonging to the Andree Polar Expedition.—Admiral Dewey, in Washington, last week, accepted the sword which was voted to him by the last Congress.—Walter Wellman, of Polar expedition fame, arrived in New York on the 8th. He remains lame from his accident received while on his recent tour of exploration.—The National Farmers' Congress assembled in Faneuil Hall, Boston, on the 3d.—President McKinley is still pursuing his Western tour.—An army of tramps and strikers, emulating Coxey's army in this country, threatens to march upon Paris.

THE AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS" WRITES ANOTHER MESSAGE.

Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," one of the most widely read books in the English language, has written an article which establishes the practicability of the teachings of Christianity as set forth in his book, which have been put to the test in innumerable religious bodies the world over. Mr. Sheldon declines to write for publication anything relating to his individual work in applying his teachings of "In His Steps," until others were convinced that those teachings were applicable to every-day affairs. He has now taken up his pen and shown that the question, "What Would Jesus Christ Do?" may be answered by every Christian, and the precept followed: "Is Christianity Practical in Worldly Affairs?" will be published in the November "Ladies' Home Journal."

WORKING ON BRAINS.

Food Specialist Brings Out a Novelty.

A food expert at Battle Creek, Mich., connected with the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., has produced a food especially intended for rebuilding the brain. It is a well-known fact among physicians that examination of perspiration and urine will tell whether the individual has been actively using the brain or not.

Brain work exhausts the phosphates which appear in the excreta above mentioned. Administration of inorganic phosphorus or phosphates does not readily supply the waste, for nature demands that phosphates be made up and blended in food which she furnishes. Advantage has been taken of this knowledge and a scientific selection of part of the grain has been made, and these have been put through mechanical processes parallel to the processes through which food is passed in its management by the human digestive organs. Therefore the new food is not only ready to serve without cooking, but it has passed through the process where the starches have been changed to grape-sugar, and that with the proteids, organic phosphates, etc., are at once ready to be quickly absorbed and turned to use in vitalizing and nourishing the parts of the body like brain, solar plexus, and the delicate nerve centers.

The new food has been given the name of Grape-Nuts, and far from being a "Crank's Food," "Invalid's Food," or anything of that sort, it is a crisp, sweet novelty, charming to the athlete, brain worker, epicure, or invalid.

Grape-Nuts can be had of grocers, and a trial dish for breakfast will be found a pleasant experience.

man the fust minute trouble teches 'em. I make no doubt but when Scripter talks about Aaron and Hur holdin' up Moses' hands, 'twas a mistake in the printin' that Hur wasn't spelt with an e. Why, there's Deacon Hopkins—take him days when every-thing goes right and he's as pompous and capable and self-sufficient as an old turkey gobbler; he's the top of the heap, and crowin' on it, too. But let him get a touch of the rheumatiz, say, or a crick in the back, or come a spell of rain in hayin' or a dry time for growin' corn, and, mercy me! he ketches bolt of my apen string, so to speak, just as if I was Goliath or Gath. It's the way they're made from the beginnin'; but most of 'em act as though the Lord had said, 'I will make a hindrance for him,' instead of a helpmeet for him."

There are men and women who declare their regret at almost every step in life they have taken. I could find married people who would tell you they wish they had never married, and single people who would tell you they wish they had; I could find carpenters who would say, "The worst trade you could put a boy at is a carpenter's;" and I could find doctors who would say, "Better be a chimney-sweep than a doctor;" and find a chimney-sweep who would say, "Better be anything than a chimney-sweep; mine is the dirtiest trade going." Now I am going to throw out a challenge. Will some one find me a person who will say, "I wish I had never loved Christ?" Blessed be God, you can't do it; the consecrated life bears the test of experience. He saved me when I was a lad, and I began to preach the Gospel when I was sixteen. He is the friend who has never left me, who has come close in trouble, and been nearest and dearest to me when I needed him most.—Joseph Berry.

Stanley tells this story of what one Bible accomplished: "In 1875 Miss Livingstone, the sister of David Livingstone, presented me with a beautifully bound Bible. On a subsequent visit to Mtesa I read to him some chapters, and as I finished it flashed through my mind that Uganda was destined to be won for Christ. I was not permitted to carry that Bible away. Mtesa never forgot the wonderful words, nor the startling effect it had upon him; and just as I was turning away from his country to continue my explorations farther into the Dark Continent, a messenger came to me, after traveling two hundred miles, crying out that Mtesa wanted that book; and he got it. To-day the Christians in Uganda number many thousands; they have proved their faith at the stake and under torture until death."—Missionary Helper.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America has just issued a handsome souvenir pamphlet on the international yacht races, which are now taking place off Sandy Hook for the America's cup. The souvenir contains handsome half-tone engravings of both the Shamrock and the Columbia, and also gives a short history of the attempts made by English yachtsmen to regain possession of the cup since it was captured by the America off the Isle of Wight in 1851. A copy of this pamphlet will be sent free to any one who will write to the Home Office of the Prudential, at Newark, N. J., mentioning this publication.

From the pamphlet mentioned above we select the following, which gives briefly some of the main facts in the wonderful career of Sir Thomas Lipton, who, it is interesting to note, holds his rank—not by reason of any ancestral history, but for his own good deeds in charity:

"Not the least interesting feature of this ninth and impending attempt of the Britishers to recover the cup is the personality of the challenger, Sir Thomas J. Lipton. The purely legendary story of Whittington and his cat, the equally fictitious narrative of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp, Dumas's thrilling creation of Monte Cristo, and his find of untold wealth—not one of these romances is really more wonderful than the career of Sir Thomas. He is now but a few years past fifty. The son of an Irish laborer, he was born in Glasgow, Scotland. His childhood days were days of privation and stint, if not of poverty.

"While yet a boy he was put to work in a stationer's shop, his wages being sixty cents a week. Determined to make his way in the world, he ran away from home, crossed the Atlantic and spent a year or so on this side. Returning to Glasgow he got work there, and, after a while started on borrowed money a small provision shop. He lived behind his shop, cleaned his own windows and delivered his own goods. Success attended his pluck and judgment, until shop after shop was added to his little Glasgow store. He has now sixty stores in London alone, and four hundred and twenty all over the British Kingdom and in other parts of the world. He sells all sorts of food products except beef. He owns thousands of acres in Ceylon, where he is the largest individual land-owner. He employs thousands of natives. He has warehouses all over Asia, and branch stores in Hamburg and Berlin. In Chicago he has a packing house, where sometimes he kills three thousand hogs in a day.

"Recently he transformed his business into a limited company, and the British people went crazy subscribing for the shares.

"When the lists closed," says the London 'Illustrated News,' 'it was estimated that over £40,000,000 had been subscribed. In Glasgow alone the total issue was applied for twice over, and it is believed that the subscription list altogether will foot up fifty millions sterling.'

"At the time of the Queen's Jubilee, Sir Thomas donated to the fund raised by the Princess of Wales to provide the poor of London with a Jubilee dinner the munificent sum of $125,000.

CAUGHT A NURSE.

Didn't Know Old King Coffee Had Her.

"The duties of professional nurses call them among a great many different people, and it is surprising to know how many are suffering from the use of coffee, which is the primary cause of the majority of many nervous disorders. My own experience has been such that I feel that I can speak with some knowledge of the subject.

"For about ten years I was afflicted with a severe nervous disorder, which was so great that sleep became an unknown thing to me without the use of opiates. I was a confirmed coffee drinker at this time, but had never thought that had anything to do with the difficulty.

"After coming to Chicago to live I was told by an acquaintance, who had been a similar sufferer from nervousness, that he discovered it was caused by the use of coffee, and when he made that discovery, gave up the coffee and took up the use of Postum Food Coffee and was completely restored. His argument sounded so logical, I was determined to make the experiment, and to my surprise, upon leaving off the coffee habit I commenced to improve. This improvement has continued until now I am in complete health and sleep well and naturally. I always advise patients suffering from nervous trouble to abandon the use of coffee and use Postum, for I know what I am talking about on that subject.

"Occasionally private families do not prepare Postum well; that is, they fail to allow a sufficient amount of time for boiling. It requires more boiling than coffee, but the care well repays, for the beverage is delightful to the taste and wonderfully nourishing." Maggie F. Church, No. 2 E. 33d Place, Chicago, Ill.

Postum is sold by all first-class grocers, and made by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE PARSON'S LIMIT.

He'd been preaching and exhorting

For a score of years or so
In a portion of the Vineyard

Where the harvesting was slow;
Where the temporal inducement

For his ceaseless diligence
Was a promise of four hundred
For his yearly recompense.

Unrelenting was the ardor

He devoted to the cause,
And though slowly came the dollars

Still he labored without pause,
Till one day they came and told him,

As he kicked against the pricks,
That they'd raise their offered stipend
From four hundred up to six.

Then the good man sank exhausted

As he feebly made reply,
"Don't, I pray you, men and brethren,
Thus my patience overtry,
For to glean the four you've promised
Hath so warped my vital store,
That 'twould kill me if you taxed me
To collect two hundred more."

THE MISSOURI.

I.

Between low brinks of ragged clay
The rapid river takes its way.

Its heavy, tawny waters flow
As if their road they did not know;

Swirl off in loops, spread out in lakes,
Whose sandy shoals trail sluggish wakes.

They gnaw away the tumbling banks,
Mow down their leafy willow ranks;

They dwindle, till the dust blows round
Where fishes swam and men were drowned

Then flood the bottoms miles away,
Fence, barn, and house their scattered prey;

But yet, far back, the hills remain,
Which all their wanderings restrain.

II.

O mighty river, we may see
Our new democracy in thee.

No Rhine art thou, by cliffs beset
With castles on each parapet;

No Thames, of placid, even tide,
With grass lawns edging either side;

But strong, and turbid, and perplexed
By frequent whirls and eddies vexed—

At times an overwhelming fall
Of brute destruction—yet through all

Large wealth bestowing—grain and woods
Upspringing where once swept by floods.

And so we know, whate'er thy force,
God's hills will hold thee to his course.

NOW READY.—The Second and Concluding Volume of President Sharpless's Notable Work.

A History of Quaker Government in Pennsylvania,

By ISAAC SHARPLESS, LL.D., President of Haverford College.

Volume II.—The Quakers in the Revolution.

The first part of this work, under the title of "A Quaker Experiment in Government," was published in the Spring of 1898, and met a warm reception from press and public, and a ready sale. It carried the narrative from the founding of the Commonwealth down to the year 1756, when the conflict between the peace principles of the Quakers and the warlike trend of events first reached a crisis. The present volume traces the same conflict through the stormy events of the Revolution, and examines its momentous results.

*Two volumes, 12mo, with numerous portraits and other illustrations.
Cloth, extra, $3.00; Half Morocco, gilt top, $5.00. Volumes sold separately.*

Volume I. A Quaker Experiment in Government, $1.50, $2.50.

Three Months' Free Subscription

In order to introduce "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" into homes where the paper is not already taken we will send it to new subscribers from the date the subscription is received to the end of 1900, for only $1.50, the regular yearly subscription price.

Every one accepting this offer will thus receive "The American Friend" free for the remainder of this year. Those who send promptly will get all the issues from the present number on. Copies of every issue from the Tenth month Fifth inclusive will be sent until exhausted.

"The American Friend" is the only weekly publication among Friends which represents the entire denomination from Atlantic to Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico. Through it alone can Friends keep themselves acquainted with the work of the denomination; to those who would keep abreast of the movements of the church it is absolutely indispensable.

It gives in its fifty-two issues each year a collection of articles from the best writers in our denomination, and many valuable papers from Christian thinkers of other branches of the Church. It treats in a broad and liberal spirit the great questions now before the Church, and it stands for every great moral reform which would make man freer and more permanently happy. It is not controversial, but illuminative and constructive. It is an exponent of applied Christianity. Christian Endeavorers cannot afford to miss its valuable department for this branch of the Church. Bible Classes will find much profit from its study of the International Lesson. It is also a newspaper, giving a general view of the home and foreign mission work, accounts of special meetings and the movement of workers, as well as full reports of all Yearly Meetings.

With the present offer to send the paper free to the end of this year, we should secure at least one thousand new subscriptions before the first of 1900. If every one of our present subscribers would get only one new subscriber in this way, we should have over 6500 more subscribers, and the influence of "The American Friend" would be doubled. Let all who see this notice call the attention of their friends to its importance. Let the subject be mentioned in meetings everywhere, and let an effort be made generally to extend the sphere of influence of "The American Friend." Sample copies will be sent to every one desiring them.

Remember: we will send "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" until First month 1st, 1901, for only $1.50.

The Southern Railway Makes Low Rates to Philadelphia, Account the National Export Exposition.

Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, advises the Southern Railway has announced very low rates from points in Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia to Philadelphia and return account the National Export Exposition.

The Southern Railway is also very liberal as to the return limit of these low rate round trip tickets, allowing a limit of thirty days. Mr. Hopkins says the prospects are very favorable for the Exposition to be largely attended from the South.

All information as to rates etc., from any point in the South will be cheerfully furnished by Mr. Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut St., Phila.

By LAWRIE TATUM, formerly United States Indian Agent.

A most interesting book relating to the history and customs of the Indians, written by one who has mingled with "Our Red Brothers" and who is well equipped for the task he has undertaken. "The prime motive for writing this volume has been to record some important items of history in connection with the Indians and the overruling providence of God, and to show that 'the Peace Policy' in dealing with the Indians, which commenced in 1869, has proved a great blessing to them, to the government, and to people of the nation."

Containing 366 pages, well printed on good paper, neatly bound in cloth, with gold lettering on side and back. Sixteen full page half-tone engravings.

IMPROVING ITS SERVICE.

New Dining Cars on the Southern Railway's Washington & Southwestern Limited.

The Southern Railway, which has become one of the most popular tourist and commercial lines in the country because of its superb service, splendid equipment and fast time, has just added two new dining cars to the equipment of the popular "Washington and Southwestern Limited."

This is one of the most famous trains in this country, carrying as it does through Pullman drawing-room, sleeping cars and library, observation, and dining cars be-

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS.

This department of "Subscribers' Wants" will be found of value by anyone wishing to reach the Friends with a small advertisement. It has already done excellent service for those who have used it. The varied character of the notices shows that its value is confined to no particular class of "want" advertising, but that it may be used with advantage by all who have anything to advertise. Five lines, one time, cost only 25 cents; additional lines 5 cents each. Extra insertions at the same rate.

QUAKERS AS MAKERS OF AMERICA.—This booklet has proved very popular, and has had a wide sale. Our second edition is now nearly exhausted. So long as the booklets last they will be sold as heretofore for 10 cents the copy, postage paid. THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

A FEW Boarders can be accommodated at the quiet, pleasant home of G. N. and W. B. Jones, at College Park, near San Jose, California. Each season here has its fruits and flowers.

WE CAN still supply our readers with Spurgeon's Address on George Fox for 10 cents per copy, postage paid. This address on the founder of Friends is by all odds the most eulogistic and pleasing ever delivered by anyone outside the denomination. THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

WANTED—men and women to sell Teachers' Bibles and other religious books for Christmas. Our low prices to agents will surprise you. For terms address, Leroy Jay & Co., Box 54, Deming, Indiana.

WANTED.—Anyone with anything to advertise to send us 25 cents for an insertion of a five-line advertisement in this column telling Friends what it is. Fifty cents for two insertions, 75 cents for three, $1.00 for four. Extra lines above five, 5 cents each. Special rates for the quarter year, half year and year, furnished on application. THE AMERICAN FRIEND, 718 Arch St., Phila.

tween New York, Philadelphia, Washington and New Orleans, Mobile, Birmingham, Memphis, Knoxville, Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., Asheville, N. C., and all the chief cities of the South. These new dining cars are in keeping with the thoroughly high class equipment of this and the other trains of the Southern Railway, being quite similar to the beautiful diners operated on the "Congressional Limited" of the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York and Washington.

Their interior is magnificently finished in hard woods and each table is furnished with chairs instead of the old-fashioned tufted seats. The china, glassware and silverware are of the most modern pattern and exceedingly attractive, while the cuisine will even surpass the high standard previously maintained in the cars of this company. Both the Northern and Southern markets are drawn upon liberally for the delicacies as well as the substantial of each section.

"The Washington and Southwestern Limited" leaves Philadelphia daily at 6.55 p.m. and Washington at 10.45 p.m., and the dining cars are operated between Greensboro, N. C., and Montgomery, Ala., furnishing breakfast, dinner and supper, the train arriving at New Orleans and other cities in time for early breakfast the next morning.

With the added attraction of these new diners, this train, which has long been the favorite of travelers between the North and South, will become even more popular, as in its entirety it is the most perfectly equipped train operated between Philadelphia and the Southwest. Chas. G. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Penna., will be pleased to furnish any further information.

WISHING.

Do you wish the world were better?
Let me tell you what to do.
Set a watch upon your actions,
Keep them always straight and true.
Rid your mind of selfish motives,
Let your thought be clean and high.
You can make a little Eden
Of the sphere you occupy.

Do you wish the world were wiser?
Well, suppose you make a start
By accumulating wisdom
In the scrap-book of your heart.
Do not waste one page on folly;
Live to learn, and learn to live.
If you want to give men knowledge
You must get it, ere you give.

Do you wish the world were happy?
Then remember day by day
Just to scatter seeds of kindness
As you pass along the way
For the pleasures of the many
May be oftentimes traced to one,
As the hand that plants an acorn
Shelters armies from the sun.

AN AUTUMN OUTING.

Gettysburg, Luray, Natural Bridge, Hot Springs, Richmond, and Washington.

An eleven-day personally-conducted tour of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to the Battlefield of Gettysburg, Luray Caverns, Natural Bridge, Virginia Hot Springs, and the cities of Richmond and Washington, will leave New York and Philadelphia in a special train of parlor cars on Thursday, Oct. 19. The party will be in charge of a tourist agent and an experienced chaperon. A whole day will be spent on the Battlefield of Gettysburg, a carriage drive with lectures by an able guide, being included in the ticket. Ample time will be allowed at Luray and Natural Bridge to view the wondrous natural formations, and at the Hot Springs two days will be spent. The season at this great autumn resort in the beautiful mountains of Virginia will be at its height. At Richmond and Washington opportunities will be presented to visit all the points of interest under intelligent guidance.

The round-trip rate, including all necessary expenses, is $65 from New York, $63 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

For detailed itinerary apply to Ticket Agents; to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 4 Court Street, Brooklyn; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address George W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

remember picking from my face what looked like an enormous spider.

I thought nothing of it until I began to feel a pain underneath my left eye, similar to that left by a mosquito sting. In ten minutes my cheek had swollen enormously, and it was clear that I had been stung by some venomous reptile or insect. By the time Bekel came up, the swelling had increased so much that I could not see out of my left eye.

As soon as Bekel saw my face, he seemed stricken with terror. He leaped from his horse, knocked rather than pushed me down, and with the fingers of both hands commenced pressing the protuberance under my eye.

The pain was terrible, and I yelled in my agony, until I think I must have fainted, although I well remember one of the Kirghiz coming with a long knife, when at once the idea entered my brain that they meant to "do for" me. The knife, however, was used only to extract the sting of the tarantula.

When I reached Petro-Alexandrovsk and related the incident to the doctor of the lazaret there, I learned that I owed my life to the promptitude of Bekel and the Kirghiz. Another hour and help would have been too late.

"Who to the sod a tree hath given
Sends prayer of faith and works to heaven.
He plants a trust in sun and showers,
In buds and bloom of springtime hours;
He plants a hope for coming years,
For wider reach and fuller spheres.
So may our lives with purpose true
Reach out and upward through the blue;
So may our faith look from earth's gloom
To an eternal springtime's bloom.
A teacher he of life to be
Who plants a tree."

WEST CHESTER CENTENNIAL.

Reduced Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the Centennial Celebration to be held at West Chester, October 11, 12 and 13, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell special excursion tickets to West Chester on October 10, 11, 12 and 13, good to return until October 14, from Philadelphia, Lancaster, and intermediate points on the Philadelphia Division; and from Wynnefield Avenue, Reading, and intermediate points on the Schuylkill Division, at rate of single fare for the round trip; no less rate than twenty-five cents.

Special trains will leave Lancaster at 7.45 A. M. October 12 and 13, running through to West Chester without change. Returning leave West Chester at 10.00 P. M., stopping at intermediate stations in both directions.

Special train will be run from Frazer to Phoenixville on October 12, connecting with regular train leaving West Chester at 6.24 P. M.

On October 13, special train will leave Pottstown at 7.45 A. M., running through to West Chester (via Phoenixville and Frazer) without change. Returning leave West Chester at 10.30 P. M., stopping at intermediate stations in both directions.

That travelers in the desert would be wise not to take a nap when ahead of their caravans is proved—though it hardly needed proving—by the experience of Robert L. Jefferson, F. R. G. S., who relates his adventure in the "Wide World Magazine."

THE ETERNAL WOMANLY.

The order of nature does not change. Yet nature's law is growth, and with that growth the position of women has changed, and with that change the cultivation of the individual becomes more important. The problem is not simply that of bringing children into the world, but what kind of children shall be born, what kind of a mother shall be educated; or, if the high development of motherhood is denied her, how shall she take her place in the world, a useful and honored member of the community, having children of her spirit. For I take it the eternal feminine is simply this: it is the power of love which has its throne in a good woman's heart. Call it altruism if you like, call it the mother sea, found a philosophy or a system of speculation upon it—it is simply this endless capacity of love and devotion which Mary of Bethany showed when she sat at Jesus' feet.

*Granted, then, that this is at the root of woman's life; that every woman child who comes into the world has this great gift and responsibility, that this is her contribution to human life, with what reverence, with what awe, should we approach her, to make or to mar! Heart and head in happy union must rule the conduct. And so we believe in what is called higher education. * * **

And with this education our sources of joy are enlarged. Not until we sound the depths of sorrow do we know the reservoirs we have to be filled with joy. "God giveth that which is good in his sight, wisdom and knowledge, and joy."

The wise man puts it all in a sentence for us—this wisdom which cometh from above, this soul education, which is so impossible to define; the knowledge the mind is so eager to acquire; and as the crown of both, the legitimate fruit of both, joy, the last heavenly gift. Without this joy no good work is possible. It is the sustaining power sometimes called enthusiasm, sometimes satisfaction—always precious, always to be desired.

This highest gift of heaven, this gift which is good in God's sight, woman is peculiarly fitted to receive. If the deep, abiding fountain of love in her heart is her greatest element of strength, then, indeed, she has a true and vital spark of the divine life in a peculiar sense. It is her great task to interpret the divine spirit in terms of everyday life. What countless men, the best of the world's leaders, have acknowledged their debt to their holy mothers! There have always been men to speak with tongues, and there must always be women to interpret. How close, then, to the source of all life must we women press, lest the light that is in us should turn to darkness!—Inaugural address of Caroline Hazard, at Wellesley College.

GOD'S ANSWER.

The cry of man's anguish went up unto God,
"Lord, take away pain!
The shadow that darkens the world Thou hast made,
The close-coiling chain
That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
On the wings that would soar—
Lord, take away pain from the world Thou hast made
That it love Thee the more!"

Then answered the Lord to the cry of His world,
"Shall I take away pain,
And with it the power of the soul to endure,
Made strong by the strain?
Shall I take away pity that knits heart to heart
And sacrifice high?
Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
White brows to the sky?
Shall I take away love that redeems with a price
And smiles at its loss?
Can ye spare from your lives that would climb unto mine
The Christ on His cross?"
—Julia Larned, in "The Independent."

THE TEST OF CHRISTIANITY.

WE have learned that it is never safe to estimate the worth and value of a man by the number of cubits which measure his stature. No foot-rule test gives the real capacity of a man, because personality cannot be measured by the yard.

Nevertheless the similar mistake is continually made of estimating a man's Christianity by some such inadequate foot-rule test. It would be well for us, if we could, to get back to the standards of Christ and the Apostles and see how they tested religion. The question never is, What kind of a coat do you wear? or what are your "views" on creation and sin and inspiration? or what do you think about the Sacraments? In fact, Christ never asked a man a theological question during his whole ministry. "Art thou desiring to be made whole"? "Dost thou love God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself"? "Go and sin no more." "Her sins are forgiven, for she loved much," are some of the wonderful words which came from His lips when He was dealing with individual cases. When the Jews tried to catch Him with metaphysical and theological questions, such as "what sin caused this man to be blind"? or "whose wife will this woman be in the resurrection"? He immediately brushed away the fruitless abstractions and gave clear, practical answers: "This blind man is an occasion for the exhibition of God's power"—i.e., for working a work of God, and "If you read the Scriptures aright you would understand that God is the God of the living, and that you must not measure the heavenly life by the limitations of the earthly life."

John's tests of Christianity are quite different from those which we use to-day. He again makes no reference to things which we consider tests of soundness: "Every one that loveth is born of God." "We know that we have passed from death to life because we love." "We know that we dwell in Him, because we have His Spirit." "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world." "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not." "He that hath the Son of God hath life."

It can be quickly seen that these are no light and easy tests, and that a man who could answer all our articles of belief and make a great display of theological orthodoxy, might at the same time fail in every point of John's tests. He that loveth, he that has the Spirit in his heart and life, he that overcometh the world, he that does not commit sin—what a sifting!

Now there has been and still is great danger of making so much of theological tests of soundness that these deeper, truer and more spiritual tests—which are the only ones of importance to Christ and the Apostles—should be overlooked. There are Christians to-day who decide upon a man's Christianity by his intellectual opinions and conclusions, rather than by the spiritual condition of his heart and his life, though it is an unscriptural position to take. The end and aim of religion—we cannot say it too often—is to bring men to God and to make them Christlike, and religion has never done its perfect work in a man until it fills his life with the Holy Spirit and his heart with love. Right belief upon questions which directly affect the spiritual life is tremendously important, and faith is the very hand by which we grasp and appropriate the divine realities; but we have no more right to rule men out of Christ's kingdom on the test of an intellectual shibboleth than we have to count devils in, simply because they believe and tremble. The time has come when men's minds must be left free to look at every fact in God's world, and to come to the best conclusions they can upon them, and we must estimate their Christianity by New Testament tests, which are invariably spiritual tests, and measure the life and faith by Christ's standards.

WHAT WE NEED TO-DAY.

THERE is probably no more serious blunder than that of shutting the eyes to escape dangers which are coming upon us. It is better to see the situation as it really is, and to use the head and the heart and the heart's prayer to come through it. Shrieking and hysterics are worse than nothing when it is a calm head and a stout heart that are needed. We have been living through a transformation period in our branch of the church, which has affected almost every method and some of the fundamental principles of the body. It has been an irresistible movement, like that of the ocean tide, and one which perhaps nobody has fully understood; surely no one at all foresaw the outcome at the beginning of the movement. The old system of things was not adapted to our modern life; it was not elastic and sensitive to the onward moving of the spirit of God, and it was "shaken and removed." The new wine broke the old bottles, the new patch tore the old garment. But—and here is the point—the wise and weighty men, who ought to have studied and understood and guided the new movement at its beginning, were too often opposed to all change, they shut their eyes to the real situation, and by their unwisdom gave the movement a direction it would never have taken but for their stubbornness. There are, of course, times when to be stiffnecked is a virtue, but when a tide is coming—and that, too, a tide with the divine Spirit behind it—clear insight, wise forethought and wisdom for the situation are greater virtues. It is easy enough to get disgusted when things do not go our way, and to conclude that our views are eternally right and therefore to be preserved at all cost; but such an attitude and spirit do not always prove best when there is a real gap to be bridged between an old truth and a new.

The whole Christian world has in our day been undergoing profound transformations, both because of great social changes and because of far-reaching changes in thought. Religious work cannot be done to-day successfully on the lines that prevailed a generation ago, nor can men look at questions to-day just as our fathers and grandfathers looked at them. The age has changed by an irresistible movement, whether we like it or not, and it is our business now to deal with things as they are and not with things as we should like to have them.

We must see that Christianity is presented to men in terms that they can understand and in ways that meet their present needs. The scribe instructed in the kingdom brings out of his storehouse things new and old—i.e., he deals with the situation that confronts him. Our business is to christianize and spiritualize neighborhoods, not to hold meetings which merely conform to discipline and are "preserved from unbecoming behavior." We are to shake communities because we have the living power of God in us, not because we have inherited certain fixed principles. We are to help our young men—and all men, for that matter—out of their perplexities and doubts and intellectual difficulties—not by railing against those who are honestly seeking the truth, but by showing them the power of God in a surrendered life, the comfort and joy and peace which come from faith in Jesus Christ and the righteousness and love which the life in the Spirit brings. This is a demonstration of the Spirit which appeals to everybody.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

CAROLINE HAZARD, whose beautiful words appear on our front cover page this week, has just entered upon her work as President of Wellesley College. She is a daughter of Rowland Hazard, of Rhode Island, a well-known Friend. Caroline Hazard has just published, through Houghton, Mifflin & Co., a very interesting book on "Narragansett Friends' Meetings," of which we hope soon to have an extended notice.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

According to the eighty-third report of the American Bible Society, 65,962,505 copies of the Bible have been issued by the Society since its establishment. The issues for last year alone are 1,380,892, distributed in all portions of the globe, a particularly large number, it is said, being distributed in the Chinese empire. The Society is under the control of no one denomination.

The Pope has named Archbishop Chapelle delegate apostolic of the Philippine Islands. This is said to be an excellent appointment, and is in entire accord with the Pope's evident policy of Americanizing the Catholic ecclesiastical system in our new possessions. Archbishop Chapelle is a master of the Spanish language, and an able church historian and canonist—qualifications very necessary for his work. He is also apostolic delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico, and holds the position of Archbishop of New Orleans.

There is strong agitation at the present time in the Episcopal Church of this country to enact stricter canon laws on the subject of divorce. It is proposed to assume a position of unbending prohibition of divorce in any form. Bishop Potter, of New York, who has hitherto stood for liberal views in theology and divorce, at the late diocesan convention of the Episcopal Church in his State gave strong evidence that he now favors stricter laws in the church on the subject of divorce, and would return to the canons in force up to the time of Henry VIII.

The United Presbyterians are now represented—as formerly they were not—in the Presbyterian General Alliance. They are so represented because the Alliance, in deference to them, has decided not to sing, "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," etc. The United Presbyterians sing only Psalms in their worship.

More missionary riots are reported from China, this time in Chinese Thibet, some one hundred and thirty miles over the border. The Christian and Missionary Alliance has had a station there for about two years, and this has been attacked and looted by the Thibetans.

The new Year Book of the Congregationalists shows that this denomination made a gain last year of six churches and 2,370 members. The additions to the churches on confession (25,189) were smaller than in any year since 1885. The benevolent contributions fell off $552,405 from 1897, and the home expenditures increased $82,093.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

FRIENDS' SPANISH PRESS.

BY W. IRVING KELSEY.

The following letter from W. I. Kelsey, with reference to Friends' printing work in Mexico, will be read with interest by many Friends who have formerly contributed to the work, as well as by many interested in the new developments in Spanish-American countries. At W. I. Kelsey's request I will receive and forward all funds contributed for this purpose, giving proper account of the same. Send to M. M. Binford, 261 Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.—M. M. BINFORD

Perhaps it is not generally known that the publishing house of Friends at Victoria, Mexico, is the property of the Friends at large, and does not belong to any particular yearly meeting, although reports of the work are published annually in the proceedings of Indiana Yearly Meeting in connection with the report of the Foreign Mission Committee of that body.

With the aid of Friends, Samuel Purdie established a small printing office in Matamoras, in 1872, and immediately commenced the publication of a monthly periodical, which still continues to be published, and which holds the honor of being the oldest evangelical periodical in Mexico. As the work grew new equipment has been needed from time to time. The funds for one large press were raised by Isaac Sharp and for another by David Updegraff, both now gone to their reward, together with the founder of the enterprise.

Recently the office has been subjected to a thorough renovation, under the supervision of an experienced printer. Old type and machinery have been sold and the proceeds, together with a small amount received from Friends in the North, invested in new material. It is now one of the most complete small offices in the country—up-to-date in every particular. During this period of overhauling comparatively little work could be done. Notwithstanding this, "El Ramo de Olivo," the periodical above mentioned, has increased its edition to 1,000 copies monthly; an edition of 900 of a 42-page booklet, entitled "Studies in the Gospel by St. John," and a new edition of 5,000 of a small arithmetic, have been published, besides two leaflets in English, giving an account of the work. The running expenses of the office during this time have amounted to $1,097.91, Mexican (the Mexican dollar has been worth on an average 48½ gold.) The receipts have been $970.28 for job work, $84 from sale of books, $130.30 for subscriptions to "El Ramo de Olivo," and $43.90 from contributions. It will be seen that the output of religious literature depends almost entirely upon the amount of job work received. During the past year only $16 in gold has been received from Friends in the United States. It is a good thing to have a work self-supporting; but sometimes it is more expensive than it appears at first sight. Would it not be a better policy to invest a little more money and use these presses for the spread of the Gospel, and liberate your missionaries from having to look after this job printing office work, for the preaching of the Gospel.

The press is one of the most efficient means of evangelization. There are many towns and cities all over Mexico, and even in other Spanish-speaking countries, where the only Gospel work being done is done by the monthly visits of "El Ramo de Olivo." Frequently we hear of the good work done in distant places. In a recent letter from a Protestant church in Havana, Cuba, we are informed of the adoption of our principles and name by said body. Their only means of information concerning us have been by the printed page and personal correspondence. In this letter they send this message: "We desire that the Mexican mission send us religious literature in Spanish." The little meeting in Victoria responded to this call as far as it was able.

The object of the present article is to present to Friends a practical, effective means of carrying the Gospel to the new Spanish possessions, and of extending the work in other Spanish-speaking countries. The proposition is to publish on good paper, in attractive form, a series of the very best tracts obtainable in the Spanish language. Some of these will be reprints, others new or translations from English.

Several facts are to be noted which will recommend this enterprise:

First, we are in a position to make a selection of the literature best adapted to the need.

Second, we have the equipment for printing this literature in good form, in correct Spanish, and at small cost. One thousand eight-page tracts, 6x4½, can be published for $5 in gold. Each additional thousand will cost $2.50.

Third, these tracts can go where the missionary cannot. They will not have to suspend work for heat or rain, and can commence immediately.

Fourth, and most important of all, the Cuban church has asked for just this thing. They ought to know the needs of the field better than we.

We have on the press at this writing a tract on the "Divinity of Christ," by D. L. Moody. It will doubtless be of great value among that large and intelligent class found in all Catholic countries who have been driven into infidelity by the teachings and practices of the Roman Church. We have in preparation other tracts on "Purgatory," the "Worship of the Virgin," "Justification by Faith," and others of a similar nature, especially adapted to the work in Catholic countries.

We have no funds for the above-mentioned work, and take this means of giving Friends an opportunity for helping. Send drafts on New York. All funds will be promptly acknowledged and samples of the tracts sent to contributing parties. Any one desiring that tracts be sent to any particular place will have their requests attended to.

TRAVELS AND MEETINGS IN OKLAHOMA.

BY WILLIAM F. LEWIS.

Stella Quarterly Meeting was held at Cleo, Woods County, O. T., Ninth month 1st, 2d and 3d, 1899.

Harmony Monthly Meeting in Pawnee County appointed delegates to attend the quarterly meeting. Their attendance involved an overland trip of more than one hundred and twenty miles, nearly due west. Benjamin F. Harmon, Frances, his wife, their little daughter, Christie, and the writer constituted the company who from Harmony "went up to the feast." With a camp wagon and a covered buggy we started on the 29th of Eighth month to encounter the dust and heat that lay between Harmony and Cleo. In crossing the wide Indian Reservation, it was necessary to carry a jug of water with which to slake our thirst. About mid-day we came to a grove, in which is a fountain called "Dripping Spring." Here we stopped to feed our teams, eat a lunch and rest. There was another party in the grove, who had heard of Quakers, but seemed surprised to see us "look like other people." Sometime in the afternoon we came to Red Rock, a station on the Santa Fe R. R. We refilled our jug at an excellent well of water, and drove that evening beyond the western line of the Otoe Indian Reservation. That night we camped by the roadside, picketed our horses on the prairie grass, spread our blankets on the ground, with the bright stars and moon shining down upon us through the blue vault above.

We awoke with the peace of God in our souls, and a hard day's drive before us. This day we suffered much from the dust, the heat and lack of water by the way. The cornfields near the town of Kremlin, presented a dreary appearance, the recent hot winds having extracted the last vestige of green from blade and stalk.

Late in the evening we came to the home of Jonathan and Stella Paxson, members of Coldwater Monthly Meeting. Here we met Lida A. Jackson and her son, Ralph, from Friends' Valley.

Near Brother Pason's home, by previous arrangement, we held an evening meeting where we met an interesting and orderly company. The Friend who made the appointment was weary with travel and hoarse with a cold, so that it was with difficulty he could speak at all, but the good sisters of our company nobly came to the rescue in acceptable service.

On the morning of the 31st we passed a beautiful flowing spring of water—a refreshing sight for those who live on these broad dry plains.

Carrier Academy (Congregationalist), was the next object of interest on our way. This institution is entering its second year.

The last night in Eighth month, we camped among the Black Jack (oak) trees, some sleeping on the ground and some in the camp wagon. The next morning we drove to Cleo, getting a fine view of the Gloss Mountains, which are some grand buttes west of the Cimarron River.

The first session of the quarterly meeting was that of the Meeting for Ministry and Oversight on Sixth-day morning in the grove, while our athletic young Friend, Jacob H. Hughs, was busy setting up the quarterly meeting tabernacle. The location was almost without fault, grass, shade of native elm trees, and a fine flowing spring of water, filling a metal tank about one hundred feet from the great tent. Nearly all the Friends attending the quarterly meeting camped on the grounds, either in wagons or in the tabernacle. This gave a good opportunity for holding the several sessions, as well as devotional and prayer meetings. The Good Shepherd was present to bless every meeting as we abode under his teaching.

Josiah Dillon, from Iowa, now about settling in Oklahoma, was again with us. William Neal, of Emporia, Kansas, was also in attendance. Lodi Bonser was re-appointed superintendent of evangelistic work; post office address Elkton, O. T.

On Second-day morning, at break of day, J. H. Hughs was letting down the tabernacle over the heads of the tired sleepers within. With some assistants under his direction the tent was soon loaded into B. F. Harmon's wagon for a journey of one hundred miles or more, for use at Harmony in a series of meetings.

Back through the heat and drought we came, worn, and, oh, how dusty! from nine days' travel and camping, never sleeping in a house while absent, yet glad, yes, joyful, for the sweet fellowship with the Father.

On the morning of the Ninth inst., J. S. Hughs had the tabernacle set up at Harmony, where by previous arrangement, we were rejoiced to see Josiah Dillon accompanied by Alvin Coppock and J. L. Welch. These meetings were a time of precious seed sowing, and a present uplift of soul to the Christian believer. Alvin Coppock, assisted by others, made twenty-five family visits, in which all were encouraged to not neglect the family altar. The meetings continued nine days.

It is now proposed to take the tabernacle to Wichita for Stella's headquarters at yearly meeting.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

DR. SHELDON'S BOOK.

Carmel, Ind., Tenth month 2d, 1899.

Rufus M. Jones.

Dear Friend:—Being almost universally well-pleased with your editorials, and having so often expressed my approval to you, you will no doubt allow me to criticize the one in Ninth month 28th, entitled "What Would He Have Me Do?" You speak of two books in that article, but I wish to refer especially to Dr. Sheldon's. You say: "They present rather a doubtful method of determining what is right for the individual of to-day." What method does Dr. Sheldon present? I understand him to present precisely the same that you do when you say, "The thing we can do, the thing we should do, is to live in the spirit of Jesus Christ, to learn His will for us to-day, and to have our lives animated by the purpose and spirit which are everywhere revealed in Him." "We are to be entered, baptized, empowered, enflamed, guided by a living, present spirit whose purpose is to make man a king and priest unto God." He would certainly agree with you in this, else why does he use such expressions as these: "The spirit of life was moving in power through his own life as never before." "As before, Henry Maxwell asked them to pray with him, and, as before, a distinct answer came in the presence of the Divine Spirit. There was no doubt in the mind of any one present that what they proposed to do was so clearly in line with the Divine will that a blessing rested on it in a very special manner." "Going to the source of authority for wisdom." "On their knee in prayer." "I'm sure the Spirit will give you power to-night." "Henry Maxwell prayed that the Holy Spirit, who had shown Himself with growing power in the company of the first church discipline, might abide long with them all." "The swift, awesome presence of the Holy Spirit had affected her as never in all her life before." "It is perhaps the most striking evidence of the tremendous spiritual factor which had now entered the Rectangle." Other quotations from his book might be given, but perhaps these are sufficient to prove the point. I trust all the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will read the book, "What Would Jesus Do?" You say manifestly we are not to wear sandals and a seamless robe because He did. We are not to keep out of cars and carriages because He always walked or rode a donkey. Does Dr. Sheldon intimate anything of the kind, or say anything anywhere in the book that would lead to such a conclusion? Certainly not. The whole burden on the author's mind is to ascertain what Jesus would do now, not 1900 years ago,—in stores, machine shops, railway and municipal affairs, editing newspapers and all the activities of life,—and he clearly shows that we can only do this by the Holy Spirit abiding in and guiding us. Theologians may cavil and literary men carp, but it's a great pity some of them do not strive as earnestly to help solve the problem of life as the author of "What Would Jesus Do?" has.

Sincerely your friend,

F. H. KING.

[We distinctly desire not to enter into any controversy on this subject, for we realize that the book in question has proved very helpful to many. We, however, feel that our former words were called for and that there is good ground for our position.—ED.]

A LETTER FROM ALASKA.

Kansas City, Mo., Ninth month 20th, 1899.

EDITOR AMERICAN FRIEND:

I enclose a letter from Richard Smith, an Alaskan Indian, to Charles N. Replogle, which will, I think, interest thy readers.

He, with his father, "Dick" Smith, and their families, have removed from Douglas to Klukwan, to teach the Indians there the way of life. They went in their own canoe and expect to support themselves. I send thee the letter uncorrected, as I thought Friends would like to see just how he expresses himself, and how few mistakes he made in spelling or the use of English.

His son, we are informed, has quite a gift in the ministry.

The letter from Charles N. Replogle, enclosing the above, informs us that they held meeting in their new house on First-day, Ninth month 3d; had 156 present at Sabbath school, and the house was full both morning and night.

The house is not entirely completed, and they have not as yet means to finish the outside, the seating or means of heating it. We do hope some of those who can do so may feel it in their hearts to send sufficient to supply these needs. I cannot give exact figures as to the amount expended on the house, as some labor and materials were donated, but suppose it cannot be less than $1,500 or $1,600, of which more than half was contributed by the Friends and others at Douglas. Contributions should be sent to the treasurer, John G. Kirby, Lawrence, Kansas.

Thine truly,
FRANCIS A. WRIGHT,

Secretary Mission Board of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Klukwan, Alaska, Aug. 30th, 1899.

Charles Replogle:

Dear Brother in Christ: First, I will tell you about our trip and how we arrived here. We were four days on the way, we did not traveled one day as it was Sunday. There was another canoe with us on the way here, there were Jack No-ku-wah and his wife, and with them we held our meeting on Sunday. Monday morning we started again, and we got to Chelcat the same day, on Tuesday evening we held a meeting in a tent, and so many came out that we did not have any place for them. I am glad to found so many of them were Christian men and women. On Wednesday we went across to the other village, and we held our prayer meeting in the old log cabin church, and the Lord was in the meeting that many of them were converted; two or three of them would testified at the same time. "Praise the Lord." In these two meetings the people welcomed us. The Lord permitted us to leave there Thursday for Klukwan, it took us two days to go up, and we had to struggle hard to get up here for the river were flowing very rapidly. We got up here just in time for Sunday, and the people here received us gladly. On Sunday, the people provided us a large house just before we asked for it; at ten o'clock we called the people in for Sunday school, and we had 50 people presant and 43 in the evening, they all took an active part and many converted, and the Lord grant our meeting that I just felt like apostle Paul. The people here were just hungry for the gospel, some of them told me they been wanting a missionary for a long time, and they have been praying for one, and they are just praising the Lord because he has answered their prayer. I suppose by next Sunday we will have all come in from fishing by that time. I think we will get our meeting house full. The people here live mostly on fish and berries, and they earne their money from fishing. I think they will stay here until fall, just before the river froses up, that will be about two months or more. Now, Brother, we need your help to push the work along, prayer often for us that we may sow a good seed in this field. We told the people that you are coming up here and they are expecting you soon. Now, Brother, I have often prayer to our Father that He may be with you and bless you in your work, and also may He bring more lost sheep to his fold. Now, let us each one of us prayer that we may win more lost souls to Christ. I wish you would tell my brethren and sister to stand firm for the Master, and to be like the man that build his house upon the solid rock and when the storm came it did not hurt it, because the foundation is solid, and let Christ be their foundation so when temptation comes they may stand and not fall until the Lord comes. May the Lord keep them and bless them is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

RICHARD SMITH.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

BY GEORGE A. BARTON.

The second International Council of Congregationalists met in Tremont Temple, Boston, Ninth month 20th to Ninth month 28th, inclusive. It was a noteworthy and impressive gathering. Five hundred delegates from all parts of the English-speaking world, together with missionaries and native Christians from India, Japan, China and other countries, whither the evangelizing efforts of the denomination have extended, formed the nucleus of the Council, while two thousand five hundred interested Christians filled the remaining seats and occupied all possible standing room. The gathering was remarkable for the strength and character of the men who composed it—names known the world over for efficiency in Christian work, devotion to missionary enterprises, or the gifts of inspiring educators.

The council was in no respect a legislative body; it transacted only enough business to maintain its existence. Its sessions from beginning to end were devoted to the discussion of vital themes in religion and education, and these themes were in nearly every instance handled by men who are in the front rank of the world's workers in the subject on which they spoke. Not the enactment of legislation, but the enlargement and inspiration of thought, was the object of this gathering.

One of the noteworthy features of this Council was the frank acceptance of modern thought on the part of all the speakers, and the evidence that Congregational theology has already gone far in adjusting itself to all known truth. This was manifest in nearly every address, from that of President Harris, of Amherst, with which the Council began, to the very end. This condition is by no means the result of a decay of faith or of a loss of piety, but indicates rather an increase of both. Principal Fairbairn declared that "Evolution is the greatest theistic discovery of the century," and at the same time, presented Christ more persuasively than ever. Professor Porter frankly accepted the results of Biblical criticism, but stood for true Christian discipleship, declaring "It is one thing to rationalize Christian knowledge and secularize Christian life, and quite another to Christianize rational knowledge and vitalize secular life." We are not to defend faith from the world, but to overcome the world by faith."

The idea of the church was presented in terms in which George Fox would have delighted, and with which his followers ought to be in harmony. The speaker on this theme—Principal Fairbairn—declared "The essence of the church is the Saviour to save and govern; the disciple to be saved and obey. All else is accidental. Ceremonies and ritual are the essence of the sect; the soul face to face with the Saviour is the essence of the church." Many of the sentiments expressed on the Christian ministry were thoroughly in accord with that ideal of a preacher which lies at the basis of our Quaker organization, but from which in some degree we have drifted. One speaker declared that the preacher of to-day should be a prophet, not a scribe; and another that the world never needed the prophetic function so much as now.

The session given to the consideration of national and international responsibilities was one of peculiar interest. The American speakers on these themes—Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Moxom and Dr. Plumb—took ground which whitewashed our whole Spanish-Philippine war as profoundly Christian from beginning to end. The English speakers—Dr. Mackennal and Hon. Wm. Crosfield—took a saner and more Christian view, declaring that no nation was thoroughly Christian—that there could not really be a Christian war, and that the English people were now so thoroughly in doubt as to the righteousness of war, that no government had for years dared to ask prayers for the success of English arms.

As one listened, the Americans seemed to represent a nation in its youth, intoxicated by success in a youthful enterprise, and incapable, as yet, of distinguishing real good from that which self-interest led its imagination to wrap in a cloak of whiteness; the English to represent a nation which has progressed far enough upon the path of life to have been compelled from painful experience to distinguish actual from imaginary righteousness, and which, though it is conscious that it does not live up to its ideal, has insight enough not to drag its ideal down. When the fact came out that both the English speakers were reared as Friends, we were in doubt whether this impression might not have been due, in part, to the clearer perception which a Quaker training gave to the English representatives.

The speakers from Australia and Japan brought vividly before the Council the fact that, scattered as Christians are, "One is our Master, even Christ."

The Congregationalists as represented by this Council are second to no body of Christians in breadth and depth of Christian spirit, openness of mind to all our Father has to teach, or in well-directed efforts for education and the evangelization of the world.

The International Lesson.

FOURTH QUARTER.

Lesson V.

Tenth month 29, 1899.

PSALMS OF DELIVERANCE.

Psalms 85 and 126.

GOLDEN TEXT.—They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. Psalm 126: 5.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 23.—Psalm of deliverance. Psalms 85.
Third-day, Tenth mo. 24.—Psalm of deliverance. Psalms 126.
Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 25.—Promise of deliverance. Jer. 30: 10-24.
Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 26.—A joyful prospect. Jer. 31: 1-12.
Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 27.—Pardon and restoration. Jer. 33: 1-14.
Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 28.—A joyful city. Zech. 8: 1-8.
First-day, Tenth mo. 29.—The Great Deliverer. Psalms 124.

The date of the two Psalms which make up the lesson is not known. Their tone and spirit would place them in the period after the return from Babylon, and probably in the period described by Nehemiah (1:3; 4: 11-24). This would make the time of composition about 445 B. C., or about ninety years after the coming of the first band of returning captives. The two Psalms are so closely connected in thought that there seems little doubt that they were written about the same time.

The title of Psalm 85, as given in the Revised Version, "For the Chief Musician. A Psalm of the Sons of Korah," implies that the Psalm was for the Precentor or leader of the Temple choir, and that it belonged to the collection of the sons of Korah; just as we should say such and such a hymn was from Moody and Sankey's collection. Psalm 126 is one of the Pilgrim Psalms.

1. "Favorable." This was shown by the bringing back of the captives to Jerusalem. There could not be a much greater proof.

2. "Forgiven the iniquity." The restoration was a proof of this. "Covered." So as to be as one in God's sight who has not committed sin. Compare Is. 43: 25; 44; 22. "Selah." It is now generally held that this Hebrew word is not a part of the text. It is thought to be a musical character, and probably means either louder playing, or, more likely, "an instrumental interlude while the singing ceased." The word occurs seventy-one times in the Psalms, and three times in Habakkuk III and nowhere else.

3. "Withdrawn." A further declaration of what God had done for them. Compare Ps. 32: 1, 2.

4. "Turn us." "Restore us," or perhaps "turn to us." Compare Is. 63: 17.

5. "Wilt thou be angry," etc. The condition of affairs was such as to cause the Psalmist to think that God was still angry with his people.

6. "Quicken." Give new life. "Thou" is emphatic; God can do it but no one else. "In thee." In God alone.

8. Here begins the second part of the Psalm, which contains a Divine promise and assurance. The Psalmist has given expression to his sorrows; now he places himself in the attitude of expectation. "Peace." The great promise of God. Compare John 14: 27; 16: 33. "Let them not turn again." There is a possibility of falling away and losing thereby peace. "Folly" is equivalent to sin.

10. "Mercy." Literally "loving-kindness." "Mercy—Truth—Righteousness—Peace," have been called the four cardinal virtues of Christ's kingdom. Where these prevail there will be peace, indeed. "Met together," "kissed." Metaphors expressive of perfect harmony.

11. Truth is described as a plant. Compare Isa. 45: 8.

12. The Psalmist now turns from spiritual to temporal blessings. Compare Ps. 67: 6. Outward prosperity was always looked upon as a mark of God's favor. Compare also Paul's words. 1 Tim. 4: 8.

13. "Righteousness shall be both His herald and His attendant." Compare Isa. 41: 2; 58: 8.

126: 1. "Turned again," etc. So unexpected and wonderful was the return, that the Jews "were like unto them that dream." They could not express their joy in sober words.

2. "Laughter"—"singing." The natural expressions of joy. "Singing" is literally "ringing cries"; so also in verse 5 the same word is translated "joy"; the translation "ringing cries" brings out the contrast more vividly. "Among the nations." Those who knew of this great restoration.

3. The Psalmist, as it were, thanks the Gentiles for giving him that expression—"The Lord hath done great things for them"—and takes it up and makes it his own. The facts were evident to all—it was no dream.

4. "Turn again," etc. "Streams" or "channels." The idea is that as the dry channels of the south—that thirsty land—long for water that the streams may be full, so the land of Judea longs for the captives, who are still in Babylon, that the land may be re-peopled. Compare Isa. 49: 18, where a different figure is used.

5. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." This has become a proverb. The seed is often sown accompanied with much labor—sometimes with sacrifice of food; sometimes, where, as in those eastern lands, the fields often lie at a distance from the farmer's home, with danger. Compare Job 1: 14, 15. The harvest is a time of joy. The application is evident. The time of rebuilding the Temple was, in a very true sense, a time of discouragement and even of trouble; but the time would come when it would result in joy.

6. This verse is a repetition, somewhat expanded, of verse 5.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. 'Tis life whereof our nerves are scant,
O life, not death, for which we pant;
More life, and fuller, that I want."
2. The Lord hath done great things for us.
3. "My peace I give unto you."

It is not written, blessed is he that feedeth the poor, but he that consider the poor. A little thought and a little kindness are often worth more than a great deal of money.—Ruskin.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR TENTH MONTH TWENTY-NINTH, 1899.

GIVING, A MEASURE OF LOVE.

Mark 12: 41-44.

(A meeting to consider systematic and proportionate giving.)

Second-day, Tenth mo. 23.—Jewish tithes. Lev. 27: 30-34

Third-day, Tenth mo. 24.—Giving God his own. 1 Chron. 29: 9-21.

Fourth-day, Tenth mo. 25.—Willing offerings. Ex. 35: 20-29; 36: 2-7.

Fifth-day, Tenth mo. 26.—Proportionate giving. Deut. 16: 9-17.

Sixth-day, Tenth mo. 27.—Unstinted giving. John 12: 1-8.

Seventh-day, Tenth mo. 28.—True liberality. 2 Cor. 8: 1-15; 9: 6-15.

How truly that which we see proves what we are. The Jews saw in these rich gifts evidences of their own great piety and generosity, and doubted not but that they were written down to their great credit with God. The disciples seem to have had just then an artistic passion for architecture, and were studying the temple buildings and the great and costly stones that composed them—partly, perhaps, because our Lord had just said that this great house should be left desolate. But Jesus sat down by one of the treasure chests that stood in the court of the women, heard the rattle of the gifts of the rich against the trumpet-shaped mouths of the chests, without comment, until a poor woman came and cast in two mites—all her living. Instantly He is all attention. Here is a new quality in the temple service; here is absolute sincerity, unselfish devotion. She does not even reserve even one of the two mites for herself; "she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living." It was the "all" quality of her gift that outrang in His ears all the clanging of the coins of the rich who gave of their superfluity. Here is a new definition of giving. Quality is more than quantity. The gifts of superfluity are not equal to the sacrifices of poverty. He who gives and does not feel it is not equal to him who gives at a cost felt deeply by himself.

As a matter of fact, the small amounts of the poor and of those in moderate circumstances in the aggregate far excel in amount the gifts of the rich. It is worth while to record with gratitude the gifts of the rich. I passed, a few days since, the immense factories of the Colgate Soap Company, and remembered the oft-told story of the founder, who came to this city a poor boy without a dollar, knowing no trade but that of soap making. Of the first dollar he earned he gave a tenth to the Lord, and continued to do so until he was a rich man. Then he gave two-tenths, then more, until he gave five-tenths. Then, having educated his family and settled them in life, he gave all his income to the Lord and yet prospered more than ever.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, who recently died in this city, is said to have given as much as half his income for religious and benevolent work. But the princely giver, after all, is he who gives of his poverty. A gift is not really a sacrifice until it costs us something to give it.

We are asked this week to consider the question of giving systematically and proportionately. Systematic giving is an improvement over irregular, spasmodic giving, because it results from an abiding conviction and a settled principle of action instead of from a mere emotion. But some men must be moved by emotion if at all, so we need not censure their gifts. It is said of Dr. Franklin that, going one day to hear Whitefield preach, he purposely left his purse at home in order to resist his appeals for his orphanage, but upon hearing him he was so moved that he borrowed money of a friend to give. But it means much more to take your purse in order to give. Still, we must not deceive ourselves here. It is systematic to give two cents a week for missions, but it may not be the least bit Christian. It may only be a two-cent plaster for our consciences that urge us to give much more abundantly. Two cents a week out of hundreds that we keep is not the widow's two mites, nor like it.

Proportionate giving signifies much more. It means a definite part of our income, or, in New Testament words, "Giving as the Lord has prospered us." How much shall it be? Far back in the dawning of the religious history of the chosen race, in the days of Abraham and Jacob, there was a consciousness that at least one-tenth was due to God. We are not told where this conviction came from. It was like a Sabbath law, an early, widespread conviction. The Mosaic law incorporated it, as it did other religious instincts, and perpetuated it throughout Old Testament history. So late as Malachi the same obligation is urged upon the people in the well-known words, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." Now, can it be possible that Christianity, that came to conserve and give vital force to all that was essential in Judaism, and to enlarge and refine the religious consciousness, was ever meant to make less of a virtue than the law did? It is impossible. Christianity may increase the grace of generosity, but it cannot diminish it. The law of the tenth still holds as a part of that gospel which was preached before Moses, and which the law could not disannul, but only sanction. The giving of a tenth is, however, the minimum limit under the Gospel. Below it we dare not descend; beyond it we may go to our utmost capacity. It has been said that we are in danger of limiting giving to a tenth if we urge this plan. Well, just wait until we get everybody up to this amount and see if it results that way. As a matter of fact, the conscientious giving of a tenth has proven a true incentive to larger giving, as is seen in the case of William Colgate, not to mention many others. It is also said that we are bringing Friends back to the old tithe system against which they so vigorously protested in early days. But, it should be answered, that was a forced system for the maintenance of a formal ministry by law, whose preaching and practice were alike odious to spiritual men. It was not the amount given, but the method and the use of it that was objectionable. Let us then urge forward the Tenth Legion, first, because the method has a divine sanction; second, because it will vastly increase the total amount given; third, because the necessities of to-day demand it; fourth, because it is a good check upon covetousness; fifth, because all can safely practice it, and such practice will tend to economy with most people, and sixth, because it is an equitable working basis for a minimum beyond which we should encourage the rich by a multitude of Scriptural examples.

THE TENTH LEGION.

The topic for this week gives a fresh opportunity to call attention to this movement, which first originated among Friends' Endeavor Societies under the name of the Friends' Tithing League. Copies of the pledge have been sent to scores of the societies, and the total enrollment of Endeavorers among Friends has reached about seven hundred, not including those who have enrolled since last July. This number includes, also, those who have sent their names direct to the headquarters of the United Society at Boston.

It will be a capital plan for you to prepare pledges to be used at the prayer meeting when this topic is considered. Any who wish them can obtain them of the editor of this department by sending for them. Please enclose two-cent stamp for each twenty-five or fraction thereof for postage.

Missionary committees should make a vigorous campaign on this subject. One of the best things you can do is to furnish every member of the society with literature on the subject of giving. The "Christian Endeavor World" recently called our attention to the fact that the best catalogue of literature on Christian beneficence is the one issued by our own Endeavorers, Mrs. Flora P. Mills, of Knightstown, Indiana. The price of this catalogue is four cents, and the literature it recommends can also be procured of Mrs. Mills. It is worth while to act promptly in this matter.

THE USES OF OUR ORGANIZATION.

There is probably no denomination interested in Christian Endeavor that has a more thorough Endeavor organization than the Friends. Every yearly meeting has its Union and every such Union has its president and secretary and vice-president, or other officer representing each quarterly meeting. The International Union can thus come quickly in touch with every society, provided secretaries do their duty. But with all this machinery, two yearly meeting Unions failed to report last year, thus defeating one of the most practical ends of our organization. But that all the rest did report is a matter for congratulation, and it is more conducive to good health to rejoice over successes than to worry over failures.

Now, it is hoped that we can use this organization to more fully promote the ends of the International Union this year. One of these ends is to promote closer fellowship among young Friends. Fellowship comes from knowledge of each other. How can we know about each other if we never say anything? Our Secretary, Myrtle Lightner, is trying to secure from all yearly meeting secretaries quarterly reports of Endeavor work in their limits. These will be published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, so that everybody can tell what is going on.

We are also anxious to extend our work to every Friends' meeting in the world. If these yearly meeting or quarterly meeting secretaries will report to me the names of meetings where there are no Endeavor Societies, and the name of some responsible person in such meeting likely to be interested in Endeavor work, I will see that he is furnished with a personal letter and literature necessary for organization. Let me hear from you promptly.

"Christian Missions and Social Progress." Vol. II. By James S. Dennis. 8vo, pp. 486. Price $2.50. Fleming H. Revell & Co., New York and Chicago. A careful reading of this book justifies all that has been said of it in these columns previously by way of announcement. This volume contains Lectures V. and VI., in continuation of the course of which the first volume gave us the first four, and a third volume is to follow, completing Lecture VI. and giving complete statistical tables of all features of the vast missionary movement of the century. Lecture V. in this volume is a masterly survey of "The Dawn of the Sociological Era in Missions." Here is the massing on a large scale of the results of modern missions—not alone in the regeneration of the spiritual life of the individual, but also in the readjustment of all his relations in accordance with the changed life. The creation of a new public opinion in heathen lands, the establishment and promotion of education, the awakening of the philanthropic spirit, the introduction of new national ideals and higher conceptions of government—in fact, all that constitutes a new social order is considered with a breadth of view and conclusiveness of evidence drawn from many sources never possible until the present time. Lecture VI. continues the argument from the consideration of the changed individual life in the reformation from evil habits, higher standards of personal purity, industry, frugality, humility and cultivation of Christian virtues to the development of the family life, the elevation of woman, the sacredness of child life, and much more that constitutes what we call Christian civilization. One of the most interesting features of the book is the light it throws on the incidental results of Christian missions in the case of those who themselves have not accepted the Christian faith; and, indeed, these results are to be reckoned as one of the most practical evidences of the value of missionary effort. Those who think of missionary work only as an effort to save here and there a soul out of the sinking mass of heathenism will find much in this volume to broaden their conception of missions and of the work of missionaries in foreign lands.

GEORGE ADAM SMITH AND OTHERS.

BY WM. C. LADD.

In THE AMERICAN FRIEND for Tenth month 5th there appeared an article entitled "George Adam Smith and Dr. Cadman at Northfield," by J. Walter Malone. We honor the writer's single-hearted devotion to our Lord Jesus Christ. On this account we regret all the more that, as we suppose, through a want of personal knowledge of the class of men he attempts to describe, he has unwittingly done a serious injustice to fellow Christians.

Our object in writing is the same as his, viz: that, avoiding argument as far as possible, we may set at least one of the men referred to before the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in what seems to us his true light.

Of Dr. Cadman we do not presume to speak, having no knowledge of him or of his writings. But of George Adam Smith we feel that we can properly speak, having listened to addresses from him upon eight different occasions in this country and in England, and also having some acquaintance with all his important books.

The following quotations from Prof. Smith's writings will show his position with regard to the main points mentioned by J. Walter Malone:

1. J. Walter Malone: "Prof. Smith denies all inspiration to the prophets."

Prof. Smith: "They (the prophets) spake neither at the bidding of angels, nor like heathen prophets in trance or ecstasy, but as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." ("The Book of the Twelve Prophets," Vol. 2, page 521.)

"To lay stress on the moral meaning of the prophet's vision is not to grudge, but to emphasize, its inspiration by God. Of that inspiration Isaiah was himself assured. It was God's Spirit that enabled him to see thus keenly." ("The Book of Isaiah," Vol. 1, p. 24.)

2. J. Walter Malone: "He denies, too, all direct revelation of God through Israel to the world."

Prof. Smith: "... in choosing, therefore, a single nation to reveal Himself by, God was but employing the means best adapted for His purpose."

"No one can miss the force of these words (Is. 41: 8ff). They are the assurance of Israel's miraculous survival, not because he is God's favorite, but because he is God's servant, with a unique work in the world. ... Now for this service Israel was equipped by two great experiences. These were Redemption and Revelation." ("Isaiah," Vol. 2, pp. 239, 245.)

3. J. Walter Malone: "According to this teaching Jesus Christ fulfilled no prophecy ... and there was no supernatural Christ to be our Saviour."

Prof. Smith: "... we at once assert what none but prejudiced Jews have ever denied, that this great prophecy, known as the fifty-third of Isaiah, was fulfilled in One Person, Jesus of Nazareth ..." (Isaiah, Vol. 2, p. 267.)

"Almighty and most merciful God, who has sent this book (Isaiah) to be the revelation of Thy great love to man, and of Thy power and will to save him, grant that our study of it may not have been in vain by the callousness or carelessness of our hearts, but that by it we may be confirmed in penitence, lifted to hope, made strong for service, and above all filled with the true knowledge of Thee and of Thy Son Jesus Christ. (Concluding sentence in the Commentary on Isaiah.)

"In history Jesus Christ has fulfilled this commission . . . He realized the ideal of the prophet-people. He sacrificed himself and made atonement for the sins of men." (Isaiah, Vol. 2, p. 290.)

We do not wish to assert that J. Walter Malone or any one of us would agree with every opinion of George Adam Smith in regard to the historical and literary explanation of the Old Testament, but to us it is very plain that a man who writes in the fashion illustrated by the passages given above, ought not to be spoken of as a holder of "infidel doctrine." In listening to lectures by Prof. Smith, however new some of the explanations given of parts of the Old Testament may have been to us, it was evident that a devout man of God, a sincere follower of Christ, was speaking. It has been our privilege to be present upon the two occasions when Prof. Smith conducted the morning devotional exercises at Haverford College. Both by his prayers and his talks to the students he greatly impressed all who heard him with his deep spirituality and his remarkable power as a preacher of righteousness.

Turning now to another phase of the subject, we again quote from J. Walter Malone: . . . "we have never seen, nor have we ever heard, of a preacher who was a higher critic and believed this infidel doctrine (for it is nothing else) that held revivals or had souls born into the kingdom under his ministry. They are not doing that kind of work, but, as Mr. Moody said in New York, a few days since, 'These preachers are doing the devil's work.'"

First of all, what is a higher critic? What is higher criticism? We quote from an editorial note in the "Sunday School Times" of July 15th, 1899:

"What we call a thing is one thing; what a thing is is another thing. The two things are sometimes very different. 'Heresy,' and 'Orthodoxy,' and 'Old School,' and 'New School,' and 'Evangelical,' are terms with very different meanings in different regions, and they have different measures of approval or of condemnation among different classes of Christian believers. This is to be borne in mind in giving a proper answer to any question concerning the measure of religious belief, or of doubt, implied in many a popular religious view. An earnest believer writes from Nebraska, with reference to such a matter, as follows:

"Will you be so kind as to answer the following question through 'The Sunday School Times'? What is the higher criticism of the Scriptures?"

"What is called 'Higher Criticism,' or 'Literary Criticism,' or 'Historical Criticism,' seeks information as to the date and origin and authorship of the text of the several books of Scripture, through an examination of the contents and of outside evidence as well . . . Thus considered, 'Higher Criticism' is a branch of true Biblical criticism that is recognized by all thorough Bible scholars. . . ."

We might add to the above that higher criticism seeks information as to the place of each book of the Bible in history, its significance and the purpose the author had in view in writing it. Higher criticism is not, therefore, a "doctrine," but a method of study.

"Properly speaking, the process ought not to be identified with any body of results. It is the same process whether it lead to results which would be called 'conservative' or to those which might be termed 'radical.'"

Now can a higher critic, or one who accepts the main results of higher criticism, be fervently evangelical? Is the adoption of these views inconsistent with a vigorous spiritual life? Do such men engage in the work of saving souls?

The writer of this article once heard Dr. Robert F. Horton, a pronounced higher critic, say before a body of seven hundred English Friends, that it was only after the careful study and acceptance of the results of modern Biblical scholarship that he became conscious in his own experience of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Dr. Horton is the pastor of one of the largest non-conformist congregations in England, and is engaged in many lines of practical religious work.

Prof. Edward L. Curtis, of Chicago, a well-known higher critic, has been spoken of as "a man as prominent for successful mission work in the Chicago slums as for his scholarship."

Henry Drummond was considered one of the most successful evangelists of our century. He accepted the new views of Biblical criticism and "often said that the critical movement had removed very many difficulties in the Old Testament which once puzzled him, and had set him free for the fuller appreciation of its divine contents." (G. A. Smiths "Life of Henry Drummond," p. 142.)

The adoption of these views in no way interfered with the exercise of his remarkable evangelistic gift. For it was after this time that he inaugurated a revival among students, which became world-wide. Moody is reported to have said of Drummond that he was the most Christlike man he ever knew. Others who knew him equally well have borne the same testimony.

It is a noteworthy fact that Dr. Briggs, who stands for all that is extreme in higher criticism, when connected with the pro-Cathedral of New York, requested to be assigned to work in the slums of that city.

Dr. Alexander Bruce, of Scotland, recently deceased, was one of the most famous of the older members of the new school of Bible critics. The writer had the privilege of hearing Dr. Bruce preach in a London church. The impression gained from an acquaintance with his writings was there deepened, that here was a devout scholar of profound spirituality. One of his close friends, in an article in the October number of the "Expository Times" for 1899, says of him: "To live with Dr. Bruce was to live under the power of the mind of Christ. Let me cite two things in proof. Any one who sat near his desk might have seen a line of single letters written boldly on a slip before him. What were they? O s. o. T. l. a. T. t. ('O send out Thy light and Thy truth') was a favorite line. His custom was to rise early, and as he began his work he wrote out some such appeal to God, and as the hours passed he lifted his eyes and murmured his prayer for help. A man, he once said, was not Christ's, who did not pray without ceasing.

When I saw him on his dying bed, and death had left on him only the beautiful, he spoke of the Kingdom of God. It has been said that he was somewhat hopeless of the outlook. Nothing could be further from the truth. For as he spoke of his old students, calling a long roll of names dear to him, his face brightened as he heard of their fidelity, and zeal, and joy in the service, and he said; 'I have no doubt changes are coming which you younger men must unflinchingly face, new problems are being stated which may trouble your spirits, but He has not left Himself without witness,—Jesus shall reign.'

Dr. Sanday, of Oxford, is another higher critic of the type of Dr. Bruce.

The Society of Friends is not without striking examples of men who feel that they have been helped in their religious experience by the higher critics.

Some of us recently heard a minister of our Society, John Wilhelm Rowntree, of England, make the following statement in a gathering of Friends: "I shall never forget the three years of dreary wandering in the wilderness, and how I felt after I came out of that wilderness of agnosticism and unbelief. It was the work of a higher critic, W. Robertson Smith's "The Old Testament in the Jewish Church," which first made me think along certain lines and ultimately led me back to the loving fold of the Lord Jesus Christ."

In closing, we would urge that whether we agree or not with the results of modern Biblical criticism, we should once for all disabuse ourselves of the idea that it is in the hands of evil and unbelieving men. On the contrary, we should thank God that, with few exceptions, the great English and American scholars of both the Old and New Testaments, though fallible men like ourselves, are devout Christians, who pursue their studies in the fear of God, and whose one desire is that the truth may be discovered.

The fundamentals of our faith still remain and must always remain the same. Points of view differ and always will differ. The essential thing is to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as our personal Saviour, and to engage zealously in His service.

Though the star should be quenched in a moment forever, it is good that the star should shine its brightest to the very last. This is the instinct of the brave and healthy heart that is faithful to its truest impulses.—Phillips Brooks.

The offered rest is not for idlers. It is the weary and the heavy laden who are asked to come. For idleness there can be no rest because there is no contrast. Christ's gift is never freedom from all work, but freedom in that work which God has given us to do.

News from the Field.

At the time of going to press we have not received the report of Kansas Yearly Meeting from our correspondent. The full report will therefore be delayed until next week.

We have received an interesting and attractive booklet, giving a brief sketch of the lives of Jacob and Deborah Wilets, two well-known teachers in Dutchess County, New York. The booklet contains pictures of these two Friends.

Joshua L. Bailey, of Philadelphia, attended Kansas Yearly Meeting at Wichita. He has been studying the temperance situation in the State of Kansas.

F. H. King, of Carmel, Indiana, writes as follows of the editorial, "Heroes and Heroes":

"Your article on 'Heroes and Heroes' is so in accord with what has been impressed on my mind many times during the past year that I cannot refrain from expressing my unqualified approval of it. We laud the military heroes, but forget the heroes in civil affairs and missionary enterprises. Truly 'We preach peace and practice war.' We resent the dove and clothe the eagle with all the armor of battle. Civil achievements are overshadowed by military displays. We say by this display to our youth, quit your civil pursuits and learn war, for there alone is honor and glory."

The present session of Kansas Yearly Meeting is the twenty-ninth since its establishment, it having been established in 1872. There are fifteen quarterly meetings in the yearly meeting, with the prospect of the establishment of a new one in the near future.

Calvin C. Kessinger and wife, of Leavenworth, Kansas, have been "liberated" by the yearly meeting to visit Egypt and the Holy Land and attend London Yearly Meeting.

The Oklahoma Friends' tent was pitched at Wichita during the recent yearly meeting for the accommodation of the Friends from Stella Quarterly Meeting.

Timothy B. Hussey, of North Berwick, Maine, is to give an address at Haverford, Pa., on the evening of the 20th. His subject will be Friends' mission work in Palestine.

John H. Dillingham, editor of "The Friend," is living at Haverford, Pa., this autumn and winter.

Francis Smith, of Plymouth, England, is on a religious visit in this country. He was at Twelfth Street and Haverford Meetings last week.

President Rosenberger, of Penn College, attended Kansas Yearly Meeting, and spoke at the educational session.

Friends have a new meeting house at Leoni Malwa, India, which holds from four to five hundred persons. A girls' school joins the meeting house.

Joseph Taylor, who has been for many years a missionary in India, expects to attend the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, in New York, next spring, as representative of F. F. M. A. He writes that the workers in India "greatly appreciate THE AMERICAN FRIEND." There is the sad prospect of another famine in India this winter.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Albion, Iowa.—The Educational Association of Bangor and Honey Creek Quarterly Meetings expects to meet in an Educational Conference at Stanford, near Union. The first session, on the evening of the 27th of Tenth month, will be given to an address by President Rosenberger, of Penn College. The two sessions of the next day will be devoted to papers, discussions, etc. It is believed that the exercises will be interesting and helpful. Educators within reach, also young people and parents, are urged to attend and help this Conference to fulfil its mission.

MARY H. LEWIS, President.

Spring Bank Quarterly Meeting has just been held at Highland, Boyd County, Nebraska. All the monthly meetings were well represented but one.

Abigail Fry, of Iowa, was present with a minute from the Missionary Board of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Twenty-three persons from Spring Bank traveled 130 miles to attend the quarterly meeting.

Samuel Packwood, of Kema Monthly Meeting, was appointed assistant superintendent.

The next session of the quarterly meeting will be held at Kema, Knox County, Nebraska.

Alden Knight has just been located as pastor at Spring Bank and Elk Valley.

F. W. CHASE.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Oklahoma, Kansas.—Robert W. Hodson and family are now located at Blackburn. He preaches and superintends the Sabbath school and spends his time in visiting the people in their homes. He and his wife are to take charge of the town day school, which commenced Tenth month 9th.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Samantha, Ohio.—The next session of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting of Friends will be held at Walnut Creek, near New Martinsburg, Fayette County, Ohio, on the 27th, 28th and 29th of this month.

Persons coming by railroad will leave the cars at East Monroe, five miles west of Greenfield, B. & O. S. W. R. R.

Friends of Walnut Creek will meet all persons at station if they are notified. Send a card to Abner Todhunter, New Martinsburg, Fayette County, Ohio.

On behalf of Quarterly Meeting,

ARTHUR L. CAREY, Clerk.

Birth.

HODSON.—To Robert W. and Lena J. Hodson, a son, Ninth month 10th, 1899.

Died.

BEDELL.—Egbert S. Bedell, a member of Nine Partners' Quarterly Meeting, died at his home at Clinton Corners, N. Y., Ninth month 6th, 1899, in the 74th year of his age. He was a lifelong member with Friends, and for many years an Elder. It was he who started the first Sabbath school ever held at Clinton Corners.

BUTLER.—Died at her home, Charlottesville, Indiana, on the 10th of Eighth month, 1899, Anna H., daughter of Edward and Mary M. Butler (the former deceased), a member of Walnut Ridge Monthly Meeting of Friends. She bore a long and tedious illness with Christian patience and cheerfulness. She had no fear of death, but said, "It is only the gateway to life."

CROW.—Hattie Edgerton Crow, daughter of W. H. and Mary A. Edgerton, and wife of Isaac Crow, Ninth month 27th, 1899, in the 23d year of her age. She was a faithful and devoted Christian and a member of Tremont Meeting, North Carolina.

HADLEY.—Tacy Hadley (formerly Burgess), widow of Job Hadley, of Hendricks County, Ind., died Eighth month 26th, 1899, at the home of her nephew, in Ohio, in her 88th year. She was born in Virginia and moved to Ohio and opened a school in a log house in 1836. She was a birth member and a lifelong Friend. After the government declared the slaves of the South contraband of war, and all who could do so got away from the South, large numbers of them gathered at Cairo, in the southern part of Illinois. Job and Tacy, belonging to the class known as abolitionists, conceived the idea of going to Cairo to help the colored refugees there in every way they could, and having called upon Governor Morton, at Indianapolis, received a recommendation for their services for the Christianization and education of the colored refugees of the army. With that they went to Cairo and called upon General Tuttle, who was in command at that point, and stated their case to him, and he replied, "You can go on and relieve the suffering, but a negro cannot learn." The result of the efforts made proved very different. They instituted sanitary regulations among the colored people, had them washed and clothed, and other measures for health instituted. At the time Tacy and Job arrived at Cairo large numbers were sick and many dying daily. But after the sanitary arrangements were carried out the health rapidly improved, and Tacy started a school for them. While the arrangements were being made for the school Job and Tacy took a trip down to Memphis, Tennessee, to look into the condition of the slaves there, and to report to the Benevolent Society the conditions at Memphis and other army hospitals and camps of colored refugees. On their return from Memphis they found the school attended by about one hundred pupils of all shades of color, ages and sizes.

HAMMOND.—Frank Branson Hammond departed this life at the home of his parents, Thomas and Catharine Hammond, in Fairmount, Ind., Ninth month 2d, 1896, at the age of 28 years, 9 months and 24 days. Deceased was born in Henry County, Ind., Eleventh month 8th, 1870, and removed to Grant County with his parents in 1885. He was converted a few years ago during a series of meetings and has since been active in his Christian duties.

HENSLEY.—Mary Ellen Hensler, daughter of James and Anna M. Hirst, and wife of William J. Hensler, died in California, Ninth month 17th, 1899, aged 38 years. She was a member of Alamitos Meeting, and her life was marked by faith, devotion and kindness.

HILL.—Squire Walter Hill died at his home in Toronto, Canada, Eighth month 9th, 1899, aged 76 years. He was a lifelong and true Friend, holding the station of Elder. He was a benevolent man, and grew more and more Christlike as he neared his end.

JONES.—Jane Jones, daughter of Thomas and Mary Puckett, and wife of Samuel Jones, departed this life Eighth month 14th, 1894, aged 70 years, 10 months and 3 days.

In the year 1850 she felt that her Lord and Master was calling her to the work of the ministry. She did not reason with flesh and blood but at once entered the harvest field of souls. In less than one year after this she was duly recognized by the church, they recorded her as a minister of the gospel. She labored faithfully in her own home meeting for a while, then from place to place, as the Lord would indicate; many were the trials and obstacles to overcome in those early days, but through them all she found Him ever faithful who said, "Lo, I am with you always."

She was one of the first ministers laboring in the great revival work of the Friends, her labors extending over Indiana, Ohio, Western, Baltimore, North Carolina, New York, Kansas, and Iowa Yearly Meetings. Her work and labor of love proved a blessing to many, who, no doubt, were waiting at the gateway to welcome the battle-scarred veteran of the Cross. She leaves behind to mourn, a husband, three sons, four daughters and many relatives and friends.

LEWIS.—Beebie W. Lewis, wife of Caleb H. Lewis and daughter of John Green, late of Westland, Ohio, died at her home in Van Wert, Ohio, Ninth month 1st, 1899, in her 55th year. She was a birthright member with Friends, a devoted Christian from her girlhood days. She was injured in her back when about a year old and was a sufferer all her life. Restricted in her privileges and duties in life, she gave herself unreservedly to her Master's work of ministering to others, caring for her father and mother in their old age and when they were helpless. Always bright and cheery and comforting others with the comfort wherewith she herself was comforted of God. She was loved by all that knew her and to her friends is left the memory of the white life she lived.

MOON.—Esther Moon, daughter of Gideon and Edith Mills, and widow of Daniel R. Moon, passed peacefully away at the home of her daughter, near Portland, Ind., Eighth month 22d, 1899, in the 87th year of her age. She was a birthright member and was converted to Christ at the age of twelve, and enjoyed a long and happy Christian life.

NIXON.—At her home in Fairmount, Grant County, Ind., Ninth month, 7th, 1899, Narcissa Mendenhall Nixon quietly passed into rest, aged 82 years, 9 months and 20 days. Her sickness, which was of short duration, was borne with much patience. She was a life-long member with Friends and was a woman of strong faith in Christ, devoted to her church and faithful in W. C. T. U. work.

PARRY.—On Fourth month 2d, 1899, Hannah Parry, daughter of the late Robert and Sally Parry, in the 76th year of her age. She was one of the Lord's dear children, bound to Him by the tie of adoring love and unwavering faith.

RAIFORD.—Pattie A. Raiford, Ninth month 20th, 1899, in the 23d year of her age. She was a member of Corinth Meeting, Virginia. She was greatly beloved and very helpful in her life and service.

SCHOOLEY.—Dilworth Schooley fell asleep in Jesus at Springdale, Iowa, Ninth month 10th, 1899, aged seventy-six years. His wife survives him. He was an early settler at Springdale and has been an earnest and very helpful member and elder of the monthly meeting. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

STANLEY.—Phebe Stanley was born at New Garden, Guilford County, N. C., Seventh month 4th, 1806, died Eighth month 2d, 1899, in the ninety-fourth year of her age. She had been a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and had spent much of her time in the limits of North Carolina, Ohio, Indiana, Western and Kansas Yearly Meetings. The last few months of her life were spent at Hatfield, Arkansas, with her daughter, Lida A. Moon. Here she fought the last battle and gained the last victory.

To those who knew her best the character of this dear aged mother seemed truly beautiful, as if—the dross all purged away—heaven had indeed come to her while here. Surely her's had been the overcoming life—the life that has much to contend with, and yet comes out victorious.

TAYLOR.—Agnes, daughter of Henry L. and Francina Taylor, died at the home of her parents, near Walnut Corner, Jay County, Ind., Eighth month 26th, 1899, aged 19 years. Her parents joined the Friends at Walnut Corner soon after the opening of a meeting there. Agnes never became a member, but was a diligent attendant, and had been for quite a while secretary of the Bible school. She is greatly missed in the neighborhood, church and family, all of whom have assurance that she has made a happy exchange.

WADDELL.—Mary Waddell died at her home, near Carmel, Ind., Seventh month 19th, 1899, aged 75 years. She became a Christian early in life, ever manifesting a Christian spirit in her everyday walks, and when death came she was found waiting and watching.

WALLACE.—Alice M. Wallace, wife of Hudson Wallace, of Van Wert, O., died Ninth month 3d, 1899, in the 43d year of her age. She and her family spent most of the last year in California for her health, returning about six weeks before her death. She was a faithful member of the church, a devoted wife, a loving mother, a true friend. Her clear testimony of present salvation often electrified the public congregation, but she is promoted to a higher sphere of life.

WILLMOTT.—At her home, Lake Kerr, Florida, on Tenth month 7th, 1899, Eleanor Willmott, aged 18 years (of class 1900, Westtown Boarding School), eldest daughter of the late Robert Kingston Willmott, formerly of Congresbury, Somerset, England.

WING.—Benjamin Wing, a highly esteemed citizen of Brighton, Mass., and member of Rochester Meeting, passed away after a brief illness. He was a man of prominence and lived a pure and exemplary life.

News and Events.

War in South Africa, which had been inevitable for weeks, has at last begun in earnest. President Kruger forced the issue last week by sending an ultimatum to the English government, which severed every hope of a peaceful settlement. The ultimatum was to the effect that British troops then threatening the Transvaal frontier be withdrawn, and that other British troops, which have been sent to South Africa since June 1st, be removed, the Boers, meanwhile, to pledge themselves not to invade British territory pending peaceful negotiations for a settlement between the two countries. An "immediate and affirmative answer" was requested to be given not later than 5 o'clock, p.m., on the 11th inst. If a satisfactory answer should not be received the action of the English government would be considered a declaration of war. There could be but one result. England declined to discuss the ultimatum. The Boers began the campaign by frontier advances. Two British armored trains, carrying troops and telegraph operators, were seized and destroyed. According to despatches the Boers have made several unsuccessful attempts to seize Mafeking. Their forces have occupied Newcastle, and at the present writing they are attacking the city of Kimberley. These two towns are on the borderland of the Transvaal and Orange Free State respectively, and are of considerable strategic value. It is very evident that while the war has thus far not advanced materially, the English must largely play a defensive part until the additional forces now on the way shall arrive on the scene of action. A story has been published to the effect that the Boers have offered a prize of $25,000 for the capture of Cecil Rhodes, dead or alive.

The census of Cuba is now being taken. The first step was made on the 16th. The scope of the census includes statistics of population, agriculture and literacy. Statistics of manufactures, wealth and other subjects will not be gathered, since the time given will not allow an elaborate inquiry. It is hoped to confine the census to the essential facts that will be of service to Congress and the Cubans themselves in dealing with pressing problems, and it is the intention of the war department to have the results tabulated, so that they may be placed in the hands of Congressmen early in the next session. The last Spanish census, taken in 1887, gave the population as 1,631,687, of which 65 per cent. were white. Estimates by army officers connected with the administration of affairs in Cuba since the war place the total population at about 1,200,000. It is supposed that there are nearly 650,000 white natives, 400,000 black and colored natives, 150,000 Spanish and other whites not natives. The result of the new census will be awaited with much interest.

The campaign in the Philippines was marked last week by considerable activity on the part of the Americans south of Manila. General Schwan's column, on the 10th, advanced upon and entered San Francisco de Malabon, the Filipino stronghold in Cavite province. On the 11th the Filipinos were driven from their trenches south of the city, with heavy loss in killed, wounded and captured. General Schwan then returned to Malabon, afterwards advancing upon Perez des Marinos, south of Imus. This place was promptly deserted by the enemy upon the Americans' approach, only the women and children remaining in the city. From Marinos Schwan started for Bacoar, which he reached after an exhausting march. General Otis cables that this movement south of Manila was very successful, inflicting heavy loss on the insurgents, their casualties being 200 killed and 400 wounded. Nevertheless, he further states that there was no intention to hold the territory seized and occupied. The Americans in each case withdrew almost as soon as the town had been occupied, the Filipinos quickly returning to take possession again.

The International Commercial Congress, at the National Export Exposition, in this city, opened on the 12th with about 400 delegates present. The ablest representatives of trade and commerce of every nation in the world were present. The address of welcome was delivered by Assistant Secretary of State David J. Hill, who spoke in behalf of the United States Government. The purpose of the Congress, as well as that of the Exposition, is to promote trade expansion.

NOTES.—The last of the American forces are expected to arrive in Manila early in December. The combined military and naval forces in the islands will then aggregate 70,000 men, and forty-five men-of-war.—The Manila press censorship has been abolished. It ceased to exist on the 9th of September, but no announcement of the fact was made until last week.—Reports state that President Andrade, of Venezuela, has been betrayed, and that the insurgents will be allowed to march upon Caracas without a battle.—The corner-stone of the new Federal Building in Chicago was laid by President McKinley on the 9th.—Five unsuccessful attempts were made by the Shamrock and Columbia to sail the yacht races before there was sufficient wind to cover the course in the prescribed time. The first race to be counted, on the 16th, was won by the Columbia by one mile.

HE MERELY DIDN'T THINK.

Used to let his poor old mother go and carry in the wood,
 She was just a packhorse fer him, but he never understood;
 Never thought of bringin' water from the spring down by the lane
 Or of helpin' her to gether in the clos' before the rain;
 Let her keep a-waitin' on him, though her back was achin' so—
 'Twasn't 'cause he didn't love her—he just didn't think, you know.

Then he went away and married—left her livin' there alone—
 'Cause his wife she didn't want her—she had people of her own—
 And he carried in the kindlin' and he built the fires, too,
 And, to tell the truth, I dunno what there was he didn't do—
 Had to 'hustle now, I tell you! Got to thinkin', too, at last
 That he might of been a little mite more thoughtful in the past.

After while the weary mother put her burdens all away,
 And he went and heard the preacher praise the poor old soul one day,
 And I stood and looked down at her when they pushed the lid aside—
 Poor old hands! I didn't wonder that her boy set there and cried
 Just as if he couldn't bear it—just as if his heart'd break—
 He had kind of got to seein' what she'd suffered fer his sake.

There's a lot of kinds of sinnin' that the good book tells about—
 Sins concernin' which a body needn't ever be in doubt,

BREAKFAST ON DRINK.

Coffee Makes Many Dyspeptics.

"Coffee and I had quite a tussle. Two years ago I was advised by the doctor to quit the use of coffee, for I had a chronic case of dyspepsia and serious nervous troubles, which did not yield to treatment. I was so addicted to coffee that it seemed an impossibility to quit, but when I was put on Postum Cereal Food Coffee, there was no trouble in making the change, and to-day I am a well woman.

"One of the lady teachers in our public schools was sick and nervous. Frequently the only thing she took for breakfast was a cup of coffee; I urged her to try leaving off coffee and use Postum instead. We went so far as to send her a sample from my box and give her directions. She now uses nothing but Postum Food Coffee and told me a short time ago that she was perfectly well.

"It is easy to make good Postum once a person becomes accustomed to it. I put four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water and put the Postum in thin muslin bags, drop the bag into the water, and after it comes up to a boil see that from that time on it boils fifteen or twenty minutes, then use good cream and you have a drink that would be relished by the Queen." Mrs. Lizzie Whitaker, Kidder, Mo. Postum is sold by all first-class grocers at 15 and 25 cents per package.

 Will be held to strict account fer when he goes acrost the brink—

GROWING OLD.

Softly, O softly, thy years have swept by thee,
 Touched thee but lightly, with tenderest care;
 Sorrow and death they have often brought nigh thee;
 Yet they have left thee but beauty to wear.

Growing old gracefully,
 Gracefully fair.

Hearts at the sound of thy coming are lightened,
 Ready and willing thy hand to relieve;
 Many a face at thy kind word is brightened;
 "It is more blessed to give than receive."
 Growing old gracefully,
 Gracefully fair.

Eyes that grow dim to the earth and its glory
 Have a sweet recompense youth cannot know;
 Ears that grow dull to the world and its story
 Drink in the songs that from Paradise flow.

Growing old gracefully,
 Purer than snow.
 —"The Watchman."

WHAT CHRIST SAID.

I said, "Let me walk in the fields."
 He said, "No, walk in the town."
 I said, "There are no flowers there."
 He said, "No flowers, but a crown."

I said, "But the skies are black;
 There is nothing but noise and din."
 And He wept as He sent me back;
 "There is more," He said; "there is sin."

I said, "But the air is thick,
 And fogs are veiling the sun."
 He answered, "Yet souls are sick,
 And souls in the dark undone."

I said, "I shall miss the light,
 And friends will miss me, they say."
 He answered, "Choose to-night
 If I am to miss you, or they."

I pleaded for time to be given.
 He said, "Is it hard to decide?
 It will not seem hard in heaven
 To have followed the steps of your Guide."

THE CHRISTIAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

Co-operates with the CIVIL AUTHORITIES in enforcing the laws, and with the evangelical CHURCHES in extending the influences of the GOSPEL.

The Chinese Mission at No. 929 Race Street, near a heathen temple, is under the auspices of The Christian League, and seeks to promote the social, moral and spiritual welfare of these strangers in our midst, and invites the co-operation of Christian men and women in this hitherto neglected work.

The Christian League is greatly in need of financial aid, and contributions sent to the Treasurer, Mr. JOHN H. CONVERSE, 500 N. BROAD STREET (Baldwin Locomotive Works), will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged.

FLATTERING TITLES.

Sometimes the higher men get up the less there seems to be of them, and often much lauded rabbis and doctors are great only in name.

Some one tells a story of traveling in the South a few years after the war. He got to talking to a farmer in some little town who was employing a considerable number of men at his haying. The farmer told him that most of them were old Confederate soldiers.

"You see over there where those four men are working?" asked he. "Well, all of 'em fought in the war. One of 'em was a private, one of 'em was a corporal, one was a major, and that man 'way over in the corner was a colonel.

"Are they good men?" asked the gentleman.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

The American Friend is a weekly paper, containing twenty-four pages. The subscription price is one dollar and a half a year, payable in advance.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money Order, payable to the order of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Cash should be sent only in Registered Letter.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.00 for postage.

Change of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent two weeks before the change is to take effect.

Letters should be addressed:

THE AMERICAN FRIEND,

718 Arch Street Philadelphia

"Well," said the farmer, "that private's a first-class man, and the corporal's pretty good too."

"But how about the major and the colonel?"

"The major's so so," said the farmer.

"But the colonel?"

"Well, I don't want to say nothing against any man who was a colonel in the war," said the farmer, "but I've made up my mind I won't hire no brigadier-generals."

A SURVIVOR OF BROOK FARM.

Anna Blackwell, the first English woman to receive the degree of M.D., is one of the few survivors of the Brook Farm establishment made famous by Hawthorne, Dana and their fellow-enthusiasts:

"In 1842," says Mrs. Blackwell, "there were about one hundred of us at Brook Farm. Hawthorne frequently visited, but never resided there.

"Foremost of our Phalansterian family were Mr. Charles Dana and Mr. Ripley, scholar and preacher, both eminent men and both accompanied by their wives.

"Mr. Dana used to get up at 5 o'clock a.m. and milk the cows; Mrs. Ripley superintended the laundry, all domestic and industrial work being, of course, accomplished on the premises. We had among us an amateur shoemaker, also a carpenter, baker, etc., every branch of labor being shared by both sexes."

The daily work was arranged in groups, every worker choosing that which suited him best. Dish-washing was the favorite, Mrs. Blackwell tells us, and as the prettiest girls were in that group, there was a struggle among the men to enter the ranks. She herself belonged to several groups, each occupying but a short period daily. "Being fond of babies," she continues, "for one hour a day I took care of all the infants." We cannot help but wonder who took care of them at night, and how many there were, and if the crying of one ever started the others.

No servants were kept, but the usual order was reversed, waiters and cooks eating first, and being waited upon, then serving the others.

"All arrangements were on a scale of primitive simplicity, our food consisting chiefly of breadstuffs, dairy produce, fruit and vegetables. The evenings were given up to recreation, lectures, dancing, music, and so on. One of our number, Mr. Dwight, was an accomplished musician. We all put on our best clothes when work was done."

Historians have failed to tell us why the Brook Farm project passed into oblivion, but Mrs. Blackwell lets the real secret out: "The ladies had only one bonnet between them, and when any of us wanted to catch the Boston stage coach each by turn utilized the bonnet."

Imagine all shapes, sizes and complexions being forced to abide by such a decision; just think of the inward squirming when the big woman with fresh complexion appeared in the bonnet that really belonged to the thin, fallow one. Or imagine the latter disappearing in a great scoop that really should have framed her larger sister's face. The masculine mind may well stand aghast at such a prospect, while the feminine mind of to-day simply would not tolerate such a thing; and we are confident her predecessors raised such private rebellion that their husbands gladly abandoned the road they had marked out. For the "old" woman was just like the "new." She understood thoroughly that it is the easiest thing in the world to persuade a man to do what you want him to do, if you just set about it in the right way.

GREAT TRUTHS.

Great truths are portions of the soul of man;
Great souls are portions of Eternity;
Each drop of blood that ere through true heart ran
With lofty message, ran for thee and me;
For God's law, since the starry song began,
Hath been, and still forevermore must be,
That every deed which shall outlast Time's span
Must goad the soul to be erect and free;
Slave is no word of deathless lineage sprung—
Too many noble souls have thought and died,
Too many mighty poets lived and sung,
And our good Saxon, from lips purified
With martyr fire, throughout the world hath rung
Too long to have God's holy cause denied.

—James Russell Lowell.

During the coming winter the Hon. Thomas B. Reed, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, will be a frequent contributor to "The Saturday Evening Post," of Philadelphia. Mr. Reed's papers will, in the main, deal with national affairs, and will form a most important and interesting contribution to the history of American politics. Mr. Reed's first article, unlike those to follow, crosses the Atlantic for its subject and tells how the procedure of French law courts, and especially those involved in the Dreyfus case, impresses an American lawyer. This paper, entitled "Paris and French Justice," will appear in "The Saturday Evening Post" of October 7th.

CHARLES SUMNER'S COURAGE.

Colonel Hinton, in the "New Voice," prints a story of Charles Sumner, which proves that a man of peace may be also a man of abundant courage and presence of mind. The incident took place in Washington many years ago.

"Don't be alarmed, ladies!" said a tall, distinguished-looking gentleman.

The voice was one that had often aroused the Senate—deep, mellow, penetrating. The two ladies and the person addressing them were riding in a "bobtail" car—as the shaky little conveyances of that day, drawn by one mule or a raw-boned horse, were called. The car was descending the steep hill south of the Baltimore and Ohio depot.

A moment before the calming advice was given the little car had passed Delaware Avenue and was jogging along on the "down grade." A furious rattle in the rear caused the driver to glance back with a scared look, and the three passengers, following his movement, saw plainly enough that he had cause for alarm.

A huge brewery wagon loaded with kegs, which were being fast scattered over the roadway, was bearing down upon the car, dragged by a pair of frightened horses. The driver had already been thrown out, and lay where he had fallen.

The frightened driver of the car was whipping his mule with all his might, in the hope of turning the corner of the avenue before the expected collision. If the car were struck it would certainly be wrecked.

The ladies were silent, but white and trembling. Both of them were known to the gentleman, who rose with haste, but not without dignity. Senator Charles Sumner, gravely handsome, well-dressed, with a white umbrella lined with green silk in his hand, stood in the doorway of the car as he made his last remark.

The hot breath of the maddened horses was felt in the car. The senator stood in the door, with his umbrella extended, as cool and dignified as if he had been addressing the Vice-President before beginning a speech. The heavy pole of the wagon was within six inches of the senator's body. It would be sure to strike him first. Like a flash the umbrella was thrown open before the eyes of the horses. On the instant they swerved in fright, and the car swept around the corner in safety, while one of the animals fell, dragging the other with him, and the wagon was thrown over.

"It's all right, ladies," said the senator, as he sat down. "There really was no occasion for alarm."

For Nervous Headache

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. F. A. ROBERTS, Waterville, Me., says: "It is of great benefit in nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia and neuralgia."

Nearly all can recall that favorite fiction of their childhood, the voyage of Sinbad the sailor into the Indian Sea. They will remember that magnetic rock that rose from the surface of the placid waters. Silently Sinbad's vessel was attracted toward it; silently the bolts were drawn out of the ship's side, one by one, through the subtle attraction of the rock. And when the fated vessel drew so near that every bolt and clamp were unloosed, the whole structure of bulwark, mast and spars tum-to dose, deluge and finally derange your stomach. Ten to one if it cures your trouble, the drugs you have taken will bring on another hardly less serious. Why jump from the frying-pan into the fire?

The Electropoise will cure most diseases without medicine, by simply placing the body in condition to receive oxygen enough to purify and keep in health. We say "most diseases," for the Electropoise will not cure everything; but where it fails to cure it will afford relief that you would not knowingly go without.

The Electropoise makes well and keeps well, prevents as well as cures—used once a day will keep the doctor away.

A DOCTOR WRITES:

"Without a doubt the Electropoise has the gift and power to cure multitudes who without it must surely die, and that, too, in early life, or in the very maturity of strength when their untimely death is most difficult of solution."

A WISE INVESTMENT.

Greensburg, Pa., April 20, 1899.—I have used an Electropoise for four years. I am confident that during that time it has saved me $300 in drugs and doctor's bills.

Yours gratefully, JOHN B. BOTT, C.E.

REV. GILBERT C. MOULSDALE, LL.D.,
WRITES FROM BOONTON, N. J., UNDER DATE OF MARCH 27th, 1899:

"I can bear witness to the curative effects of Electropoise. In December of 1895 I was threatened with complete nervous prostration and was also troubled with Insomnia and Dyspepsia. My case was so serious that some of my friends advised me to quit preaching, at least for a year. I consulted several physicians, one of them an eminent specialist; but nothing seemed to help me. At the time I was suffering most, a friend came to hold services for me and urged me to try the Electropoise, which I did. From that time I ceased taking hypnotics. I grew gradually better; and now I can say I am as well, apparently, as I have ever been. I regard the Electropoise as an instrument of great curative value."

Our 128-page illustrated book will be mailed free upon request to yourself and friends.

Also upon request we will mail a 12-page treatise on rheumatism and its cure.

bled into ruin on the sea, and the sleeping sailors awoke to their drowning agonies. So stands the magnetic rock of worldliness athwart the Christian's path. Its attraction is subtle, silent, slow, but fearfully powerful on every soul that floats within range. Under its enchanting spell bolt after bolt of good resolution, clamp after clamp of Christian obligation, are stealthily drawn out. In an hour he is a wreck. assured, as we give exclusive rights, allow liberal discounts and offer our agents every facility for placing their business on a permanent and profitable basis. Some of our best agents have been with us ten years.

LARGE PROFITS.

The liberal discounts enable each agent to advertise freely and thereby popularize the treatment; thus working up a profitable trade quickly. So few of the instruments sold fail to prove satisfactory that many sales result directly from the recommendation of users to neighbors and friends. This insures easy sales for the active agent.

April 11th, 1899.

DEAR SIR:—

In reply to your favor of the 6th inst., would say that I have sold the Electropoise for four years. Have spent upwards of $500 for advertising. I have devoted a part of my time only to the business and find, that after proper instructions, purchasers are always satisfied with the results. This is gratifying and makes the business a pleasant one and tends to increase sales.

My profits are more than $1,600.00.

Very truly yours,

BOUND FEET.

Feet-binding in China began more than 1,000 years ago. Some say that it originated from the fact that a certain queen had club feet, and all the women of the court wished to imitate her; others, that it was devised by men, so the women would be obliged to remain at home and not gossip with their neighbors. Whatever the original cause, there are probably not less than 120,000,000 girls and women suffering on account of this social custom, which has no connection with the laws or the religion of China. It is only an aristocratic practice, and nothing but the spread of Christianity and the growth of Christian public sentiments, teaching compassion for the weak and sympathy with the suffering, can abolish it. Nothing pains me more while visiting my "special gift" schools than to see the dear little girls with their crippled feet. Foot-binding is begun at about the age of five or six years, after a girl is able to walk well, or she would never learn.

A strip of cotton cloth two inches wide and about two yards long is used. One end is placed beneath the instep, and then carried over the four small toes, drawing them down beneath the foot, while the great toe is left free; then back under the hollow of the foot and around the instep once or twice; then around the heel from the outside to the inside, and then again over the instep and toes, and so on as before. The bandage is frequently tightened, and all the while the instep is forced up and the smaller toes drawn under. The bones of the foot are slowly bent and forced into an ugly mass up in front of the ankle. The ball of the great toe comes back against the heel. Thus only the heel and great toe go into the little shoe. For the first year or two the girl suffers constant pain, although many devices are used to try to relieve the agony. Through the long summer days, instead of romping and enjoying the fresh air and sports with her brother, the poor little girl will lie restless with fever upon her couch, and when the cold nights of winter come she is afraid to wrap her limbs in warm covering lest the suffering become more intense.

If the girl is not betrothed until she is ten or more years of age, the first question, is "What is the length of her feet?" The small-footed ladies of China hobble and limp along about as others would walking on their heels, supporting themselves by placing a hand on a child's shoulder or by means of a strong staff. "Their movements are as the willows," and "their feet as the golden lily," sings the Chinese poet.

TN your experience with White Lead have you ever been troubled with cracked, pulled or alligatored surfaces, or have you ever heard of such trouble in the use of White Lead?

Never; and these conditions were never known until the introduction of zinc white, "combination lead," and ready-mixed paints, the two last composed largely of zinc, barytes, whiting, etc., very little lead, if any.

The De Laval Separator Co. has just issued a handsomely designed and well-prepared booklet on the subject of "Keeping Cows for Profit." It treats of dairying as a manufacturing business and discusses its problems from the standpoint that every dairy farmer is just as much a business man as though engaged in any other manufacturing or commercial undertaking. The front cover shows a lithographed milking scene, and the back cover a cut of the Jersey cow, Ida Marigold, which received First Prize at the Chicago Exposition. It will be sent free to any one requesting it. Address the De Laval Separator Co., 74 Cortlandt St., New York.

STEVENSON'S VIVID IMPRESSIONS OF THE LEPER COLONY.

I have seen sights that cannot be told, and heard stories that cannot be repeated; yet I never admired my poor race so much, nor (strange as it may seem) loved life more than in the settlement. A horror of moral beauty broods over the place: that's like bad Victor Hugo, but it is the only way I can express the sense that lived with me all these days. And this, even though it was in great part Catholic, and my sympathies flew never with so much difficulty as towards Catholic virtues. The pass-book kept with heaven stirs me to anger and laughter. One of the sisters calls the place "the ticket office to heaven." Well, what is the odds? They do their darg, and do it with kindness and efficiency incredible; and we must take folks' virtues as we find them, and love weaknesses, and worse, perhaps, I heard fully, I think only the more. It was a European peasant—dirty, bigoted, untruthful, unwise, tricky, but superb with generosity, residual candor and fundamental good humor; convince him he had done wrong (it might take hours of insult) and he would undo what he had done and like his corrector better. A man with all the grime and paltriness of mankind, but a saint and hero all the more for that. The place as regards scenery is grand, gloomy and bleak. Mighty mountain walls descending sheer along the whole face of the island into a sea unusually deep; the front of the mountain ivied and furred with clinging forest, one iridescent cliff—about half-way from east to west, the low, bare stony promontory edged in between the cliff and the ocean; the two little towns (Kalawao and Kalaupapa) seated on either side of it, as bare almost as bathing machines upon a beach; and the population—gorgons and chimæras dire. All this tear of the nerves, I bore admirably; and the day after I got away, rode twenty miles along the opposite coast and up into the mountains; they call it twenty, I am doubtful of the figures.—From "The Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson," in the October "Century."

A CHARITABLE VIEW.

The love which radiated from the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Pennefather, founders of the famous Mildmay Missions of London, England, was the love which "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

An early incident illustrated this trend of mind and heart in Mrs. Pennefather even in her early childhood. A bee had stung her badly; but she ran to her mother exclaiming, "The bee has kissed me too hard!" She never thought of the bee as angry or hurtful; and this feeling pervaded her conceptions of men and women who spoke or acted injuriously, while at the same time she maintained clear and decided views of truth and deplored error.

Edwin Markham's most recent poem, "The Muse of Brotherhood," is one of the few really great poems that the closing years of the century have produced. In it Mr. Markham voices a lofty optimism that is at once more impressive and more convincing than the notes of hopelessness and despair that characterize "The Man with the Hoe." At the same time he nobly sets forth the principles of that universal brotherhood which says:

"My love is higher than heavens where Taurus wheels,
My love is deeper than the pillared skies:
High as that peak in Heaven where Milton kneels,
Deep as that grave in Hell where Cæsar lies."

"The Muse of Brotherhood" will appear exclusively in "The Saturday Evening Post," of Philadelphia, in its issue of October 21st.

IT'S A SERIOUS MATTER

To assure a Dyspeptic that he can be cured. He already feels despondent and another disappointment would be cruel.

Well, we accept the responsibility!

Mason's Yellow Tablets will cure this dreadful disorder. We say it with all the positiveness of a most decided experience.

These Tablets are prepared from a formula that made the physician famous who used them.

Ask for Mason's Health Defenders, 30 Tablets 10c., all druggists, or mailed for price by H. T. Mason Chemical Co., 515 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

Three Months' Free Subscription

In order to introduce "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" into homes where the paper is not already taken we will send it to new subscribers from the date the subscription is received to the end of 1900, for only $1.50, the regular yearly subscription price.

Every one accepting this offer will thus receive "The American Friend" free for the remainder of this year. Those who send promptly will get all the issues from the present number on. Copies of every issue from the Tenth month Fifth inclusive will be sent until exhausted.

"The American Friend" is the only weekly publication among Friends which represents the entire denomination from Atlantic to Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico. Through it alone can Friends keep themselves acquainted with the work of the denomination; to those who would keep abreast of the movements of the church it is absolutely indispensable.

It gives in its fifty-two issues each year a collection of articles from the best writers in our denomination, and many valuable papers from Christian thinkers of other branches of the Church. It treats in a broad and liberal spirit the great questions now before the Church, and it stands for every great moral reform which would make man freer and more permanently happy. It is not controversial, but illuminative and constructive. It is an exponent of applied Christianity. Christian Endeavorers cannot afford to miss its valuable department for this branch of the Church. Bible Classes will find much profit from its study of the International Lesson. It is also a newspaper, giving a general view of the home and foreign mission work, accounts of special meetings and the movement of workers, as well as full reports of all Yearly Meetings.

With the present offer to send the paper free to the end of this year, we should secure at least one thousand new subscriptions before the first of 1900. If every one of our present subscribers would get only one new subscriber in this way, we should have over 6500 more subscribers, and the influence of "The American Friend" would be doubled. Let all who see this notice call the attention of their friends to its importance. Let the subject be mentioned in meetings everywhere, and let an effort be made generally to extend the sphere of influence of "The American Friend." Sample copies will be sent to every one desiring them.

Remember: we will send "THE AMERICAN FRIEND" until First month 1st, 1901, for only $1.50.

“TO ME TO LIVE IS CHRIST.”

The time will come when we shall ask ourselves why we ever crushed this infinite substance of our life within these narrow bounds, and centered that which lasts forever on what must pass away. In the perspective of eternity all lives will seem poor, and small, and lost, and self-condemned beside a life for Christ. There will be plenty then to gather round the Cross. But who will do it now? Who will do it now? There are plenty men to die for him, there are plenty to spend eternity with Christ; but where is the man who will LIVE for Christ? Death and Eternity in their place. Christ wants LIVES. No fear about death being gain if we have lived for Christ. So let it be. “To me to live is Christ.” There is but one alternative—the putting on of Christ; Paul’s alternative, the discovery of Christ. We have all in some sense, indeed, already made the discovery of Christ. We may be as near it now as Paul when he left Jerusalem. There was no notice given that he was to change masters. The new Master simply crossed his path one day, and the great change was come. How often has he crossed our path?

REST.

Sweet is the pleasure
Itself cannot spoil!
Is not true leisure
One with true toil?

Thou that wouldst taste it,
Still do thy best;
Use it, not waste it,
Else 'tis no rest.

Wouldst behold beauty
Near thee, all round?
Only hath duty,
Such a sight found.

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to its sphere.

'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear without strife,
Fleeing to ocean
After its life.

Deeper devotion
Nowhere hath knelt;
Fuller emotion
Heart never felt.

'Tis loving and serving
The Highest and Best!
'Tis onwards! unswerving,
And that is true rest.

IS CHRISTIANITY LOSING ITS HOLD ?

WE have recently seen a most pessimistic statement of the religious condition in the great American cities. The writer of it thinks that Christianity is fast losing its hold on the mass of our citizens and that we are approaching a condition of empty churches and worshipless people. It is a fact that it is no longer an easy matter for the churches to reach and hold the people either in cities or in rural districts. There are now numberless attractions which enter into competition with religious meetings and services on the First day of the week, and the problem of present day Christianity is how to attract men to eternal things, when they are everywhere being drawn to seek the pleasures and enjoyments of the hour. Once the religious meeting was the only thing there was to go to on the "Lord's day"; now it is one thing among a multitude of things. Once it was as much expected that respectable people would go to church as that they would take their mid-day meal; now the question is asked in the morning: "how shall we spend the day?" Most persons no longer go to religious meetings as a custom, or from a habit, and it is undoubtedly getting harder and harder to sustain and support a traditional religion, a perfunctory kind of Christianity. There are too many outside attractions for wide-awake men and women, dowered with human nature, to care for chopped straw and luke-warm milk of doctrine. The time was that church-goers sat solemnly through a sermon two "hour-glasses" long and admired the argument which for the hundredth time proved some pet doctrine, but one might as well try to popularize the old stage coach as to revive the taste for such preaching. A new order of things has come and Christians must deal with this age—not with the past ones.

But we believe that there never was an age in Christian history when men and women generally were more responsive to vital, spiritual, heart-reaching messages than to-day. The church where souls are fed is always full. The religious book that speaks to the hearts and needs of men has a sale out of all proportion to other books. The minister who speaks for God and whose message deals with living issues, and who makes men SEE SPIRITUAL REALITIES does not complain of empty seats and does not groan over the waning power of Christianity. The real demand is for a vital interpretation of Christianity—one that makes its power felt—and this cannot come through men who are bound up in theories and traditions. It must come through men who have got back of “beggarly elements” and “rudiments” and “mint and anise,” back to the living Christ who quickens them and moves in them and proves His power through them as of old, through Paul and John. We talk of Christianity losing its hold and its power! Why, Christianity has not yet been fairly tried. Let but ten men in one of our great cities get the real apostolic kind of Christianity—the kind that demonstrates itself—and the city would be stirred to its very limits. A little boy said to us the other day, “Father, is the disease of being possessed with the devil catching?” Alas, it is; but the condition of being filled with the Holy Spirit and of being empowered by Christ is also catching, and when a man is in the life, he sets in motion spiritual forces which never cease.

THE MINISTRY OF YOUNG FRIENDS.

HARDLY anything is more striking in the early history of the Friends than the fact that most of the ministers who went over the counties of England and won multitudes of converts to the new faith were under twenty-five years of age when they began the work. George Fox himself began his public ministry at 22, though he had for three years previous been traveling about questioning and seeking and having “openings.” James Parnell, who suffered martyrdom in Colchester prison at the age of 19, had already been instrumental in gathering in thousands. The following names and ages will show what a band of youth co-operated with the earnest, fearless, glowing young leader:

George Harrison	23 to 26 years old.
Edward Burrough	17 to 27 “
George Whitehead	17 to 87 “
William Caton	17 to 29 “
Benjamin Holme	14 to 57 “
Ellis Lewis	13 to 87 “
Thomas Robinson, Jr.	20 to 23 “
Isaac Alexander	17 to 25 “
Jonathan Burnyeat	12 to 22 “
Elizabeth Huntington	20 to 22 “
Ambrose Legge	21 to 70 “
Josiah Cole	23 to 35 “
John Audland	24 to 34 “
Richard Davies	20 to 73 “
George Newland	11 to 19 “
Barbara Bevan	16 to 23 “
Elizabeth Rawlinson	16 to 80 “
Thomas Carr	21 to 80 “
Robert Barclay	21 to 41 “
Robert Barclay	22 to 75 “
John Barclay	21 to 42 “
Katharine Storrs	18 to 75 “
Rachel Wilson	18 to 54 “

It was this band of young men and women—from eleven years to twenty-three, when they obeyed their Master's call to be “fishers of men”—who shook nearly every town in England, because they believed with all their soul in their mission, in their message and in their Master, and because they were filled with enthusiasm and holy purpose. “Old men for counsel, young men for war,” is a well-known proverb. The great movements of the world, the new activities which require earnestness and enthusiasm, are generally led by young persons; the slow, wise, conservative work is generally in the hands of men of mature judgment and ripe old age.

A ministry of instruction must, of necessity, come from those who have gathered wisdom and experience, and who have a treasure-house to draw from, but there is at the same time a place for the warm and earnest ministry of young men who have felt the meaning of the new life which has come to them, who have a power of carrying conviction to other hearts. Many of our best ministers to-day have begun in simple and broken words to tell “how great things the Lord had done for them,” and by faithfulness to the light and by equal faithfulness in developing themselves in every possible way, have steadily entered into larger and wider usefulness.

Everything ought to be done by the weighty Friends of a meeting to discover and develop the gifts in the young members. Many a man has found out, after it was too late, that rivers of oil or mines of wealth lay hidden beneath the surface of the fields which he had painfully tilled through his scanty and contracted life. So, too, many a meeting has had within it a young man who might have become a mighty herald of the truth and a powerful instrument for the Master if at the right moment he had been discovered and encouraged and developed. George Fox had an eye for such persons. He saw the possibilities in the bud and he helped the bud unfold. We need, and we always shall need, our mature, wise, constructive ministers, but there is a great place also to-day, as in 1650, for a band of young persons who have living experience, profound conviction, the earnestness and vigor of youth, and at the same time capacity for ceaseless progress and development.

“THE AMERICAN FRIEND” AND POLITICS.

LAST week a representative of one of the candidates for the governorship in Ohio came to Philadelphia for the purpose of inducing THE AMERICAN FRIEND to print a letter written by a Friend known everywhere in America, and urging all Friends in Ohio to vote for this particular candidate. The plan was to have a large issue printed and a copy sent to every Quaker in Ohio, for which a good liberal price would have been paid.

Our answer was that THE AMERICAN FRIEND could enter into no political scheme with any party whatever, and that we could not admit into our pages any document which was written to influence men to vote for a particular party candidate. The editor holds himself perfectly free to speak out on moral issues as he sees them, and he has always done so, regardless of party lines, and this freedom is essential to the mission of the paper. We speak of it now only because we have frequently been charged with bringing politics into the paper, when we were dealing solely, as was our duty, with a moral issue. This position and this policy will be strictly maintained, and no politics as politics will appear.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

At a recent convention, held in New York city, the Christian and Missionary Alliance received pledges to the amount of about $64,000.

The Mennonites are about to establish a mission in India, and have sent two men to explore and select a region in which to locate for work.

The Methodists have now in Japan 60 organized churches and 3,023 members. The number baptized during the eight months from August, 1898, to March, 1899, was 428, the increase over last year being 25.

Dr. Benjamin F. De Costa, of New York, has tendered his resignation from the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He gives as his reason for his resignation the friendly attitude of the Episcopal Church towards modern theology and Biblical criticism.

The one hundred and third annual session of the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States opened in Lancaster, Pa., on the 18th. This is the oldest synod in the United States, and embraces 300 ministers, 100,000 communicant members, and 50,000 unconfirmed members.

Much discussion is indulged in by the English papers, and leaders in religious thought in England, over the Archbishop's late decision, condemning certain ritualistic observances by the clergy. Opinion is largely divided,—some advising loyalty to the Archbishop, and others recommending the clergy to disregard the decision. The "Church Times" supports the clergy in their opposition, while the "Guardian" endorses the Archbishop's decision.

The Evangelical Christians of France are organizing a deliverance of Gospel testimony, and a statement of Protestant principles, for the Exposition, to be held next year. A large hall, to hold 1,500 or 2,000 people, will be provided, to serve as a center of preaching and teaching effort. Lecturers, evangelists and singers, representative of all the churches, will combine to place the Gospel before the millions who will visit Paris from all points of the compass.

At the time of the recent enforcement of the new treaty rights of Japan over foreign residents within her borders, an injunction was issued by the chief vicar or primate of the Buddhists of Japan urging upon the lesser clergy and the laity strict obedience to the new spirit of liberty of conscience within the empire, and abstention from all resistance to foreigners engaged in trade or religious propaganda. A similar injunction was issued by the chief prelate of the Shingon sect of Buddhists.

MOHONK INDIAN CONFERENCE.

BY JAMES T. SHINN.

The seventeenth annual Conference of the Friends of the Indian was held at Lake Mohonk Mountain House, Tenth month 11th to 13th, by invitation of Albert K. Smiley and wife. One hundred and twenty-two members were present, accepting the generous hospitality of the hosts. Never were the mountains clad in a more gorgeous garb than in these beautiful Indian Summer days, and the new parlor, which seats four hundred people, was furnished in exquisite taste.

At the conclusion of the usual morning service of prayer and praise, the Conference was called to order, A. K. Smiley nominating Dr. Merrill E. Gates as chairman, three secretaries, a treasurer, editor and business committee. A resolution of regret at the absence of Mrs. Smiley, on account of ill health, was telegraphed to her. The committee appointed last year to prepare a scheme adapted to carry out the policy outlined in the platform, made a report through its chairman, Philip C. Garrett. It was discussed at length by General Eaton, Dr. Frissell, Miss Collins, Senator Dawes, Howard M. Jenkins, General Whitteley, Herbert Welsh and others familiar with the question, and finally referred back to the committee for modification. As amended it will be found further on.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, William A. Jones, of Washington, gave some valuable statistics. There are in care of the government 268 contract boarding schools and 42 day schools, and there are over 1,000 mission schools. An enrollment of 24,987 scholars shows an increase of 983 over last year, while the value of the school plants is estimated at $3,500,000. We think that the reservation system is wrong in principle and practice; that the lands should be surveyed and allotted in severalty, and that rations as now served are a curse to the Indians, tending to pauperize them, and should be cut down as soon as possible.

A most interesting feature of the Conference was news from the field. Miss Sybil Carter described her efforts to find work for the Indians, establishing eight schools where lace making is taught to women, and building a kiln in which to glaze pottery made by the men. The latter exhausted the $1,500 subscribed last year, and more was needed to carry on the work. In a few minutes, under the generalship of A. K. Smiley, $2,000 were pledged.

Darwin R. James reported that the Crow Indians were progressing in agriculture; had raised fine wheat; had built a flour mill, sold $1,000 worth of hay, and were growing toward self-support.

The advance in education among the Sioux was referred to by Herbert Welsh, who commended the government schools, but condemned the issuing of rations, which tended to lessen their efforts for self-support. Miss Collins, Chairman Gates, Dr. Frissell and others also gave details of the work on various reservations.

Interesting addresses were given by H. B. Peairs, of Haskell Institute, Kansas; Mr. Standing, of Carlisle; Rev. Mr. Wellman, of Oklahoma; Miss Reel, who succeeded Dr. Hailmann as Superintendent of Indian Schools; Dr. Gates, chairman, and Rev. Mr. Wright, a Choctaw Indian. Religion, education and work were advocated, the necessity of earnest missionaries and Christian field matrons on the reservations duly emphasized, the policy of continuing the system for awhile, but the early abandonment of it, advised, and the pauperizing effect of issuing rations dwelt upon.

At the last session the report of the committee, which had been referred again to it, was presented and adopted, and its conclusions are given in the following summary, in place of the platform which has heretofore been issued as the "sense of the meeting":

1. Abolishing the Indian agencies as rapidly as possible, and putting the Indians thereof who are not ready to be thrown wholly on their own resources in the care of the superintendent of the agency school. Seventeen agencies are suggested which might soon be abolished.

2. The complete abandonment of the distribution of rations and annuities to the Indians by some process consistent with justice and wisely adapted to the conditions of the various tribes.

3. The placing of Indian agents in the classified list, thereby relieving the appointing officer from the pressure of politicians in this respect.

4. Enlarging the powers of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, so that he may no longer be held responsible for that which he cannot control.

5. The defence of the rights of allotted Indians, especially by the registration of family and individual names, and the protection of rights of inheritance.

6. The continued breaking up of reservations by allotment of land in severalty, yet not in anticipation of the ability of the Indians to support themselves. We especially direct attention to the New York Indians as ripe for allotment.

7. The prohibition of the taking of Indians from their reservation for the purposes of perpetuating, by public exhibition, the conditions of barbarism.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"COMMUNION."

"I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3: 20.

Are we, dear friends, in every deed "communing,"

When reverently before our God we meet?

And do we realize His precious promise

Fulfilled to us in measure full and sweet?

Still at each heart's door Christ awaiteth, knocking,

To those who open when they hear His voice,

He cometh in and giveth rich provision,—

Do we, as guests at that blest feast, rejoice?

Are we partakers of the benefaction

His broken body and shed blood obtained?

And do our risen lives through His sustaining

Show forth the blessing which His death hath gained?

O Lord of life! in condescending mercy,

Into new life and love our spirits warm,

Lest we,—grown heedless to Thy gentle knocking,—

Neglect the substance, who disuse the form.

S. J. T.

THE BEGINNING AND PROGRESS OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

BY BISHOP H. W. WARREN.

Paul knew as much of the power of the spiritual life, of its inspiration for bi-continental work, and of its third heaven joys as any man. He devotes the first part of his Epistle to the Ephesians to a delineation of its height and excellencies, declaring that our present powers are not sufficient to see them, and that the eyes of one's understanding must be supernaturally enlightened to know the riches of the glory of God's inheritance in His saints. He surpasses all philosophers and optimists and poets in depicting ideals and possibilities for men, and then, at the close of the third chapter, carefully details in order the steps by which this life is attained.

First, since he expects results that are clearly superhuman, he prays that his Ephesians may be strengthened with might by God's Spirit in the inner man. He has before told us that the mighty working of the same power that raised Jesus from the dead and set Him on high, above every name, the same power is ready to be exercised to usward. We are mocked by no ideals without the power of achievement.

This is God's first dealing with every soul, and before conversion. Conversion is to result in something higher than God Himself can create—something as great as God and man together can make. There is to be co-operation. The process is wholly natural and scientific. The babe, to become a man, must be strengthened in the inner man by food thousands of times; to become a scholar, must have mind strengthened from without as often. How different the man, strengthened by God, is from the weakness of himself. Peter alone cannot face the truth in the lips of a servant girl; strengthened of God, he can face all Jerusalem. Christ told this weak man that when he was converted he should not only have strength for himself, but enough to strengthen his brethren.

This matter can be experimented on by any one in regard to any daily duty or personal work, but especially it is meant to prepare one for the next step of spiritual life, viz: exercising faith enough to have Christ dwell in the heart. Faith is too great an act to be done alone, without a previous strengthening by the Spirit. It is a kind of suicide, a total, irreversible, affectionate surrender of one's self to God. The beggar must dive out of the realm of life into that of death if he would rise a prince with his pearl of great price.

This surrender is not a passive, but an active one. It is not a surrender of an empty fort, but of all the forces inside, to be immediately enlisted and used to the utmost of their power on the other side. This is what makes faith so hard and out of reach of one's self unless aided by divine power. It may be easy for a man to say, "I give up, I will cease fighting against God," but the hard thing is to heartily enlist on the other side, put on the uniform, face about, look up to another flag and charge against the side he lately served. But Paul knew what he was advising his Ephesian brethren; for he was directing them according to his own experience. When he began his spiritual life he did not wait to say, "I surrender," but the first word was, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" He offered his services and awaited orders.

It is only when the soul is God's own, in all its possible activities, that He comes into it. But He is so eager to come that He is willing and anxious to do the necessary preliminary work of strengthening its powers.

After the indwelling of Christ in the heart the subsequent work will be easy, and will have no unexpected features except those of richness and power.

It is not possible to restate the next stage of development in words of equal strength. But two things compel attention. First, that the thorough comprehension of the length, breadth, depth and height of the love of Christ passes all knowledge received by other faculties. Since God's essence is love (and not knowledge or science), of course therein will be the highest possible life. Other ranges of life are created, and important—e. g., physical, intellectual, volitional; but the affectional is highest. This joins man to God. He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in Him.

Oh, 'tis delight without alloy,

Jesus, to hear Thy name.

My spirit leaps with inward joy,

I feel the sacred flame.

The second thing that compels attention is the due order of development of the various faculties. It should be love first, knowledge, etc., afterwards. After comprehending the love of Christ we may be filled in every other faculty with all the fulness of God. Knowledge may grow from more to more, beauty bloom, melody flow, and God may work in us to will, because we, being in His likeness in essential being, all His attributes may be added to the limit of our capacity. No one can be filled in other faculties with all the fulness of God till he has been made perfect in love.

Paul's mind is too methodical to proceed in any other order than the right one. The alphabet precedes the reading of words, the four simples of arithmetic precede algebra. John, fallen as dead at the feet of the resurrected Christ, must feel the strengthening right hand lifting him up before he can be taught the meaning of the expressive symbols of the spirit world. And every man must, before conversion, be strengthened with might in the inner man in order to exercise faith enough to bring Christ's indwelling in the heart, in order that he may fully comprehend with that strengthened heart a love that is beyond the knowledge of any other faculties, in order that then the filling of all other faculties may follow.

A LETTER FROM INDIA.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND :

Dear Friend:—Since I last wrote to you, my wife and I have had once more to remove, this time from Sohagpur to Hoshangabad, to take up the work which for twenty years has been in charge of the late Samuel Baker, of whose sudden death, when preaching in the villages of this district, I sent you an account in February last.

The work at Hoshangabad is larger and more varied than at most of our smaller stations, but is shared by a larger number of missionaries, having the oversight of the educational, industrial and orphanage work. Unfortunately, J. D. Maynard, B.A., the principal of the High School, who has general charge of all the vernacular schools also, has been so ill with typhoid and malarial fever that he has been compelled to go home for a change, which has thrown the care of the schools on my shoulders, in addition to the general evangelistic work.

Hoshangabad being the center of the district of that name, and also the residence of the Commissioner of the Nerbudda Division, has a much larger population and a more highly educated class of residents than either of the towns we have previously worked in. There are many native officials, subordinate judges, lawyers and pleaders, etc., who speak English, a few of whom are graduates of European Universities, who are rather difficult to work amongst and less accessible than the poorer classes.

Our senior mission helper and Elder of the meeting here, Nathu Lal, works very diligently amongst these better-class residents of Hoshangabad and is generally highly respected.

Our High School, with its education carried on in English, is one of the ways by which we seek to reach them, beside calling at their houses, and I am about to open a central tract depot, with a view to selling more English Christian literature, in addition to the vernacular tracts and Bibles.

During the last few months we have very much broadened our basis of membership, so as to admit practically all our well-behaved Christian community, who have a fair knowledge of Scripture truth and desire to belong to our body, into full membership.

Monthly meetings have been established at all our principal mission stations, to whom representatives can be sent by the smaller congregations scattered round in each of which a local Committee of Oversight, or

"panchayat," as it is called, is appointed, according to well-established Hindu custom. This will give us an adult membership of over five hundred and an additional community, probably over one thousand strong, of children and adherents. We are exceedingly encouraged by the result of this action in the few weeks it has been in operation. The Hindustan Church members have vigorously taken up the evangelistic and disciplinary work of the church, and we European members have as far as possible retired from active direction of the church business, simply advising where our wider experience of the Society's rules and practices seemed to make it advisable. Left to themselves, they have at once secured an increased income from collections and a reduced expenditure. The report of the Elders and Overseers and local panchayat at last monthly meeting was very interesting, and perhaps amusing, to a European. One lady member had been fined eight annas for defamation, whilst the lady bringing the complaint was herself fined half that amount for having discussed the question in an unbecoming manner outside the former's residence on the public thoroughfare. Two annas had been collected from a weaver who had taken some strong drink, and four from another Friend and his wife who had quarreled and called each other names in the street before Hindus and Mohammedans. It was interesting to note that all the parties expressed repentance and fully acquiesced in the panchayat's decision. They have full liberty and opportunity to appeal to the monthly meeting if they think the verdict unfair or the fine excessive.

It will be seen from this that our members are not the traditionary Quakers of London or Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, brought up with "guarded education," but simply units from that "common people" who heard our Lord and Saviour gladly in the days of His earthly ministry, and who have been also in India the first to respond to His loving invitation, when proclaimed in the streets and market places by the missionaries from a far-off land.

Our members are, as a whole, intensely poor. We have only two whose income is over £30 sterling per annum, and they are counted rich men. Some of the village people scarcely earn $1.50 a month and are always on the verge of starvation.

We have famine staring us in the face again this autumn. Food stuffs have risen one hundred per cent. in a few months, and there has been in the Central Provinces no real recovery from the famine of 1896-7, so that no one has anything to fall back upon. Less than half the usual quantity of rain has fallen, and one or two wells that I have never known dry before have failed, and this is our "rainy season." But the distress in some parts of India is still greater than with us, and if we have any showers it may still be possible to sow wheat, which the farmers were despairing of doing. We have had one or two interesting cases of isolated accessions from Hinduism, but not many families lately, as was the case four or five years back.

Yours sincerely,

JOSEPH TAYLOR.

THE FOREIGN MISSION WORK OF ENGLISH FRIENDS.

BY M. M. BINFORD.

The Friends' Foreign Mission Association of London Yearly Meeting annually have 79 missionaries in the foreign field, and 235 native preachers, teachers and Bible women. There are 13 organized Friends' Churches and 91 members, exclusive of the work in Madagascar, where there are 187 churches and 2,639 members. One hundred and fifty-nine members were added by confession during 1898, and the total number of adherents is 14,297. No statistics are given from Madagascar as to the number of accessions to membership. Eleven boarding and high schools and 247 other schools have a total of 20,869 under instruction, and 54 of these united with the church during the year. This shows nearly 33 per cent. of the accessions to have come from the schools—quite an argument in favor of schools as an evangelizing agency. There are 15 hospitals and dispensaries, where 30,063 patients were treated last year. The total expense of all this work for last year, including cost of administration, was £20,620, 19s, 8d, which amounts to considerably more than one pound sterling per member for London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, or about $5.12. Income from funds invested and legacies reduce this amount, however, by £3,784, thus reducing the amount per capita to $4.18 actual contributions. The average per member from Dublin Yearly Meeting appears to be considerably less than that of London Yearly Meeting, so that the per capita of actual contributions for the latter is probably in excess of $5.

In India 750 orphans are under the care of Friends. Political matters have been quiet in Madagascar, and the work of the Friends has progressed without interruption. Church buildings have been rebuilt and congregations are resuming their former work. The proclamation of religious liberty has served rather to aid in weeding out false professions of religion.

In China the work has been hindered by political events and rebellions, and the people have shown more open opposition. Five persons have been received into membership.

The industrial work in India is still continued. It does not prove wholly self-supporting, and the reports indicate that the boys who have the opportunity for training do not always seem appreciative. But it seems worth the time and labor to persevere with this department. It appears from the reports that there are two grades of membership; that the above item of 159 persons who have made satisfactory confession of faith does not mean actual full membership in the Society of Friends, but only a sort of probationary membership.

The work in Madagascar in connection with the London Missionary Society has always been on another basis, and none of the churches there are counted as really Friends' Meetings. This probably would not suit many of the Foreign Mission Boards among American Friends, but we must none the less appreciate the great work English Friends have done in that country. So far as immediate success is concerned, American Friends have probably better fields among the Indians, in Spanish-American countries, and Jamaica, than those chosen by our English brethren, but we fall far short of them in the energy with which we prosecute our work.

COMMUNICATION.

Office of Millbrook "Round Table,"
Millbrook, N. Y., Tenth month 16th, 1899.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND :

Dear Friend: I regret very much that THE AMERICAN FRIEND thought it necessary to give space to the attack on Dr. Cadman by J. Walter Malone, Tenth month 5th. Dr. Cadman had charge of a church in this village for a year. He often visited this office; I have published many articles of his writings, and have heard him preach frequently. I am thoroughly convinced of his orthodoxy on all essential points, and of his usefulness as a minister. Of the four hundred Methodist ministers who heard the address referred to, I have not heard that one found fault. It was the sensational reports in the yellow journals of New York that made the trouble. In justice to Dr. Cadman, I think this statement should be made public.

Very truly yours,
W. L. SWIFT.

Lesson VI.

Eleventh Month 5, 1899.

NEHEMIAH'S PRAYER.

Neh. 1: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day. Neh. 1: 11.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Tenth mo. 30.—Nehemiah's prayer. Neh. 1.
Third-day, Tenth mo. 31.—The request granted. Neh. 2: 1-11.
Fourth-day, Eleventh mo. 1.—A good resolve. Neh. 2: 12-20.
Fifth-day, Eleventh mo. 2.—Confession and forgiveness. Lev. 26: 40-46.
Sixth-day Eleventh mo. 3.—Precious promises. Deut. 30: 1-10.
Seventh-day, Eleventh mo. 4.—Solomon's prayer. 1 Kings 8: 46-53.
First-day, Eleventh mo. 5.—Turn us, O Lord. Psalm 80.

As was stated in the notes on the book of Ezra, Ezra and Nehemiah always appeared in the Hebrew Scriptures as one book until the sixteenth century of our era. In the Christian Church the division is first mentioned in the fourth century, in which century also the title Nehemiah is given to the second book. The titles given in the English Bibles were first and second Esdras until the sixteenth century, when Nehemiah was applied to the second. The period covered by both books is about a century (538-432 B.C.). The narrative is not continuous. In one case, between chapters 6 and 7, an interval of fifty-eight years is passed over practically in silence. There are but two important epochs treated of with any fulness: (1) Return from the captivity and the rebuilding of the Temple; (2) Reforms of Ezra and the rule of Nehemiah. It is with the latter epoch that the present lesson is concerned.

The time of the events related in the lesson is from about December, 445, to March, 444, B.C.

1. "The words." "History" margin of Revised Version. The object apparently being to call the reader's attention to the fact that the words which follow are those of Nehemiah himself. It is evident from a study of the whole book that it is the work of a compiler who lived long after Nehemiah, but who used the exact words of Nehemiah in certain parts of the work. In other parts the narrative is in the third person. (See Neh. 7:73, last clause, to 12:30, Revised Version.) Nehemiah, the son of Hachaliah." This is to distinguish him from other men of the same name. (See Ezra 2:2; Neh. 3: 16.) "Chislen." "Chisler." Revised Version. Probably the month corresponding to our latter half of November and the first half of December. There is an apparent conflict between this verse and chapter 2: 1, where events, which are stated to follow the events of chapter 1, are placed in Nisan of the twentieth year of Artaxerxes. Nisan is the first month of the year and Chisler the ninth, thus making the events of Chisler, the ninth month, precede the events of Nisan, the first month. Several explanations have been given of the difficulty—none wholly satisfactory. It may be the error of some scribe. "Shushan." Susa, the winter residence of the Persian kings. We are told in verse 11 that Nehemiah was the king's cupbearer. It was the duty of those in this position to taste the wine before it was drunk by the king, in order to prevent the poisoning of the king's wine, and if poisoned to show the fact before the king partook of the wine. It was a dangerous office, and only given to those who were believed to be wholly trustworthy.

2. "Hanani." Brother of Nehemiah. It is clear from 7: 2 that he word is used either in the narrow sense, or as indicating a near blood relative. "Came." As the context implies, from Jerusalem. "I asked them." Josephus says Nehemiah heard them speaking in Hebrew, and that moved him to speak to them. "The Jews," etc. He means the Jews in Judea in distinction from those who had remained in Babylon and Persia. It will be noticed that Nehemiah asked concerning the people, and concerning the city. He says nothing about the Temple.

3. "The remnant." The Jews in Judea. "Great affliction and reproach." Compare Neh. 2: 17; 4: 2, 3, and Psal. 79: 4-9; 89: 38-46. "Broken down." It seems probable that some recent action is referred to. Probably it was an attack by the neighboring people. The walls had doubtless been partially rebuilt by the returned captives, as it seems very unlikely that Jerusalem had been without walls for eighty years.

4. The effect of what he heard was to overwhelm Nehemiah with grief. He followed the usual oriental customs in the outward expression of grief; he did more, he "prayed" to the "God of heaven." It was four months before he had the interview with the king (chapter 2), and the inference is that his mourning was protracted this long.

5. "I beseech." The strongest kind of an intercessory word. "Great and terrible God." Compare Deut. 7: 21; Psa. 47: 3; 68: 35, etc. "That keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments." Revised Version. Compare Deut. 7: 9; also Dan. 9: 4. Compare, also, John 14: 15.

6. "Now, day and night." "At this time day and night." Revised Version. The "certain days" of verse 4. "Confess." True, penitent prayer almost always begins with confession, as the true prayer of the believer should begin with thanksgiving. "Both I and my father's house." He identifies himself with his brethren.

7. "We have dealt very corruptly against thee." Nehemiah seems to include the whole history of his people. He makes their apostacy a sin against God personally. Compare Luke 15: 18. "Commandments, statutes, judgments." The whole of the law.

8, 9. "Remember—the word." As not unfrequently in the Bible, there is here no direct quotation. The passage refers to a general statement of what was said. See Lev. 26: 33; Deut. 4: 27, for the threat of dispersion; also Jer. 9: 16. For promise of restoration, Deut. 4: 27; 28: 64. For the whole passage compare Deut. 30: 1-5. "Outcasts." Compare Is. 56: 8. "And will bring them." Ezek. 34: 13. "To set my name there." "To cause my name to dwell there." Revised Version. That is, in Jerusalem.

10. This verse seems to refer back to verse 6. They had confessed; they had returned, and could now claim his promise. "Redeemed." This probably refers back to the deliverance from Egypt—the great deliverance of the people.

11. "Who delight to fear." Revised Version. Compare Ps. 2: 11; 22: 23. "This day." It was a prayer for present blessings. "This man." The king.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."
2. "More things are wrought by prayer,
Than this world dreams of."
3. "Pray, and do."

The beauty of work depends upon how we meet it, —whether we arm ourselves each morning to attack it as an enemy that must be vanquished before night-fall, or whether we open our eyes with the sunrise to welcome it as an approaching friend, who will keep us delightful company all day, and who will make us feel at evening that the day was well worth its fatigues.—Lucy Larcom.

A teacher who can arouse a feeling for one single good action, for one single good poem, accomplishes more than he who fills our memory with rows on rows of natural objects, classified with name and form.—Goethe.

The giving of new names is not uncommon in the Bible. For example, Abraham, Sarah, Israel, Boanerges, Peter. Naomi desired to be called Marah, because of the bitter sorrow of her life. In Isaiah 65: 15 we are told how men may even leave their names as a curse to others. In Isaiah 62: 2 the chosen people are promised a new name from Jehovah himself.

The new name expresses a step which has been taken into higher, truer life, and the change of heart and elevation of character connected with such a step. Abram received a new name because he learned to walk before God instead of before men, and to trust Him fully. Jacob was renamed Israel that morning after the angel had wrestled with him, and he had surrendered to God, told out to him his old name as a deceiver and supplanter, and then there came the new name, including the El which was the name of God. Here is the secret of the new name. It really means the impartation of the Divine nature. We can never receive it unless, like Jacob, we surrender to God, come to the end of ourselves and of our Jacob nature, and receive the Divine life instead. "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

The "new name," written on a white stone in Rev. 2: 17, contains a rather obscure allusion. Possibly it is to the Greek custom of giving a pebble engraven with some curious device as a token of friendship, entitling the possessor to a claim of hospitality from him who gave it. Beautiful stories are told of the use of such stones in times of need. He to whom Christ Jesus has given the white stone, graven with the new name, can always boldly urge his claim in every hour of need—for he has the sacred token of an indissoluble friendship. The illustration becomes even more impressive when we remember that the new name implies the transformed character of him who receives it, so that he is really fitted for this friendship.

Practical Applications.—Get, first of all, the new name that the Lord gives. We need transformation, as Jacob did. Our old names are like his, suggestive of guile, pride, deceit! indeed, of all the fruits of the flesh. How blessed it has been for any of us to hear

God say, "Thy name shall be no more Jacob." Then we need the new name that comes by manifested traits of character. Elizabeth Fry, Clara Barton, are names that have come to stand for humanity. Gladstone stands for righteous statesmanship and Christian eloquence. What does our name stand for in the home, the church, the social and business world? Does it stand for indolence, for a quick temper, for wilfulness, for disagreeableness, for neglect of duty? The question is not, how high does it stand on any roll of fame, but what does it stand for just where we are?

It is also a beautiful thought that we learn new names for God. In Hosea it is said, "Thou shalt call me no more Baali, but Ishi,"—that is, not Master, but Husband. One means that we are servants under the yoke; the other, we are lovers, betrothed forever to God. In Rev. 3: 12, the same thought occurs: "I will write upon him my new name." It is indeed blessed to know God by new names. In the undimmed revelation of the future world there will still be larger and larger revelations of Him and new names to learn of Him whose name is above every name.

NEW YORK STATE ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The State convention, recently held at Saratoga, appears to have been one of deep interest. J. Wilbur Chapman was a frequent speaker on themes connected with the deeper spiritual life. Robert E. Speer spoke on missions; President Francis E. Clark, George B. Stewart, and others were prominent speakers. About twenty Friends were present, including Eli Reece, president of New York Yearly Meeting Union, and Sara R. Keates, secretary. H. R. Keates, of Glens Falls, was also present.

MISSIONARY READING COURSE.

We publish this week the second article on the lessons of the new missionary reading course. For further information concerning the lessons, address Gilbert Bowles, of Oskaloosa, Iowa. It is a splendid course, and you cannot do better than to undertake it. Let missionary committees take up the matter and begin the study of missions.

Early Traces.—The first entrance of Christian teaching into China of which we have authentic record, was made by the Nestorian Monks in about the year 505 A.D. There are to be sure some earlier traditions of Christian teachers, but these have left no lasting monuments to their work, either in records or in the lives of the people. The main facts regarding the Nestorian Church in China are gained from an ancient tablet, which now stands imbedded in a brick wall, where it is supposed it was originally placed. Dating from about the year 781, this tablet bears record in substance to the following: The most virtuous Olopine came from Syria to China, in 635 A.D. The sacred books were translated in the imperial libraries; the sovereign investigated the subject in his private apartments, when, becoming deeply impressed with the truth of the religion, he gave special orders for its dissemination."

Later, emperors favored the new faith and caused churches to be built in every province. The truths taught included all the great teachings of Christianity, except the crucifixion and atonement. The lives of the missionaries were consistent with their profession, but Christian truth was somewhat accommodated to Chinese superstition. In later years the church lost all connection with the home church, lost the favor of the emperors, and soon drifted from the purity of Christian faith and practice. To-day only this tablet remains to tell the story of its work.

This, however, helps on the work of the Protestant missionaries in two ways: (1) It proves to the Chinese mind that this is not a new doctrine, and (2) it stands as a continual warning against compromise.

The Jesuits.—The first Roman Catholic to enter China was John of Montecorvino, who labored there from 1292 to 1328. He seems to have gained quite a following among the Mongols, who were then the ruling class, but, with a change of dynasty, his work seems to have been swept away, having taken no permanent hold upon the Chinese heart and life. The next man to gain an entrance to the long-closed doors was Matteo Ricci, who, by perseverance and consummate skill, finally entered the gates of Peking in 1601. Here his learning, his polite bearing and ready tact, together with a judicious distribution of gifts, soon brought him into favor with those in power, and we find him at the head of a large missionary enterprise. His methods, however, were not always above reproach. He did not hesitate to distort the truth in order to gain a hearing, nor to adjust the truths of the gospel to the prejudices of his hearers. In short, any means was good by which he could win favor for the church. After the death of Ricci, however, the imperial favor was soon lost, and in 1724 the propagation of the "Lord of Heaven Sect" was again strictly prohibited. In spite of persecution, however, there were still some 400,000 Catholics in the empire more than a century later.

Protestant Pioneers.—We have thus traced the beginnings of Christian teaching in China. It was reserved for a sturdy Scotchman to lay the foundations of the Protestant church in that vast empire. Robert Morrison had prayed to God that He "would station him in that part of the missionary field where the difficulties were the greatest, and, to all human appearance, the most insurmountable." In 1807 he was sent to China by the London Missionary Society. While on his way a New York shipping agent remarked to him, "And so, Mr. Morrison, you really expect you will make an impression on the idolatry of the great Chinese empire?" "No, sir," was his ready reply; "I expect God will."

On landing at Canton, he adopted, as far as possible, the Chinese methods of life, and set himself about the tremendous task of mastering the language. Great difficulties were to be overcome. He found himself confronted by a language with no sign of an alphabet, but composed of tens of thousands of word pictures. Besides this, it was a crime, punishable by death, for any Chinaman to teach this language to a foreigner, so that his first teacher always carried poison, with which to end his life should he be discovered. Notwithstanding those difficulties he completed his Chinese grammar in 1812, translated the New Testament in 1813, completed the Bible by 1823, and finally brought out his great Chinese dictionary, which was published by the East India Company, at a cost of £15,000. Largely with the salary received for work with this company he founded the Anglo-Chinese College at Malacca. During the last few years of his life Dr. Bridgeman was associated with him in his work, while Mr. and Mrs. Milne had joined him as early as 1813. He died in 1834, after 27 years of devoted missionary service. During all this time he had seen not more than ten conversions, yet in self-sacrifice, in patient toil, in childlike trust in God, he had laid the foundations strong and secure, on which all subsequent missionaries have built.

The Doors Opened.—Much as we deprecate war at all times, and much as we condemn the opium wars, by which the traffic in this most destructive of all drugs was forced by an enlightened nation upon a helpless people, yet it is true that these same wars were the most potent agencies in opening China's doors to Christian teaching. Recognizing this fact, it is also a fact that these wars are to-day a stigma on the name of Britain, and a valid objection to all Christianity in the minds of many intelligent Chinamen. Taking this into account, with the dreadful havoc wrought by opium, it is an open question whether after all they have been a real advantage to the work of the missionary. Be this as it may, the direct result of these wars has been the opening of a territory, inhabited by 400,000,000 of people, to the unlimited preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. This has been accomplished in two stages. The first war (1841-42) culminated in the treaty of Nanking, by which five important ports were opened to foreign residence, while Hong Kong became British territory; the second war ended in the treaty of Tientsin (1858), followed by the Convention of Peking (1860), by which religious toleration and liberty of travel was granted throughout the empire.

Between these two wars occurred the great T'ai P'ing rebellion, which almost succeeded in dethroning the ruling dynasty. This rebellion was headed by a student, Hung Sin Chuen, who had been deeply impressed by the truths contained in a Christian tract, and who, although never himself baptized, gave as his avowed purpose the destruction of all idolatry, and the substitution of the Christian Scriptures for the teaching of Confucius. This rebellion was brought to a close in 1864 through the timely aid of "Chinese"

Gordon. During its progress some seeds of Christian truth were sown. Over a million copies of the New Testament were distributed; Christianity was advertised, although in a bad light, by the position taken by Hung, and last, by no means least, Li Hung Chang, China's greatest statesman, was brought into close touch with General Gordon.

In the opening of China's doors we must not forget the medical missionary. Wars have opened the way for legal residence in the country, but the healing touch of the Christian doctor has opened the way to the hearts of the people. Dr. Peter Parker (1835) was the pioneer of this work. He was followed by Dr. J. K. Mackenzie, whose successful treatment of the wife of Li Hung Chang, led to the opening of the hospital at Tientsin.

Fruits of the Gospel.—A table prepared in 1898 gives the following statistics of mission work in China. In that year there were 2,458 foreign workers in the empire, assisted by 5,071 paid native helpers. These workers man 469 central stations, from which they conduct work at 1,969 out-stations. The Protestant churches of China enroll more than 80,000 members, while more than 34,000 pupils are in attendance upon Christian schools. The contributions of native Christians amount to more than $30,000 annually for the support of the gospel.

When we remember that less than one hundred years ago the first attempt at mastering the language was begun, and that the doors have been opened for missionary work only within the last half century; when we reflect on the antiquity of Chinese literature, religion and culture, and remember with what veneration they look upon the past; when we consider that, unlike Ricci, Protestant missionaries have rigidly adhered to true Christian principles of living with renunciation of all heathen rites and practices; when we look at all the conditions as they are, the above statistics appear nothing short of miraculous. Yet these statistics at best tell only the outward advance of the kingdom of God. As months and even years are often spent in laying the foundation of some large bridge, whose superstructure is built into perfection in a few weeks or days, so the foundations of the Christian church have been laid strong and deep during the past hundred years of work in China. Who can say what the future may not reveal? The thousands who have accepted Christ are only a handful among China's vast millions, but, as a class, they are consistent, self-supporting, and anxious for the spread of the glad tidings which they themselves have received. The darkness of heathenism is being broken through, and all along the eastern horizon are clearly seen streaks of morning light, the sure precursors of the coming dawn.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION OF KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

The open meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society was held in the evening of Tenth month 7th, 1899, at 7.30 p.m.

After a service of song the devotional exercises were led by Willis R. Hotchkiss.

He advocated entire consecration, as we are not our own, but are bought with a price.

The officers elected for this year are: Celia Wood, president, Hesper, Kansas; Prof. Williams, vice-president, Wichita, Kansas; Alvaret Paddock, secretary, Emporia, Kansas; Wm. T. Albertson, treasurer, 1212 Euclid Avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

Celia Wood gave a short address, speaking of the privilege that we may make our work perfect.

We cannot accomplish anything of ourselves; we must have Christ for our companion.

She stated that the Executive Committee have decided to put Robert Norris in the field as superintendent of the work. He then spoke to the meeting. He asked the meeting to raise $75. He called for a period of silent prayer, in which each person might commune with God, and ascertain how much the Lord wished him to give. Slips were then distributed through the audience, which were collected before the close of the meeting. The subscription in cash and pledges amounted to $27.21.

A song, "My Jesus Knows," was then rendered by the Sisters Longstreth.
